Owing to the fact that a few bakers in the city were selling bread at five cents per loaf, the master bakers held a meeting recently to consider the possibility of reducing the price to five cents generally. It was decided, however, that to sell bread for less than six cents would be suicidal policy owing to the high price of flour. The decision of the meeting was expressed by one member present, in the following remark: "Good bread will be six cents and probably more in the future; scallywag bread will be five cents."

Mr. Fotheringham, of the Swan River Creamery Co., is busily engaged installing the plant at Swan River. The lateness of the season will prevent opening as soon as was anticipated, owing to the condition of the roads and inability to do the necessary concrete work under the existing conditions.

Supplies of seeds have been sent to the farmers of Swan River Valley, Manitoba, for the purpose of growing sugar beets which will be tested at a factory in Raymond, Alberta, next year. The valley can grow excellent vegetables of all kinds and the possibility of growing beets for sugar is not questioned. The supply and labor and capital will be a more difficult matter to arrange.

The superintendent of Winnipeg Public Parks, George Champion, has published a letter in a local newspaper for the purpose of stimulating an interest in the development of vegetable growing for private use, in the back-yards of city residences.

F. W. Rowley, representing Underdown & Crichton, the foreign fruit packers, arrived in Winnipeg on May 7, from Chicago. Mr. Rowley was interested in the dried fruit industry for seventeen years in Spain before amalgamating with Underdown & Crichton, and perhaps there is no one more intimate with the industry and the trade. This is his first trip to the West, and already he has "seen the vision" of Canada's great future. Mr. Rowley inspected the local trade in company with W. H. Escott the western resident representative of the company and left last evening for a tour of the western provinces. It is possible that Mr. Rowley will make some interesting real estate investments before he leaves the country by way of Vancouver.

Mr. Hudon, of Hudon-Hebert, Montreal, is in the city placing orders for grocery stock.

CALGARY.

May 11.—The potato shortage is a serious matter in this district. The wage earner, who, to a greater extent than many others, relies upon this staple as an important item of his daily living, finds it expensive to supply his household with potatoes at to-day's ruling price, viz.: 3c per lb. The wholesale price is now $50.00 per ton, and is likely to go to $60.00 per ton in the near future. Supplies in B. C. are about exhausted. One shipment has been brought in from New Zealand, of which the quality is nothing extra, although the retail price is 5c per lb.

A car of new maple syrup and maple sugar arrived last week from Waterloo, Quebec, being the output of the Maple Tree Producers' Association, Limited. The brand is known as the "Pride of Canada." Maple sugar is selling more freely this season than ever before. One reason is that the makers have put it up in very convenient form, viz.: ½ lb. cakes, which retail at 10c per cake. "Pride of Canada" maple syrup is in many of the retail grocery stores here and sells at the following prices: pint bottles 25c, quart bottles 50c, quart tins 50c ½ gallon 80c, gallons $1.50. At these prices this high-class product is within the reach of all and the consumption is increasing from year to year.

VANCOUVER.

May 11.—With a marked advance in the price of oranges, which are now quoted at $3.25 per case, running up from $2.75, there is a decrease in the price of local butter, which now jobs at 30c. retailing at 35c. There is a sympathetic fall in the price of the eastern article, which commands a wholesale price of 26c. Bermuda onions are on the market at 7c per pound, retailing at 10c. There is no difference in the price of potatoes, but with the steady increase in size of the new ones from the south, the use of them is growing.

Oscar Brown, of Oscar Brown & Co., wholesale fruiters, has returned from a trip abroad, extending over several months.

F. R. Stewart, of F. R. Stewart & Co., had quite an accident in Stanley Park on Sunday. He had a party out in his auto, when a runaway team from behind ran into the machine, then stopped. The pole of the rig penetrated the rear of the auto, and one of the ladies of the party, Mrs. Chappell, of Seattle, had her jaw fractured. The others managed to escape.

Strawberries have suffered most from the cold of the winter and the slowness of spring, and as similar conditions have prevailed south of the border, that fruit this year may be quite a luxury. it is not expected from present reports that there will be more than half a crop this year. Commenting on the damage in general, Maxwell Smith, Dominion Fruit Inspector, says: "It is too early yet to estimate the probable output of apples, pears, plums and cherries, but the backward spring though a little disappointing and disagreeable to the average citizen, is favorable to the fruit crop, particularly in the coast district. The buds being retarded in early spring practically insures them against damage by late frosts. The unusually severe winter in the interior of the province made many of the fruit men apprehensive as to the effect on some of the trees in some of the most important fruit-growing centres. Doubtless in a few isolated cases, where irrigation was kept up too late last season, and consequently the growth of the trees continued beyond the safety stage, winter killing the young wood to some extent has occurred. There is no damage of any account reported to the apple trees, and the peach, pear and plum trees have come through much better than expected. In a number of instances, more or less serious damage is reported to the peach buds, which will result in many light crops, and some practically nil. But notwithstanding these instances, a fair amount of peaches will be shipped from the Okanagan valley and other peach-growing districts this year."

At a largely attended social session of the Victoria Council of the United Commercial Travelers, honors were bestowed upon A. R. Kelly, first past councillor, and F. Russell, present past councillor. They were each given a gold ring, on which was engraved the emblem of the order, for the services they rendered the order in the Capital City.

J. H. Menzies has come from Ladysmith to Vancouver to reside, having disposed of the whole of his stock of merchandise to Blair & Adam.

W. A. Cutler, representing Armour & Company, who calls around at the coast cities about every week, has just completed a trip through the interior, made for the purpose of reporting on conditions there. The trip was taken at the instance of the head office, and it is supposed that it is the intention of the firm to utilize the information in getting more actively into the trade in this province. Armour & Co. are fully realizing the growing development of the Pacific West, and are erecting a half a million dollar office in Seattle.

John T. Williams, Dominion fishery inspector, has gone north to look after the salmon and herring. By the middle of this month, all the obstructions on the Naas river and tributaries will have been removed, so that about forty miles of additional spawning ground will be available for the salmon. The herring industry is being rapidly developed in northern waters, and it is declared by those engaged in the taking of these fish that in a very few years the catching and packing of herring will be one of the most important industries on the northern coast.

At the annual meeting of the Chilliwack Co-operative Association, reports showed that a profit has been made of $1,900.68, while a loss of $846.68 was suffered through the handling of produce; consequently it was decided to leave produce severely alone in the future. The shareholders although not having big dividends to show for their investment, considered that they had profited indirectly through the bringing down of previous high prices. The president in his address said it was the intention to thoroughly re-organize the work of the executive.

In the annual report of the president of the Chilliwack Canning and Preserving Company, it was pointed out that there is about $13,000 worth of goods on hand, most of which it was expected would move out during the next two or three months. A satisfactory feature was that there had been practically no complaints about the product. Until a market was more firmly established, he said that it would be a mistake to can a greater quantity of any special variety of fruit than what the market will demand, and with this in view, it was suggested that a very limited pack of cherries be put up this year, and that other varieties be governed accordingly. The evaporation of apples and prunes will be handled to full capacity. The condition as a whole was considered satisfactory, the ledger showing a balance on the right side of over $600. The old board of officers were re-elected.

Every merchant and business man in Kamloops has signed the petition for the Wednesday half holiday, which will be in force from May 15 to the end of August.

VICTORIA.

May 11.—The Grocery Clerks' Association smoker held here recently was a delightful event. This association is in a strong position this year and there is a large membership. Eighteen new members were made before the smoker. A resolution was passed at the meeting that a petition be presented to the master grocers regarding the half-holiday question, and the clerks look forward to this question being settled within the next month and in full force. The officers of the association are: President, Mr. Lawlor; vice-president, Mr. Jenkinson; second vice-president, Mr. Young; secretary, Mr. Evan; treasurer, Mr. Thomas.

EDMONTON.

May 11.—A. H. Richards & Co., general merchants, of Strathcona, have started work on the excavation for their new store, which is to be built on the other side of Whyte Ave. from where they are now and just west of Douglas Bros. It is to be a pretentious brick building, three storeys in height. The first two floors will be used as their store and the upper floor as offices. The new store will be fitted up with all of the latest features, including two electric elevators, one for passengers and the other for freight.

Aitken Bros., grocers, corner Namayo Ave. and Clara St., have just completed the addition of a spacious new warehouse in the rear of their store. The old stockroom they have transformed into a cosy little ice cream parlor to catch some of the spare dimes that will be floating around during the long pleasant summer evenings that will soon be here.

All the merchants of Norwood, a business centre in the north end of the city, have agreed to close during the months of May, June, July and August at seven o'clock on Tuesday and Thursday evenings each week.

The Royal Fruit Company will shortly begin the erection of a two-storey warehouse on Third St., the property purchased by them a short time ago. The warehouse will be of brick. The contract has not yet been awarded but work on the excavation has been begun.

As the result of a tour of inspection in the bakeries of the city last week by the police department to round up those who were selling bread below the regulation one and a half pound weight, two bake shop proprietors appeared in the police court. In one case the proprietors pleaded not guilty, but though the weight of their bread was shown to be below the regulation the magistrate dismissed the case, holding that the police officers had not proven that the short-weight bread taken from the bakery had been offered for sale. In the other case, one of the proprietors appeared and pleaded guilty. He contended, however, that he did not defraud the public, as the bakers were all cutting weights and he had to do so also to meet competition. He was fined $10 and costs.

The announcement that the Canadian Pacific Railway has reached an agreement with Edmonton in connection with the entrance into the capital and that the high level bridge, connecting Strathcona and Edmonton, will be started this summer, has been received with a great deal of pleasure in Strathcona. The building of the bridge, such as the company propose, will mean the employment of hundreds of men through a period of from one to two years. Strathcona is bound to be the base of supplies and from the Strathcona end the work will proceed. The presence of this large number of men in the city and the big pay roll that accompanies them should have a healthful influence upon business in Strathcona and give it an impetus that will not be lost when the bridge is completed.

Edmonton now justly claims to be the leading packing centre of the province, in fact, of the Middle West. During the year 1908 there were 50,000 head of cattle, hogs, and sheep slaughtered in Edmonton and Strathcona. Of this amount seventy per cent. were hogs; $750,000 would be a conservative estimate to place on this product. During 1909 these figures will increase to at least double as the Swift packing plant was operating only during the last three months of 1908 and in that time slaughtered 30,000 head of stock. The balance of the 50,000 was handled by the smaller plants.

MANITOBA MARKETS

(Corrected by Telegraph).

May 13.—The trade has revived considerably within the past few days. and fresh fruits and vegetables are still selling cheap, and a further decline in a few fruits has materially increased the output.

There are some marked changes in the price list, chiefly declines.

SUGAR.—The price has dropped 20c on all grades. The reason for the enormous decline is not known, but it is expected that it was caused by the keen competition that exists among the refiners.

EGGS—The price is good for this season of the year owing to the prolonged cold weather. They are jobbing at 18c per dozen.

BUTTER—The creamery product remains firm at 25c. Some No. 2 dairy is accumulating again, and the dairy No. 1 is not much in demand. It ranges from 14c to 18c per pound.

FORT WILLIAM CORRESPONDENCE

May 12.—Old stocks of potatoes are becoming much depleted, the prevailing price for these being $1.25 per bag. As soon as these are used up the price may jump to $1.50, as the lowest price quoted by wholesalers in the east is $1.25. It is to the east that Fort William merchants will probably have to look for their spring stock, until the new crop comes in. In the west the demand for potatoes has been so heavy that prices are as high or higher than in the east, the western surplus having been largely shipped across the line into the States. In addition to this the eastern pototoes come out of winter storage in better condition than those in the west.

Most of the local merchants got fairly well from under, during the recent slump in butter prices, a loss of three cents a pound being made on some small lots, but not enough to be serious. The produce houses are now charging the merchants 26c for the best creamery. Eggs are 24c per dozen.

All grocery stocks are low now, pending the opening of navigation, the first boats with package freight having come in on May 1st, and from this time on both wholesale and retail merchants will begin to replenish all lines that got short during the past month.

McLaurin & Dow have decided to cater for the vessel trade during the summer and have bought a gasolene launch, which will be used in the harbor for delivering goods to boats wherever they may be tied up. There should be a good opportunity to pick up a profitable business when the captains realize that they can purchase supplies and have them delivered as conveniently as if they were being brought to a house.

The wholesale grocery business of the John King Co., Limited, has been sold to Cameron & Heap, who have been in the wholesale business in Kenora and have several other western branches. The new firm will make Fort William the headquarters of their entire western business and will continue the business in the same premises which they are renting from the John King Co. The latter firm will continue in the wholesale liquor business and will also take up the commission business in which they should find their previous business connection extremely valuable.

FATHER AND SON.

John Lampman, a leading grocer of Hamilton, has taken his son into partnership, and the firm name is now John Lampman & Son. Mr. Lampman, jr. has been associated with his father in the business for some years and has evidenced capacity and energy that gives large promise of a successful business career. The appearance and the management of the Lampman store are such as to elicit favorable comment from the traveling men. That means it is a store to draw trade and hold it.

Business Hints for Spring-time Consideration

The Conscientious Business Man Coming to the Front—More Attention Should be Paid to the Cash Customer—Believe in Your Own Business—The Clerk and the Baseball Season.

Good advertising ought to sell $15 suits for $20. It doesn't take much of an advertiser to sell $20 suits for $15. if they're worth it. Remember that—Merchants' Record and Show Window.

Very poor advertising, The Hustler calls it. It savors too much of the fire sale, bankrupt, junk style. You may sell $15 suits for $20, or a $10 stove for $15 once, but never again. Good advertising is honest advertising. It is of the kind that tells of a $15 suit that is worth the money; that is well made; that is all wool; that will satisfy a customer and bring him back pleased. The same principle holds good in any business. The man who advertises a price for good goods and furnishes something shoddy, that which is not up to specifications, which does not satisfy, which ultimately gives a customer the idea that he has been "done," will find that he has brought a roorback, that his trade will dwindle and fall away. One of the growing sentiments in this country is that which favors honesty. There is getting to be less room for the cheat every day. Business men and purchasers endorse those who tell the truth, even though it be disagreeable. Even the white lies in business so much indulged in are coming to be more and more condemned. Be strictly honest in your advertising, with your jobbers, with your customers. Don't put on a false front and endeavor to carry it through. The great American game of bluff in this regard is played out. When those you deal with find that you are strict and conscientious in this regard, they will come to respect you, your business will prosper, your prices will stand, and you will crawl under the covers at night a satisfied man with a clear conscience.

This is analagous to confidence. If you represent an article to be of a certain standard you should know whereof you speak. If you agree to do certain things, never fail to fulfil a promise—and if unforeseen happenings prevent, go frankly to the proper person and explain the situation. Inspire confidence in yourself and your business. That is the foundation which the whole United States Government rests upon. Build upon it and you will find that your house is founded on a rock, capable of withstanding all the vicissitudes and storms.

There are a good many dealers who declare they would like to put their business on a cash basis, a fair proportion of whom are really offering premiums to the people who seek credit. The Hustler saw it claimed the other day that a man who had established a line of credit at a department store expressed his great satisfaction at having done so as he said his wife reported being accorded much better and more attentive service. The very idea that she was entitled to credit gave her a certain standing and importance in the eyes of clerks who were far more obsequious in their attentions, while the unfortunate customer who paid cash had to stand and wait. There's a good deal to it. Many a merchant follows the same rule and then kicks because he thinks it impossible to put his business on a cash basis. The fact is that the people who lay their money down on the counter when a purchase is made are the ones who ought to have special attention and the best rates. The merchant who makes it an inducement to his customers to pay cash is mighty near the solution of getting rid of the charge system.

If you don't thoroughly believe in your business, don't just think it's about the only thing on earth worth toying with; better turn it over to your creditors while there is something left.

Try and do things a little different once in a while. We enjoy a vacation because it is a change, but prolonged it gets awfully wearisome. Getting out of the rut now and then, even though the old way has proved successful, is a great relief to customers as well as the men who push the wagon.

There are salesmen—a good many of them, too—who believe success is largely the result of a volume of talk. The loud-voiced individual who comes into an office and stops all work by the noise he makes and his guffaws at his own cheap jokes is a nuisance, whose company is nowadays simply tolerated and his noise doesn't sell goods or prove at all convincing. Business right from the word go, transacted quietly but forcibly, no time wasted in story-telling and cheap jokes, brings the best and most lasting results.

At no time will extra push and advertising pay better than right now. In the spring people are generally possessed of a buying mood if they have the wherewithal, and this year gives more than usual promise of a large, healthful trade before the midsummer stupor possesses men. Get your share quick.

The baseball mania has again struck the country and a good many merchants groan. It's a sport that while enjoyable and furnishing a healthful recreation when taken in proper doses, brings trouble into many an office. The clerk who thinks of little else, who is always studying averages, percentages and other dope, and who is willing to sacrifice business any time to attend a game, isn't really of much value to an employer. ANSWERS TO ENQUIRIES.

What is the best way to get along with a competitor who is unfair and makes misrepresentations, asks A. Atwood, Winnipeg.

Ans.—Act so gentlemanly, straight and neighborly that he will be ashamed of himself and he will soon treat you similarly. It never fails.

W. J. McCart, general merchant, Avonmore, Ont., asks for the name and address of the secretary of the Retail Merchants' Association.

Ans.—The secretary of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada is E. M. Towern. His address is 21 Richmond St. West, Toronto.

J. Aiken, Toronto, writes: "I understood that the Retail Merchants' Association asked the government to make the legal weight of a bag of potatoes 75 lbs. Has that been done?

Ans.—No, not yet. It is however before the House now, and may yet become law before the House rises.

Toronto retailer asks: Can more than one man peddle from one waggon under one license in Toronto?

Ans.—Only one man can peddle under one license. Two or more can do so from one waggon but they must have separate licenses, and have their own numbers on the wagon. A peddler, however, may have a helper, who must have a helper's license, but he cannot sell or deliver goods. He can only fill up, weigh and drive the horse.

One of our leading grocers, G. J. Jamieson has replaced one of his counters with silent salesmen. He made the change about one month ago, and states that already they have paid him in increased sales, a part of the cost of instalation.

The season hereabouts, is very backward and frosts are a nightly occurrence.

Miss Nixon who has been in the employ of G. J. Jamieson, for over six years has recently been married. Miss Nixon will be greatly missed by Mr. Jamieson and his customers, as she has proven to be a woman of exceptional business ability. Canned Goods from Standpoint of the Retailer Address Presented by Retail Grocer at Last Meeting of the Hamilton Retail Grocers' Association—Corn, Peas and Tomatoes Treated—Changes Suggested From Present Conditions.

By J. A. McIntosh.

The articles I purpose dealing with under the heading of Canned Goods are corn, peas and tomatoes, and I purpose dealing with them from personal observations as a retail grocer. In doing so I have no other desire than for the mutual benefit of canner and dealer.

It is through the retailer that the goods reach the consumer, therefore it is the retailer who receives the approval or disapproval of the consumer; and I must say, to the credit of many consumers, they are as ready to express the merits as the demerits of the goods. With a country growing rapidly, its population spreading to the far north, its cities rapidly increasing, the vast western prairies filling up, the manufacture of canned goods is bound to become one of our greatest industries. I am told that our home consumption of canned goods is forty million cans a year, and there is no reason to doubt that within the next ten years the consumption will reach one hundred millions.

With these possibilities likely to exist the question may be asked, have our canned goods reached their highest standard, or have they attained the standard the public demands? From my observations of a few years I must answer in the negative. There is no reason why we should go to outside countries for our standard goods. I think our climatic conditions are such as to produce corn, peas and tomatoes equal to anything grown the world over. Then if the foregoing statements are true what is the existing cause of the low standard of canned goods? My belief is that instead of trying to produce the best possible goods at a fair price, the object has been to produce lowest possible price and good accordingly.

A few years ago a ten-cent jam compound was the desire of the average customer; to-day they are buying more of the pure jam at double the price, which goes to show that the public are demanding a better quality of goods and are willing to pay the price. Many reasons may be given why our canned goods are not up to standard, but I will only mention two, viz., carelessness in putting different qualities of goods in the same case, and the poor quality of tin used in cans. I am not going to state how the products should be prepared to put in the cans, as I am not an experienced hand, and I think that too many of the unexperienced or careless kind are employed in factories.

For the past three months I have made personal observations and enquiries about goods sold with the following results. One woman who had purchased three cans of corn expressed herself after this style: One can was of a very nice rich color and sweet, another was much darker in color and contained enough corn cob to fill the teeth of an elephant and the other can, while free from corn cobs, was off-color and not pleasant to the taste. Three cans of peas, the product of one canner, were as different as if put up in different countries. I have had many complaints from canned tomatoes. One brand, the production of a leading canner, was very unsatisfactory. The can itself was in perfect condition, bright and well tinned, but the contents were sour. which goes to prove that contents were unfit for canning and should not have been used.

If a canning factory expects to build up a trade on such goods thev are very much mistaken. Let me give you some idea how goods are advertised in a corner grocery. Four or five ladies are buying different articles and as a rule they are not backward in expressing their views. An actual conversation I heard was as follows. "Say, Mr. Mac, have you no other brand of tomatoes than the one I got from you yesterday; when Willie come in he smelt them sour at once."

I told the lady I did not know what brand they were.

"I do not know the brand," she answered, but she remembered the label and pointed it out.

The result was that those tomatoes were condemned at once. This is a common occurrence and I am satisfied it is the experience of every grocer here. Now all these and many more, were cases where the cans were in perfect condition, which goes to prove that carelessness must exist in putting the products in the cans.

Inferior Tin Plate.

The second reason was poor tin in the cans. Whether from a desire to purchase the cheapest quality of cans or that the manufacturers of cans were getting the best of the canners I am not in a position to say, but many cans show a very poor quality of metal in their construction. In some places rust had gathered and if you took a penknife and scraped it you would find a small hole the size of a pin-head through which the air passed and soon the contents became bad.

It occurs to me that the same carelessness exists in the preparation of the products as in the outside and visible portions of the cans. A person will occasionally notice in opening a case of goods that some of them are dinged not only on the sides but on the corners. In examining the case itself it is found to be all right—no break or any sign of any heavy substance falling against it. You come to the conclusion that these cans should never have been put in the case and you are buying them for No. 1 goods.

Then we have the paste used in putting on the labels and the quantity. I think if for no other reason than the carelessness in which the labels are put on cans that some canners' goods should be declined.

The labels on British goods are always put on smoothly and never will you see a rusted can from the paste used.

Take some Canadian goods and almost invariably you will find enough paste on the seam of the label as should be used on the whole label. Consequently the can rusts and I am sure gives a bad impression to the customer.

I would like here to make a comparison. During the past four years I have sold about three thousand cans of one brand of salmon. In that lot I had only two cans bad and that was the result of them being pierced by a nail. I wish I could say the same of corn, peas and tomatoes.

First, have all canned goods classified 1st, 2nd or 3rd quality; the cans being stamped, stating the quality of the contents. Until such time as something of this nature takes place we may be compelled to suffer the same injustice as now. If a customer chooses to pay more for first quality we should be in a position to supply them.

But the canners say they make as good canned goods as are made in the world and ask what we are complaining about. I admit they do, and say that they make as poor as can be found anywhere and the good and bad are in one case. Divide them up, I say, and put them up as I suggested. If they have dinged cans let them put them up in cases and sell them as such. If the cans are badly rusted put them by themselves and sell them as such and if they are sour before canning, then feed them to the pigs and suffer the loss.

I often wonder how it is that manufacturers of canned goods do not use more precaution in putting cans in cases. If I were putting them up I would have a sheet of absorbent paper at top and bottom of box and between the rows. This would absorb the moisture and keep the cans in better condition.

A word to the retail grocer—myself included. Let us in the near future have a conference of all the grocers in the province and make our demands. Let us say what we must have. We should be in a position to make some demands if we wish to accomplish anything. The canners meet and exchange ideas; so let the retail grocers meet and have a united conference on all matters pertaining to the welfare of the retail trade.

And now a word in conclusion. When I started to prepare this paper I had no idea to give it the consideration that I did. I had a desire to obtain all my information from outside sources but I came to the conclusion that better results would be obtained from personal observations and trust that anything I have stated or observed may be to the best interests of the Canadian canners and for the welfare of the retail grocer.

The Running of a Trade Paper

By J. C. Freund, Editor Music Trades.

Its Direct Appeal to the Special Interests of the Subscriber Dealt With—Trade Journals From the Standpoint of the Advertiser—The Golden Rule for Business Men—Suppression of News Condemned.

When a business man takes up his daily paper at the breakfast table, or before going home buys an evening paper or two to read on the way, or after his evening meal, what does he expect to find ?

He will tell you, at once, that he expects to find the "news of the day" in the political, business, financial, and perhaps social and amusement worlds. He will perhaps tell you that he is not much concerned with the reports of crimes or accidents—but only glances at the headlines of such ; that he reads the departments in which he is particularly interested ; that he is sometimes attracted to the editorial page ; that, perhaps, if he has been to a theatrical or musical performance, he will read the criticism of it to see whether the views of the critic agree with his own.

But if he were asked to sum up, in a word, why he takes these papers, he will tell you, "Because I want to read the news of the day, as every intelligent man should."

If you will go on and ask this business man how he expects this news to be given, he will tell you that he expects it to be given fairly, dispassionately, without being colored ; that he is interested, indeed, more in facts than in opinions ; that if he has the facts he is able to form his own opinions.

If you go on and inquire further, and ask him how he supposes the news is gotten for publication, he will say, that while he has no intimate acquaintance with the organization and general machinery by which newspapers get the matter they publish, he supposes that some of it comes from news associations, some from correspondents, some of it is collected by reporters, some of it is taken, perhaps, from other papers; and that, then, there is an editorial staff, which comments on the news, and there will also be the departments which take especial account of social and musical matters, which review books, which write articles on the financial or business situation.

Finally, ask him how he supposes the papers live, and he will probably reply, if he is a fairly well-informed and intelligent man, that he presumes it is by publishing matter which gives the paper a large circulation, sufficient to induce advertisers to advertise in it, and so give it revenue to pay its expenses and a living profit.

Is it not curious that this very business man whose attitude to the daily papers he takes up is so eminently fair, considerate and intelligent, should take sometimes an entirely different attitude when it comes to his trade paper, especially if he is a man of large affairs, the head of some establishment of standing, influence and extended business connections ?

This change of attitude, however, is natural, and can be accounted for though it is, at times, unjust to the trade paper.

The reason why the business man will view the trade paper from an entirely different standpoint to that from which he views his daily papers, and maybe such weeklies and monthlies as he also takes, is because the trade paper deals with the especial interests which affect him ; and he, therefore, views the trade paper not from the general standpoint that he views his daily and other papers but from the point of his own particular, special interest. And when that is in any way affected, especially adversely, he is apt to become critical, even hostile, and judge the trade paper on entirely different lines from those on which he has always judged the dailies and other papers that he reads.

It is for this reason that, in times past, we have seen so many heads of eminent houses not satisfied till they owned an editor, or practically owned a paper, and possessed what has come to be known as "a house organ."

In the earlier days of industrial or trade paper journalism this condition was accepted, so that at one time in the musical industries we had a number of papers of more or less ability and worth, each known to be controlled by some large house and practically published in its interests. The result was often detrimental to the standing of the trade press, for when controversy ran high, and large interests were involved, it was no uncommon thing to see a paper coming out with vicious attacks either on the personality of the members or on the interests of some prominent house, or even attack an artist of renown—attacks unquestionably inspired by the concern whose "organ" the particular paper was.

This condition was also, in a measure, reflected in the business and political world. So that we had many papers, even of standing, which were virtually nothing but the organs of a political party, or of local politicians, or of certain business interests.

As time went on, however, and the press, through increasing prosperity, was enabled more and more to win its liberty, and also because people got to be sufficiently intelligent not to be influenced by papers that were always biased in favor of some one person or some one interest, the house organ, whether in trade journalism or general journalism, began to lose ground, till now it is only seen here and there, in spots, and has but limited circulation and exceedingly little influence.

To-day the papers, not only the greater and broader field of journalism, which are acknowledged to be powerful and to have large revenue and to make good profits, are those that are known to be absolutely independent, which have no price at which you can buy their favor, and certainly no price at which you can buy their silence ! The same is true in the industrial world, and it can be stated in all fairness that in the musical industries to-day the only papers that command any respect, have any influence and large patronage, are those which are not merely run on reputable lines, but are known to be absolutely independent of any special influence whatever. So that each concerns feels, in doing business with such papers, that it will get not only an equivalent for the money it spends, but fair treatment ; that it will not be exposed to attacks, open or covered, which may be instigated by some rival house.

Some Advertisers' Views.

While in a general way, therefore, we may say that the conditions with our great journals, as well as with our principal trade papers, have radically changed from what they were even a few years ago, there are still some men, men of eminence and standing, who appear to refuse to accept the situation, and so make it exceedingly difficult for the editor of a trade paper to perform his duties with conscientiousness, and at the same time hold their good will and such business as they may be willing to give.

These men appear to believe that when an advertisement, especially one of any size and value, is given to a trade paper it carries with it not alone such support of the interests the advertiser has, but further, a certain aggressiveness against opposing business interests, an ever ready disposition to suppress the news or color it, if the news is in any way in conflict with the business interests of the advertiser.

It is but fair to these men to add that this viewpoint of the advertiser is taken by men in other lines of business, for the reason that the advertiser has come to realize from the conditions under which papers are published, that he really represents a large part of the cost of the publication, as well as its profit. This naturally results from the fact that all papers to-day are sold at a price which would not, in the great majority of instances, pay for the paper that is used, not to speak of the other large expenses of publication in the way of composition, printing, pictures, mailing, salaries of editors, reporters, rent, insurance, traveling expenses, the heavy cost of telegrams and other bills—and so these men, being large advertisers, have come to regard a paper, not merely as an aid to their business, but as a servant.

Correction After Suppression.

I shall endeavor, briefly, to show that this attitude is not only wrong from an ethical standpoint, but is a mistake from a business standpoint.

In the first place, it should appeal to men of intelligence that the moment a paper deviates from the straight path in the way of presenting news matter, the moment it suppresses news, fakes news or fixes news, it must begin to lose the confidence of its readers. When it does so, it must begin to lose circulation, and inasmuch as the advertiser is practically after circulation all the time, where is his gain if the papers in which he advertises, instead of having a large and growing circulation among readers who have confidence in them, have only a restricted circulation among people who never know whether what they read is to be believed or not? And if this will apply to the daily press, will it not apply with vastly increased force to the industrial or trade press?

If a trade paper is so under the influence of its advertisers that it never dares print anything except matter of the most colorless character, what will be the result? A large force for good will be reduced to a condition of uselessness and imbecility, for the plain reason that it will not take the readers of such a paper very long to find out that it has no soul of its own; that not alone are its statements to be received with a large amount of reserve, but that, furthermore, it cannot be relied upon to give the very information which the readers expect—just as much as the man with his daily paper expects to get the news when he takes it up—and why should a man be eager to get in his daily paper every rumor of impending changes or important happenings in the political, financial or general business world, and yet deny the right of the trade paper to print what he will brand as "mere trade gossip" when it affects his interest, which so-called "gossip" is in the majority of cases founded on fact?

At this point let me say a word or two on the subject of suppressing news. It is fatal to all concerned for the news is sure to get out, and just as surely in garbled form. Then columns of explanation or correction are necessary to the interests involved, while the editor has failed to fulfill his function and has probably been beaten by his competitors.

The Golden Rule.

Here is the golden rule for business men.

If anything happens of importance, give the news to your trade press. Then it will be published as you wish it published and it should be published, and not, perhaps, as your competitor wishes it published.

If a combination is made and large interests all over the country are involved, call in your trade papers. Be frank! Tell them your future policy; through them take the trade into your confidence, and so disarm your competitors, who are certain to misrepresent you if you give them the chance.

Remember always that publicity is a force which, rightly used and directed, is of inestimable value, and it can neither be evaded nor avoided, neither faked nor fixed. Remember this is the age of publicity, whose light beats upon the throne of an Emperor as clearly and boldly as it does upon the hearth of the humblest peasant. Remember, finally, that an editor can as little muzzle the truth as you can!

This brings me, logically, to endeavor to define the position of a paper which is entitled to have readers and also to have the respect of such readers.

And here I do not think I can bring any argument which will be more apropos or forceful than the rules and regulations laid down by the Post Office.

As is generally known, under the law relating to the mailing of postal matter, newspapers and regular publications are carried at a flat rate of ¼ cent a pound, which, in many instances, of course, where large distances have to be covered, does not pay the cost of transportation. But the Government believed that in establishing this low rate it was aiding an educational force, as well as an industrial and commercial one.

Under this system, as those know who have kept in touch with postal affairs, some serious abuses grew up, which I will not refer to here further than to say that many publications were issued, not for the sake of the readers, but simply for the sake of securing advertising. So that finally the postal authorities were forced to inaugurate certain drastic reforms, to accomplish which it had to lay down not only rigid rules and regulations, but certain principles.

Of these principles, the main is the declaration that any periodical, to be entitled to the post office franchise—that is, to the right to be sent through the mails at ½ cent per pound—must be primarily published for the reader. Having obtained readers, it may then get all the advertising it likes, but it must first show that there is a legitimate demand from readers who are willing to pay its price per copy or to subscribe to it.

And to-day before a paper can secure from the Post Office authorities the right to the postal franchise the publisher must go to the postmaster of the city or district in which his publishing office is located and present absolute evidence that his paper has secured sufficient bona-fide circulation to make it a legitimate enterprise.

With this fact and condition in view, if there is any one thing that follows absolutely, it is that the first duty of the publisher and editor of a paper is to his readers, so that to hold their good will, their respect, to increase their number, the editor and publisher must at all times be guided by what will appeal to them, and also satisfy them.

Large Circulation Needed.

Now, what does this general principle mean, when it comes to be applied to the conduct of a trade paper? Surely it means that the trade paper must be so run that it will secure a relatively large circulation among the people who are interested in the news of their particular industry.

In the case of the musical industries these will, of course, principally be the jobbers, dealers, traveling men, salesmen, and also the manufacturers and supply houses.

By securing such readers, winning also their approval and respect, a valuable advertising medium is created, and the manufacturer, the supply man, the jobber, can with confidence place his announcements in such a paper, for the reason that he will get results—that is, if his goods are all right, his business methods are all right, and he knows how to word his advertising.

But without readers of the character described, without their confidence, such a paper can have but very restricted circulation and little, if any, influence, and, therefore, as an advertising medium it must be practically valueless.

As we know, we have several papers in his trade which make little or no effort to get the news and take no pains to secure subscribers. What is the result?

Some exist because they are virtually house organs of various concerns, which still believe that it is to their interest to support such sheets. Others secure business by reprehensible methods, which have brought the editor and publisher of one sheet, at least, continually under criticism, many times into the courts, and have secured for him such a reputation as no honest man would care to carry.

From the foregoing it should certainly be clear to fair-minded men that no trade paper can claim to fill its function and certainly no trade paper can claim to meet the requirements of the Post Office, which is primarily published to subserve the interests of any one house, or which so caters to its advertisers that it is at any time willing to suppress the news or so arrange the news and its policies as to suit the interests of its advertisers.

Indeed, there is absolutely only one safe path for the editor of a trade paper, and that is, give the news—always, of course, with fairness and courtesy, but always without fear or favor, for the trade paper editor who is afraid of an advertiser is a lost man. He is certainly lost so far as any usefulness is concerned that he may be to the industry he claims to represent, or, for that matter, to any person in it.

The trade paper editor must at all times be prepared to meet injustice, and, in some cases, even attempts at coercion. But there are, of course, ways and means to meet such issues. They can be met firmly, yet courteously.

The Question of News.

It would be unfair, in a discussion of this kind, not to admit that there exists in the large world, as well as in the more restricted world of a particular industry, a considerable difference of opinion as to what is really "news."

There are papers which restrict the news of crimes, scandals, on the ground that extended publication of such matter does not serve any healthful purpose. I will admit, personally, that matter of this kind often comes to me. It is not taken up, because, while in a sense it may be "news," still such matter has no place in a business paper.

I will further admit that there are many times when men representing houses of eminence have considered it to be my duty to take a certain editorial position, and when I have taken it I have found that that position has not been upheld by the sentiment of the trade at large.

Let me give a practical instance of what I mean, by saying that some time before the panic a number of manufacturers considered the time ripe for some articles urging on the dealer the necessity of being prepared for a rise of the prices of the pianos, and other musical instruments, owing to the greatly increased expense of doing business, the

An Editorial

From Business Philosopher and Salesmanship

What is Your Greatest Asset, Mr. Business Man?

Is it your stock of goods or the cash you have in the bank, or what is it?

This question was asked a retail merchant the other day and he finally agreed that the "what is it" is the customers, the buying clientele of his store.

He saw the point, that if by any possibility all of the customers of his store should be destroyed at once, his big stock of goods, even though that stock were all paid for, would not be worth fifty cents on the dollar.

There are two classes of men in charge of stores: One we could call merchants; the others are just storekeepers.

The merchant is coming to see more and more clearly that business building is the thing, and that business building is the art of making each customer a repeater—and, not only that, but of making him the first link in an endless chain to bring more customers. He is coming to see more and more clearly that the square deal pays and that real service to the customer is the key to the situation.

Consider the most important article you sell, and that's tea. It is the master business builder.

You want to sell the tea that will give most satisfaction, that will bring back your customers and their friends asking for "the same tea."

Red Rose Tea will bring more customers to your store than any other tea on the market—and it holds them, too.

raising of rents and insurance, the increased cost of supplies, and notably the greatly increased cost of labor, due to the increased cost of living.

After these articles appeared—and they were commended by many men whose good opinion I value—a number of dealers thought that the articles were ill-timed; that a trade paper should not take such a stand at all. These dealers thought that prices were high enough, and that it was most difficult to make a profit with prices as they were, not to speak of having prices raised still higher.

An Editor's Position.

This induces me to say that an experience of over a generation in the conduct of trade and other papers has brought me firmly to the conviction that the editor of a trade paper should confine himself, as much as possible, to give the news fairly and to making such intelligent comment upon the news as shall be for the best interests of the industry as a whole; and that he should refrain, as far as possible—even when his intentions may be most honorable—from pursuing any policy which, while it may be to the benefit of a large and influential portion of his readers, is likely to bear heavily upon others.

I will add here that I have also become convinced that a paper is not the conservator of the morals of the trade, for the plain reason that such censorship has so easily led into abuse of power and privilege in times past. If, for instance, the advertising of any house offends its competitors, the competitors should rise up in protest, then let the editor record the fact of their uprising, rather than take from their plain duty by himself undertaking the role of censor at their instigation.

There are many in the trade—dealers as well as manufacturers and others who, naturally, consider it easier to strike an offending competitor through a trade paper editor than to go to a lawyer if they think they have been badly treated, and pay considerable money to secure protection or recover a loss.

Herein the courts come to the assistance of the editor, and by many decisions show that he is not there to take the place of the law—nor, outside the accepted liberty of the press, is he called upon to right a public wrong; that society has provided courts and methods of legal procedure for such conditions. Hence, if a man in the trade has suffered a wrong at the hands of another, he should not rush to his trade paper editor for help—and if he does not receive it denounce the poor editor—what he should do is to consult his attorney, bring suit, and then it is the part and duty of the editor to give the news that such a suit has been brought. But in giving this news he must be careful that both sides of the controversy are given an equally fair show.

Difficulties Met With.

I will not here go into the many difficulties which beset a trade editor who has some regard for his profession, for his position, some self-respect, and also, to be frank, a fair desire to please those who are his supporters, except in so far as to allude to one tendency on the part of some members of the trade which tries the editor's patience sorely. This tendency is to deliberately misquote what has appeared in a paper, and demand explanation or retraction—or to impute to a paper something which never appeared in it at all, but was published in some other paper.

Of the first, let me give an instance which has just come under my notice. There has been some difference in a large city between the manager of a house of great standing and other dealers in the city who had formed an association.

A report of the difficulty between these various gentlemen appeared in this paper and aroused some criticism. A member of the association of dealers has written to the paper, desiring correction, and in his letter asserts that we had printed that an attempt had been made to "coerce" the dealer in question to join the association of other dealers.

Now, what this paper printed was that the association had endeavored to "enlist" this particular dealer in its work and had failed.

I submit to fair-minded men that there is a very large difference between stating that an association had endeavored to coerce a man and in stating that it had endeavored to enlist him. I could give many similar instances which have been the cause of much trouble, which, however, was easily allayed when the printed page was produced and it was shown what the paper had printed, instead of what the particular individual thought it had printed.

With regard to the second cause of trouble, the imputing to a paper of something which had appeared in another sheet, it is not long ago since I was angrily accosted by a prominent member of the trade, who demanded to know why a certain paragraph had appeared, which, he said, was wholly false, detrimental to his house's interests and had evidently been inspired by malice.

I promptly repudiated the charge that malice inspired anything that appeared in this paper, and challenged the gentleman to produce the incriminating item. We went to his office ; he hunted through several issues of the paper. He could not find it, till his clerk informed him that the item in question had not appeared in this paper at all, but in another.

On that, to justify his anger, he launched into a general denunciation of the trade press—though I must admit that later on, on cooling off, he wrote me personally a very kindly letter of apology.

If I have any ulterior purpose in writing this article, it is—while admitting that there have been many grave evils connected with the trade press in times past, and that some of these evils have been scotched, but not killed—to ask the members of the various industries to be fair to the trade press ; to view it from something like the same point of view that they do the daily and other publications they are accustomed to take and read ; to be sufficiently just as to realize that the trade press is a most valuable adjunct to the industry—as would be appreciated within twenty-four hours if all the trade papers were wiped out to-morrow—and to realize that, as there will be trade papers, these can have no influence, and therefore, no usefulness, unless they are run on those simple principles, and which principles are the result of generations of experience, and represent certainly the convictions as to the best methods to be pursued of the leading journalists of the country, dead as well as living, of whom we have every reason to be proud.

A NOVA SCOTIA WINDOW.

Biscuits and Confectionery Displayed by an Amherst Grocer.

The window shown in this illustration is one recently produced by Frank Loughrey, the "Olympia," Amherst, N. S. Biscuits are prominently and artistically displayed with some fruit. confectionery, pickles, etc.

The feature in this window is the neatness of the arrangement. It is usually wise to display a particular line of goods separate from others, and in this respect the window might have been improved. Too many articles shown at one time have the tendency to detract the attention from the particular one which the grocer is anxious to sell.

Window dressing is rapidly becoming a science and a recognized good advertisement to the retailer, so that if merchants nowadays expect to reap success in their towns they must have not only attractive and neat windows, but store fronts which also are attractive.

A Window Display Show in the Olympia Store in Amherst, N.S.

A handsome background to a window and seasonable goods in the front make splendid combinations, providing there are not too many varieties.

WHAT SALESMANSHIP MEANS.

Reader Believes That Grocers Should Sell Goods That the Customer Needs.

(By a Retail Grocer.)

An article appeared on page 52 of The Canadian Grocer of May 7 in which the writer hit upon an idea in salesmanship which should attract attention and lead to good results. The idea I refer to is that a good salesman "must lead and direct his customer to buy the right things at the right time." This is a matter that seldom occurs to a clerk and yet it is of such vital importance that neither he nor his employer can afford to overlook it. It becomes more apparent every day that good intelligent service on the part of the grocer or any retailer, is appreciated by the public, and will add more to the success of the store than all the price-cutting, fake premiums, and sham lotteries put together. A grocer must gain the confidence of the people, if he expects to succeed, and this he can only get by being strictly truthful and fair to his customers, and he cannot be fair unless he sells, as far as lies in his power, the very thing the customer should buy.

It is often said that it is no trick to sell a person a thing he wants, but it takes a salesman to sell a thing he does not want. This may apply to some things but it is not good salesmanship in a store where you expect to hold your trade. We are passing through a crisis. The retail trade is suffering from various sources and is threatened by unhealthy methods, and in order to hold our own and continue to provide the public with the convenience they require and appreciate, we must get out of the old rut and give better service, and to do this we must learn more about the business.

All leading grocers are seeing the necessity more than ever of an aggressive paper which is not afraid to attack all kinds of small underhanded methods, and to advocate clean, upright and good service to the people. There is no man who should stand higher in the estimation of the people than the man who knows how to conduct a retail store properly, and secure the confidence and respect of his customers. I do not take a pessimistic view of the situation.

The chances of the retailer are as good as ever but they have to wake up and adapt their methods to the growing changes in the demands of the public. Not many years ago every girl got a fairly good training in housekeeping, but now many of them are doing office work and when they get married they do not know what, or how to buy and it is right here where the grocer should help her honestly to buy what she needs.

If he learns to do this he will succeed, he can afford to be cheerful and will command the respect of his customers.

Produce and Provision Situation of the World

Pork Packers Want More Hogs—Development of Home Consumption Desirable—Butter Production not Large—Low Stocks of Cheese in England.

More hogs is the constant cry of the pork packers. Even the unusually high figures will not make them grow fast enough. The Canadian demand is active, and while there is also an export demand, very little is left after the home market is supplied. According to the prevailing idea the value to the country only comes in when an article is exported. That this is the opinion may be inferred from the fact that so much more attention is paid to the goods we export than what is consumed at home. The farmers think it is a terrible thing that we do not export more stuff. Do they think that we would be better off, if our people were not allowed to use it, so as to enable the country to export more? Which would be the more economical thing to do, feed a man in England and have the money for the food returned, or let the man come here and feed him here, and keep the money for his food? We would not only in the latter case have the same money, but we would also have the producing energy of the man. Is it, therefore, good policy to neglect the home market at the expense of the foreign? We are always trying to encourage immigration, but if people are worth more to us to feed them in another country, why bring them here? Our packers deserve a great deal of credit for creating such a good home demand through the excellent quality of their products.

Reports from England state that natural conditions have been against a large butter production yet. Ireland, however, has got to work and creameries vie with factories for precedence on the market. But the sum total of the efforts of these isles is at present not great. Making hay while the sun shines, the Danes have put up the price for current transactions, but while this has had the undoubted effect of steadying matters somewhat, other sections of the market have not exactly responded, as the spring make is too imminent. The colonial supply is not too much for the demand that exists for the supply, and the market may be called steady all around, with the outlook for lower figures when the make here and on the continent expands. There is an improved demand for Australian and New Zealand butter, and more business has been transacted in the east, west and south of England. The north still clings to the old-fashioned cask butter, and the newer package goods find a slow sale there.

Cable advices from England state that stocks have got very low and the amount on hand at the docks is now only 40,000 boxes, and that we are likely to have a clear-out before the new arrivals come in. The demand has woke up a bit during the week, and buyers have shown a willingness to submit to present prices, though any increase in rates would appear likely to be met with a decline in buying. English has advanced until Cheddars are now up to 76s for finest. New Zealand is competing strongly with Canadian. Brokers on this side claim that the demand for Canadian cheese cannot be met, as the Englishmen are all in a hurry, being short sold.

MONTREAL.

PROVISIONS.—There is no change in the market for live hogs, prices being steady under a good demand, and sales of selected lots were made at $8.25 to $8.35 per 100 lbs. weighed off cars. In abattoir fresh killed dressed, a fair trade was done at $11.25 to $11.50 per 100 lbs. The market for cured meats is quiet and unchanged.

BUTTER.—The market has broken badly, and is now down around a workable basis, but is still unsettled, and until it can be seen how supplies will be, it would be difficult to predict the future. The recent rains may retard production. Fresh rolls are in good demand, at slightly reduced figures. Stocks of fall creamery solids, are about exhausted. Receipts for the season, since May 8, have been 5,309 packages against 1,727 packages for the same season of last year.

CHEESE.—The market for cheese is higher in the country owing to short sales. Dealers do not anticipate as high a range of prices this year as last, but they will probably remain firm for two or three months. Export stock is going forward freely. Receipts since May 1 have been 11,511 boxes against 21,004 boxes for the corresponding period of last year.

EGGS.—The market is weaker and supplies from the country continue very free. Packers are beginning to feel that present prices are dangerous, and are of the opinion, that nothing but loss stares those in the face who store now. The large packers have reduced prices, at least one cent in the country and will stand out, rather than take the eggs at any higher prices. At the present time quotations are from 2 to 3 cents higher than at the same period of last year.

BUTTER.—Butter is a little easier, but the best quality is all wanted at last week's quotations. There is still too much poor stuff in the market. Best brands of fresh creamery are selling for 23c. to 25c. and some special lines, even as high as 27c. In view of the fact that grass butter will soon be on the market, the butter which is coming in now will not be allowed to accumulate, and to keep it from doing so prices are likely to go lower.

CHEESE.—The market is firm, with an upward tendency. There is very little old cheese left, and the supply must depend almost entirely on the new make. In view of the high prices of almost all other food stuffs, it is not likely that cheese will be any lower for some time.

EGGS.—Egg packers would like to buy eggs cheaper and are looking for lower prices. Others see no reason why they would come down. Even at the high price they are not above their value as a food compared with meats and other foods. However the fact remains that with the addition of the cost of holding them they will make very dear eggs for next winter. There is a feeling that the production of eggs is below the mark. Some dealers give it as the reason, that on account of the high price of poultry, farmers killed a great many of their hens, and therefore will not have the quantity of eggs.

Value to Wholesaler of Retailers' Association

Secretary of Seattle Retail Grocers' Association Addresses Vancouver Brethren—How Cutting of Prices Affects Manufacturer, Wholesaler and Retailer—A Cheap Insurance.

May 11.—A large meeting of the retail and wholesale grocers was held in the O'Brien Hall recently, the special purpose being to hear J. J. Higgins, secretary of the Seattle Retail Grocers' Association, and the Washington State Association, H. T. Lockyer, manager of the Hudson's Bay stores in Vancouver, and W. J. McMillan, representing the oldest wholesale grocery house in this city. The meeting was arranged by a committee of the Vancouver Retail Grocers' Association, and W. Clark, vice-president took the chair, owing to the illness of the president, Mr. McTaggart.

On rising to address the meeting, Mr. Higgins, who is not unknown in Vancouver, was warmly greeted. In dealing with the question of maintaining prices he gave a mass of interesting information, concerning his visits to the conventions of grocers which he has attended in various parts of the United States. He related his personal experience with the Seattle wholesale houses, which particularly interested his hearers. When there was need of money he had to take the hat round. "I called on one wholesale man," he said, "and told him the object of my visit, handing him a paper which I had prepared. Mr. Wholesaler took the paper, looked at it, took his pen and put his firm down for $250. I must have looked the surprise I felt, for the wholesaler remarked, 'Mr. Higgins, you look surprised, did you expect more?' 'No I did not expect so much,' I gasped. He then told me that before the Seattle Retail Grocers' Association was fully organized his firm had to write off from $5,000 to $10 000 per year in bad debts, whereas last year the loss was only $125. He also added that he looked upon that as the cheapest kind of insurance it was possible to get."

Mr. Higgins then showed how a grocer in a good neighborhood who started cutting prices was often the cause of other grocers being unable to meet their engagements, and from that it was an easy step to see that the interests of the manufacturer, wholesaler and retailer were identical.

At the conclusion of his address the visitor was loudly applauded.

Mr. Lockyer followed with a short but interesting address on "Stores and Storekeeping in Vancouver." Mr. Roy, secretary of the Vancouver Retail Grocers' Association, stated that "we shall have more of 'Lockyer' and that 'Lockyerisms' will be heard when a paper will be read on 'The Bad Old Grocer,'' and 'The Good Old Times.'"

Mr. McMillan, following, paid a compliment to Mr. Higgins on his able address, fully endorsing all that had been said about the interests of all in the trade being identical.

W. H. Malkin, of the W. H. Malkin Company, and F. R. Stewart, of F. R. Stewart & Company, gave brief addresses, expressing the wish that such meetings might be held more frequently, as they felt that nothing but good to the trade in general could come from straight heart to heart talks as had taken place.

Hearty votes of thanks were tendered the speakers at the conclusion.

BETTER SANITARY CONDITIONS.

An order has been issued by the Board of Railway Commissioners to the railways to observe sanitary conditions upon their cars and in their stations. As a result of the applications of the Montreal Board of Trade, every railway company subject to the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada is ordered: To keep clean and well ventilated all waiting rooms, closets, and to disinfect them. Employes are to give monthly reports on condition of all such; passenger cars are to be cleaned and ventilated in the same way.

To adopt by-laws preventing spitting on cars, closets, platforms, stations, etc., except in receptacles provided.

To fumigate all stations or cars where infected persons have been.

To fumigate all sleeping cars at least every 30 days.

Mrs, Stringer, mother of W. B. Stringer, fruit broker, Toronto, died on Tuesday of this week and was buried on Thursday.

Mr. Stephens, who has been connected with the grocery department of the Regina Trading Co., Regina, and who has been connected with that firm for the past three years, is leaving for Swift Current, where he has accepted a position, as buyer.

History of the Pineapple and Story of Its Rise—Where the Canadian Supply Comes From—The Methods of Planting.

PINEAPPLES.—The pineapple or ananas, as it is sometimes called, is highly esteemed and much cultivated for its fruit. The fruit is a sorosis formed by the calyces and bracts of a close spike of flowers, becoming succulent and combined. The pineapple plant has a number of long, sharp pointed, rigid leaves, springing from the root in the midst of which a short flower stem is thrown up, bearing a single spike of flowers and therefore a single fruit.

From the summit of the fruit springs a crown or tuft of small leaves, capable of becoming a new plant, and very generally used by gardeners for planting; the pineapple in cultivation being propagated entirely by crowns and suckers, as in a state of high cultivation, perfect seed is scarcely ever produced. The pineapple is a native of tropical America; it is found wild in sandy maritime districts in the north-east of South America, the West Indies and Central America.

Where the Pins Grow.

It has been greatly changed by cultivation. It has gradually been diffused over tropical and subtropical countries of the world. Mexico, Florida and California now produce fine fruit. Certain parts of Asia and Africa grow the pineapple and it has been cultivated in England and other parts of Europe. It delights in a moist warm climate, and does not, therefore, grow well in the south of Italy.

The first particular account of the pineapple was given by Oviedo, in 1535. It was first cultivated in Europe, in Holland, and subsequently in England, where it soon after might be seen in every gentleman's garden. The greatest care is necessary in the cultivation of pineapples as without such it becomes coarse and fibrous with little sweetness or flavor. With it, however, it is one of the most delicate and richly flavored of fruits.

Its size depends largely on its cultivation also. The size varies from 2½ to 12 lbs. in weight. The pineapples grown in hot-houses are superior to those grown outside.

Recent Rapid Advance.

The increasing popularity of the pineapple has led to more care being exercised with them, so that stock now coming into the market from various parts of the world has much improved. In the colder climates, near the tropical zone, it is grown in special houses, often called the pineries or pine-stoves. Sometimes it is grown in flued pits, and sometimes also, even without fire heat in frames continually supplied with fresh tanners' bark, and dung.

Present Mode of Planting.

The universal practice till of later years was to grow the plants in pots, plunged to the requisite depth in tanners' bark or other fermenting matter, and these were transferred from one house or one compartment to another according to their stage of advancement, three years' time being deemed requisite from the time of the planting of a crown or sucker to the production of the ripe fruit. But the pineapple is now often planted in beds, and fruit of the best quality is sometimes obtained in fifteen months.

The best soil is a rich and rather sandy loam. It is often formed from the turf of old pastures, with manure, peat, sand, etc., thoroughly mixed. Ventilation must be freely admitted from time to time, but care must be taken to keep the atmosphere moist. A pineapple which has borne fruit is thrown away as useless.

Canada receives her supply largely from Florida and the West Indies, although some from California, Hawaii and Mexico find their way here.

AGAINST FOREIGN PACKETS.

United States Tea Trade Want More Protection Against English and Canadian Houses.

Representatives of the tea trade in New York recently joined issue with the published statement of Francis E. Hamilton, counsel of the National Coffee and Tea Association, with regard to packet teas. They declare that it is not often that the tea trade are able to arrive at a common ground in any matters pertaining to tea law or tea duty, or, in fact, to any question, but in one respect, the trade is almost a unit in vigorously requesting Congress to protect the United States tea trade against distribution of "bulk" and "packet" teas by English and Canadian houses.

"There are few in the business," said a leading merchant, "who have not felt the effect of this competition, and the proposal to place an import tax of 5c on all 'packet' teas and on all teas imported in 'bulk' from country other than original growth is meeting with widespread approval. It is argued that these 'packets' cost on an average of 3c per pound for their packing alone, and that this in conjunction with the discriminating Canadian duty of 10 per cent. would be approximately offset by a 5c tax over and above anv other duty that might be imposed.

"A large number in the trade are apparently waking up to the possibility of their having been used as a 'cat's paw' by large foreign sellers of 'packet' tea in this country. It would be interesting to know for whom the National Coffee and Tea Association, lately formed to oppose a tea duty, is in reality speaking."—New York Journal of Commerce.

The Quality of Christie's Biscuits and what it means to you—

IN buying goods there are three cardinal points that you consider carefully. They are:

1. How quickly can I turn these goods over and get my money out of them?

2. Are they the best that I can buy?

3. Do I get a fair margin of profit?

The merit of the goods very properly takes precedence over the matter of price, although, of course, the latter is important.

However, quality has more to do with profits than some merchants think.

Fundamentally, quality determines the success of any article just as the success of every merchant depends upon the quality of the goods he handles.

Christie's Biscuits measure up to the very highest quality standard. There is no acceptable substitute for them on the market. Therefore, Christie's Biscuits are as staple as sugar and salt in the grocery stores that cater to particular trade.

The thousands of merchants, from ocean to ocean, who push Christie's in preference to all other brands of biscuits, have come to realize, through experience, just what Christie Quality means to them.

These merchants have proved that Christie's give them a larger turn-over, and greater aggregate profit in their biscuit departments; also that they build up the paying trade and hold it.

They have proved, too, that Christie's Biscuits sell more than biscuits.

Increase in Consumption of Cereal Foods in Canada—Flour Increases in Price on Account of Advance in Wheat — Cereal Products Ten Cents Higher.

"The increase in the consumption of cereal foods during the past decade has been wonderful," remarked a representative of a large breakfast-food manufacturing concern to The Grocer this week. "All these new prepared breakfast foods from wheat, corn, etc., which have recently come onto the market have displaced to some extent the old fashioned oatmeal. This is due to the fact that they are more easily gotten ready and handled with greater facility.

"There is," he continued "a vast amount of meal from corn, wheat and oats consumed and this industry has spread rapidly in Canada in view of the big export demand."

Canada's oatmeal and similar products are known in most countries. The demand from South Africa of late years has been large and our cereal foods going there are much desired.

All grocers handle breakfast foods nowa-days and they are among the principal profit producing goods in the grocery store.

Cereals this week advanced 10 cents in view of the high price of the raw material.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR—The flour market is very firm in sympathy with the advancing raw material market. Some lines have advanced, and a light move, on the part of the others, may occur at any moment. The demand for export purposes is good, and fancy prices are being offered in foreign quarters. Owing to scarcity of Ontario winter wheat, a strong feeling prevails in the local market for these lines.

ROLLED OATS—The trade is pretty well filled up and jobbers are finding it difficult to make sales. There is a limited demand at this season of the year, so the volume of business is small. Receipts have been good and exports have been practically up to last year's mark.

FEED—The unusual demand for bran continues. This condition is general in country places as well as in the cities. Some enquiries have been received from "American" points also, for export. Shorts are somewhat more plentiful but the demand for them is limited.

FLOUR—The market is firm, and wheat again about 10c. higher than last week, which is now selling at $1.30 a bushel, and flour as high as $6.30 a barrel. Wheat is scarce, and lots of mills cannot get enough to keep running. Owing to the high price dealers are very careful in buying, which causes the market to be sluggish, and heavy.

A. G. Marmion, a traveler, died last week in Muskoka. Bruce County was his native home but he went to Toronto about twenty-one years ago and for several years carried on a grocery store on Parliament St. He later became identified with the Toronto Show Case Co. He was about 70 years of age.

A despatch from San Bernardino, Cal., states that all previous records were broken by the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad for April in shipments of oranges to the east. During April 3,984 cars went east. Each car contained 384 boxes, and, with about 175 oranges to the box, a total of 268,800,000 oranges was carried. The value for the month's shipment was about $4,000,000.

Winnipeg Importers on Canadian-German Treaty

Present Tariff is Preferred on German Goods Coming to Canada—Change Recently Made Gives Preference to Great Britain—Only a Few Articles in Grocery Line Imported.

Winnipeg, May 12.—That the negotiations now reported between the governments of Canada and Germany, are of importance to the people of Canada no one can deny, but just to what extent the various trades and industries will be affected is extremely hard to define.

Very little has been made public as yet regarding the nature of the commercial relationship which is under consideration. Practically all that is known is that the present agitation originated in Germany, and a few facts of history may probably give us a key to the inquiry.

By reason of the sur-tax which was placed upon German goods coming into Canada a few years ago Germany has been deprived of the trade relations which Canada has with other foreign countries. And it would seem that a removal of this sur-tax, which would put German goods on a par with all other foreign goods, is all that would be required to arrive at a settlement.

Now since the Germans are expressing dissatisfaction it must simply be that there has been a distinct falling off in the export of German goods to Canada since the trade relationship of a few years ago was adopted.

That this is the case may be verified by interviewing importers in various lines. German importations, however, do not cover a very wide range of goods. There are some grocery lines brought in from Germany and these have shown no decline in quantity notwithstanding the present trade relations. These goods are limited chiefly to glass-jar fruits, Frankfurter sausages and special varieties of cheeses. The reason perhaps, why these importations have not been affected by a tax is that they cannot be had from any other country, and Germany was able to put them on the market cheap enough to eliminate a seemingly exorbitant price. There is no doubt, however that if the commercial relationship between the countries was more free that these goods would come in more extensively.

Prices Might be Lower

At present the largest Winnipeg importers of German grocery articles are the Hudson Bay Company. The manager of the grocery department of this old concern, stated, that if better trade was inaugurated with Germany, they would lower the price for which German goods are now retailed and that would mean a larger sale of the goods naturally. The orders from this store have increased more or less every year in spite of the tax, which is attributed largely to the fact that the German population was increasing and certain lines would continue to be popular.

Although German groceries have been coming in more or less on an increase according to the growth of the business house handling them, and also according to the increase of population, it is difficult to ascertain whether the increase would have been greater had not the sur-tax been imposed. It is, however, reasonable to suppose that it would.

Regarding other lines of importation from Germany the same condition of things does not prevail. There are extensive importations of hardwares, dry goods and notions. Perhaps the leading hardware goods brought in is cutlery. Before the sur-tax the quantity of German cutlery used was considerable but now the bulk of this trade is with England, Now that the trade is established with England and although the goods were once cheaper when got from Germany, local importers are indifferent as to a revival of German trade. There are two causes for this indifference. The first is that the profits of the wholesale importer has not diminished, since to save himself, it was only necessary to raise the price of the goods, and thus make it affect the public solely. Another cause for indifference is that the German articles are as a rule, inferior to other countries' goods. No business house cares to see the market flooded with cheap inferior wares. The best is always in demand, and a higher price will invariably be paid for it.

Falling Off in Dry Goods.

In the dry goods line German importations fell off greatly since the sur-tax was levied. Most of the up-to-date importing dry goods houses claim that Germany is the headquarters for certain braids, hosieries and cloths. The cotton hose brought in at the present time is said to be unexcelled by anything of the kind on the English market. These have come in and will continue to come in, in spite of the present trade relationship,

In all lines of German imported goods, it is really the public that should be interested. The demand has not lessened in most cases owing to the present high tariff. Importers will bring in the goods at any cost if they can secure their profits, and these profits have been forthcoming.

Prefer Present Tariff.

There are two reacting features in the Canadian-German trade relationship. On the one hand the public's money is going out for goods which are coming in almost as liberally as before the sur-tax, and it is the opinion of many that this alone would warrant the elimination of the present excess of the one-third rate; on the other hand if the tariff wall was lowered, trade at present with Great Britain would possibly gradually revert to Germany, not only destroying the preference with the mother country. For this reason, in the opinion of local business men, it would be well to retain the present high tariff.

NEW MARKET ESTABLISHED.

The Village of Schomberg, Ont., has established a weekly market for farm produce which is proving a pronounced success. On Wednesday of each week, the day set apart as market day, the farmers from a considerable distance come in with the fruits of their husbandry and a number of buyers from the city attend the market so that there is ready sale at good prices. That the establishing of this market is a great convenience and profit to the farmers of the neighborhood is a fact for the increased price they receive for their produce more than compensates them for the small fee paid to the market authorities. It certainly gives the farmers a considerable amount of ready money to spend and they no doubt do spend a large part of it in the village but it is a question whether a considerable amount does not find its way to the mail order stores of the city.

Another inconvenience is that this system concentrates business largely upon one day of the week, making a rush while the balance of the week is comparatively quiet. This necessitates extra store help for the market dav.

The large increase in the demand for Wilson's Fly Pads this spring is necessitating the preparation for a large summer business in the manufacture of these goods.

Dependable Flour

What does it mean—to you?

REJECTED for Unreliability—is the recessional of many an otherwise excellent salesman, for Dependability is the crying need of our times.

¶ A man with inherent selling ability who can command the good-will of many buyers is worth big money. But the man combining with these qualifications an absolute reliability at all times and everywhere — the dependable man, he's the fellow who commands a premium.

¶ Here's the exact parallel in flour-dom. The standard of reliability, where else can you find it but in FIVE ROSES? For nearly a quarter century there has been no misrepresentation nor deliberate breach of confidence. FIVE ROSES is more than uniform, we would say "unalterable" but for its progressive quality.

¶ Since we began milling we have always understood this secret of business-building; that we are to be held responsible for the highest quality attained and it must always be the same—or better. If FIVE ROSES quality were lowered for a time there would be trouble at once, if the quality were raised for a time and then lowered to former level there would be an even bigger howl.

FIVE ROSES

More than uniform

¶ That's why FIVE ROSES is more than uniform—always nearest to our ideal, that one best, perfect flour which has not yet been made.

¶ Do you want a reputation for progressive quality, reliability and dependability that will lift you out of the ranks of all competition? Do you want to be in a class by yourself? FIVE ROSES is doing it for others—why not YOU?

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS—The green fruit market has stood practically still during the week so far as prices are concerned. No declines or advances are recorded. This is in a measure due to the fact that the fruit boats have not yet disposed of their stock by auction which will undoubtedly have some effect on the market. Trade has been good during the week, many orders going forward to the country.

VEGETABLES—"What about you, if the retailer cuts you out." a Toronto potato dealer was asked. "Well, I have some oats and hay for my horses, and I have lots of potatoes that keep me and my friends going for a while, so I have no reason to be alarmed and I have no reason to kick. I am doing well and am satisfied." Potatoes are the same as last week. The market is overstocked with cabbage, and much of it is sold at a loss in order to get rid of it. Tomatoes are firm and about 25c higher. The first Canadian asparagus appeared this morning.

FISH—Frozen fish are now practically off the market and fresh fish of many varieties are coming in but scarcely enough to meet the demand. "I see fresh fish are still scarce," remarked The Grocer representative on his rounds. "Well, they are, but that is not the trouble; the demand is too great and we are clean sold out," was the prompt reply.

FRENZIED RAISIN SALES.

Are Growers Taking Proper Steps in Instituting the "Raisin Day?"

(New York Journal of Commerce.)

The frantic efforts of the Fresno, Cal., "Raisin Day" committee to move the immense stock of raisins accumulated in their hands, which the trade has been totally unable to absorb are commendable as evidence of the innate push and enterprise of California growers, as well as of their fertility, but, judged from the standpoint of the trade, there is considerable ground on which to question their wisdom and discernment. In their determination to relieve an immediate crisis, it is open to question whether they will not bring upon themselves future trouble quite as annoying.

The whole trouble in California appears to be that the availabale supply of raisins is entirely too great for the consumptive demand. Students of the situation attribute it largely to the fact that growers have continued increasing their acreages without much regard to developing a larger consumptive field, and the natural inequality of the law of supply and demand has come to pass. So far as the campaign of "Raisin Day" can operate to increase the knowledge of the food value of raisins, the publicity is an admirable bit of advertising, but in its direct effects on the distributive channels the committee will do well to have a care.

The reason the packers were unable to buy the accumulated raisins from the growers was because they could not persuade the trade to take those raisins they already had on hand. The reason the trade did not want more raisins was because they were already stocked for all normal demands. In other words, everyone in the chain of distribution was "loaded" with raisins, and yet the growers had enough left over to stock them again. Manifestly the original goods could not move till the trade accumulations did. Yet, in their frantic efforts to get rid of a bad situation the growers and their allies have started most ingenious methods, commencing at the extreme opposite end of the line, even down to the slums of New York, to load up the consumer at slaughter prices, even trying to invoke the aid of philanthropists to help them practically give away raisins to the poor.

Probably this will all help move the coast accumulations, but what of the trade already loaded to the limit and cut off from the demand which would allow them to get rid of what they have? What of the effect of such slaughter on prices? What about brokers and jobbers who have heretofore been the allies of the grower and packer, but who are now displaced in favor of a variety of "irregular" distributors, called in now for the first time? From a trade standpoint it looks as though the California growers are conjuring up several varieties of trouble in the future, even if they do dislodge the present "ice jam" in a Niagara of interrupted commercial traffic.

Old Potatoes Plentiful in Some Parts of Canada

Dearth of Supply Recently Noticed Due to Farmers Not Being Able to Market Them—Scarcity in British Columbia Where Prices Remain High—United States Demand Falling Off.

The consensus of opinion expressed by correspondents of The Grocer in various parts of the Dominion in regard to the potato situation, is that there is yet a considerable quantity in Canada of last year's crop with shortages in some places. In the latter case the shortage seems to be only temporary. It is probably in the west where the greatest shortage is existing. The fact that the farmers have been busily engaged in their work on the farm has had a great deal to do with bare markets.

Our correspondent writing from Vancouver, says that native potatoes still cling to the big figures and it looks as if they will stay there until the new crop comes in. Fairly good-sized new potatoes are on the market from California, but these job at $5 a hundred, just twice the price of the 1908 crop, so are regarded as luxuries.

The difficult potato situation, writes the Chatham correspondent, created recently by a temporary cornering of the market here, has not yet solved itself, though in gradual process of solution. Last Saturday, despite muddy roads and floods throughout the country, the public market was crowded with wagon loads of potatoes, the stories of phenomenally high prices having drawn farmers from every direction. Buyers are few, however, potatoes being practically a drug upon the market—at least, at the price of $1 a bag, which the vendors asked. Would-be purchasers refused to pay that much, and most of the farmers declined to scale down the price. There is still a scarcity of potatoes in the city; that is, at the old prices, and grocers are inclined to wait for the price to come down. United States buyers have been active but the highest they are paying is 75c, and they do not seem in a position to pay more and make money. There are reports of a glutted potato market at Windsor, and large quantities there await shipment for the States. Evidently, potatoes are still plentiful through the country, but farmers are looking for higher prices, while grocers expect the prices to come down. Hence, there is not much doing right at the present moment.

Stocks Still Large.

Despite reports to the contrary, says our St. John, N.B., representative, there are plenty of potatoes in New Brunswick and there is every indication that there will be ample quantities for local needs and a large quantity available for shipment elsewhere. Shipments to the United States have been very large during the past few months. During the month of March 106,128 bushels passed through the customs at Bangor (Me.), while for April the receipts were 96,116 bushels. As the duty amounts to 25c a bushel this trade totals to quite a figure for tariff alone. There has been a slump in the U. S. market of late, however, and as a result potatoes have been coming in here freely. Several of the dealers who were seen stated that there was no dearth of supply and they offer carload lots at $1.25 to $1.30 per barrel. In small lots of three or four barrels the price is $1.50 and the retail figure is about $1.70. Since the opening of navigation on the St. John River, the steamers have been bringing down big shipments every day and the warehouses here are pretty well filled up.

Plentiful in Peterboro.

There has been practically no variance in the price of potatoes in this city of late, is the news from Peterboro. The grocers got in large supplies last fall and during the past two weeks or more they have been able to dispose of some of the surplus. All the leading grocers report this condition. The farmers in this district have not been able to dispose of much of their crop during the past winter. Retailers have been buying where needed from the farmers at 70c and the market price is 90c. Grocers are selling to their customers at this price.

Scarcity at Stratford.

Potatoes in this locality are not as plentiful as usual, states the Stratford correspondent. Numerous shippers this past month have drained the country around here, and now the grocers whose stocks are low, have to bid higher prices to keep their bins full. In conversation with one grocer, he claims that people who are now paying $1 per bag will in a few weeks be paying from $1.15 to $1.25.

The Ottawa representative writes: Merchants feel that potatoes will advance to $1.60 per bag. The farmers have none to offer for sale for many miles from Ottawa. In fact many will be buying themselves before the new ones arrive. Owing to the drought last year, quantities are required for seed by farmers whose crops were failures. Ottawa's market offers New Brunswick potatoes (white), $1.15 per 90 lbs. on cars, and most merchants realize that it is good buying at that price. New potatoes from South Carolina are quoted at $7.50 per barrel and are being retailed at 50c gallon.

To Maintain and Increase Permanent Trade

We handle only articles of known worth—the tried and tested kind—articles whose intrinsic merit has raised them far above the commonplace. We do this because we like to feel that the folks who buy them are, year after year, adding permanent trade to the business of the grocer who sells the goods. From our own selfish point of view we believe the principle applies with telling force.

We Know of No Safer or Surer Way

There is a good living profit on every article we are privileged to represent—each of its kind is, to our way of thinking, a splendid example of honorable manufacture. And because of that important fact we advertise their strong features fearlessly, over our own name, in The Canadian Grocer and elsewhere, every week of the year.

Red Rose Tea

has been a Success:

A Very Great Success

This is not surprising—BECAUSE

FIRST—The quality of the tea is good, better than most people have been accustomed to. It has always been worth the price and has always merited that popular expression, "It's good tea."

SECOND—Retail grocers and their clerks have always taken a most friendly interest in Red Rose Tea—perhaps because I have the most friendly cordial feeling toward them and am always glad of an opportunity to express it.

What rubbish, to talk of "forcing a merchant to sell your goods." The merchant that can be forced is not worth the name. His influence with his customers is greater than any advertising, but the right kind of advertising will help the friendly merchant toward greater success.

This has been the heart of Red Rose Tea advertising—I have tried to make it helpful to the merchant.

If you are not handling this tea, I am sure you would like to have prices, etc., and your enquiry addressed to any of my offices will have prompt reply.

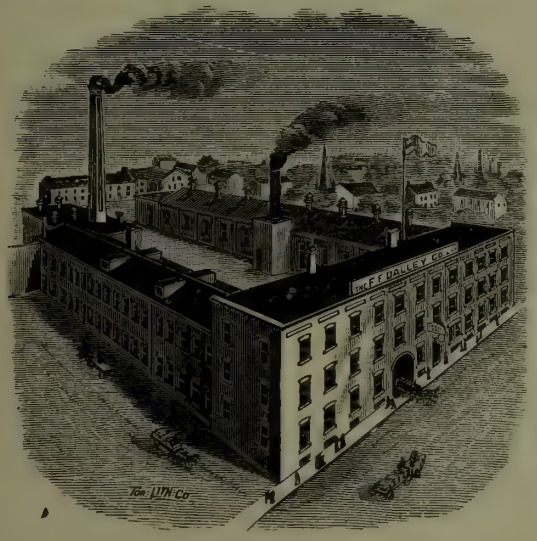
2 IN 1

The World's Best

SHOE POLISH



2 in 1 is, beyond all question, the fastest and steadiest selling shoe polish ever put on the market. These are the two main reasons:

1. It is a better polish than has ever before been known, giving a quicker, brighter and more durable shine than any other shoe polish.
2. It is more extensively advertised than any other shoe polish.

The advertising brings you the first order, and the superb quality of the polish brings in the repeat orders.

The grocer who is not handling 2 in 1 is neglecting a line that is a strong, year-'round seller all over this continent.

It does not pay to let your stock of 2 in 1 run low, as a man who has once used it will accept no substitute.

Mr. Grocer and Customers

HERE we are again cleared out of our last season's pack. That means you will have a chance to get more of the fresh, palatable goods packed by the Old Reliable factory at Belleville, which does its own processing, consequently you get quality every time.

Our long experience in Canning and supervising of growing the raw products, from the time the seed is sown until the goods are shipped, gives us a superior article that only can be produced by long, practical experience, combined with cleanliness and the most up-to-date process and machinery that can be procured.

Let us enumerate a few of the reasons why our goods are of a superior class and stocked by the careful grocer:

We make our own cans, only the best tin-plate that can be procured is used, consequently swells are a thing of the past, which saves a lot of profanity.

We attend to the practical side ourselves, consequently our goods are always uniform and attractive.

Our label, which has pleased our customers in the past, will be elegant this year, and with the contents inside the can, will please them much better, because they know they are canned in our own factory.

Our goods, once introduced, means you have a customer for life. Then don't disappoint him, but order early before our next year's pack is all booked.

"I WANT MY MONEY'S WORTH"

Of course you do, but are you getting it?

Don't think that because you have been "Held Up" in the past you will be in the future HONEST VALUE to our customers has always been our motto, and it always will be. Because other mill manufacturers make exorbitant profits on inferior goods is no reason for us to follow in their footsteps. And we DON'T intend to. Quality before quantity and a satisfied customer ALWAYS WAS, and will continue to be, our best reference and advertisement.

This mill will granulate 1½ lbs. coffee exceedingly fine in 1 minute. We underestimate its capacity rather than overestimate it. Users tell us they granulate 2 lbs. per minute. Another noteworthy feature is its simplicity, for it can be connected direct to your lamp socket. This eliminates extra expense for special wiring. Nickel-plated 2-lb. copper is part of regular equipment.

You can't beat it for compactness, neatness and stability. Length, 17 in.; width, 12 in.; height over all, 28 in.; weight, 80 lbs. You see, it takes but very little space and still fills in very attractively on account of its exquisite finish and beauty of appearance. And the price for complete machine ready to operate is $60 for D.C. current, and $70 for A.C. current.

Do you know that we have been manufacturing Coffee Mills for nineteen years and think we know how. Don't think that because the price is low the quality is likewise. We guarantee each machine perfect.

BANNER TRADE MARK.

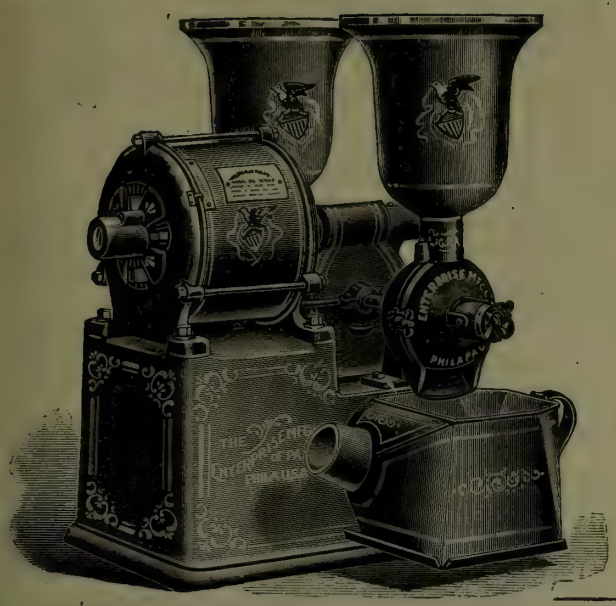
Superiority of Lamp Burners

BANNER TRADE MARK.

All our well-known makes of Lamp Burners, such as "ONTARIO," "CANADA," "BANNER," "CLIMAX," "HICONE," "SECURITY," and "BING," have the screwpart covered over with a cap which prevents the accumulation of dust, charred wick and matches, dead insects, etc., thus becoming saturated with oil and liable to catch fire or clog the wheels.

GUARDS are strong and substantially put on. The lower ends are securely fastened to the body of burner and are also clamped on in such a way that they cannot pivot around as they would if only held by a rivet.

RATCHETS are forced onto the shaft so they cannot become loose and do not require soldering.



MATERIAL. We use the very best quality of brass obtainable and every burner is lacquered so as to retain the bright finish.

GUARANTEE. Every burner of our manufacture is fully guaranteed.

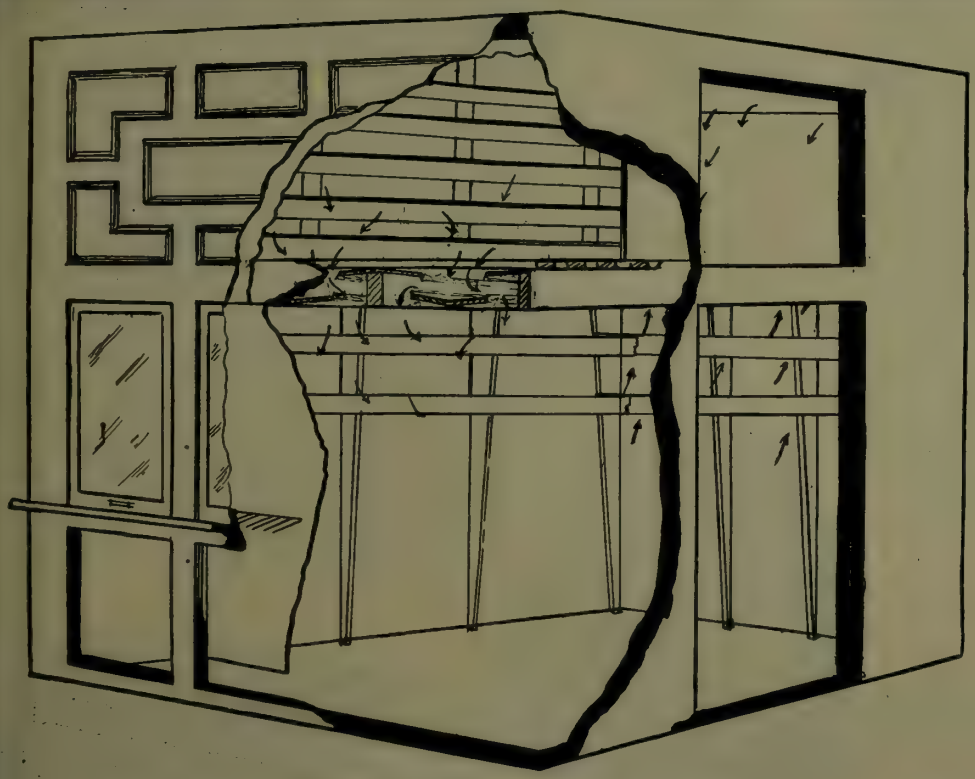
"Enterprise" Economy

An Enterprising grocer, who does things right, uses an "Enterprise" Electrically-Driven Coffee Mill.

The right way is also the cheapest way in the end. It always pays. Take the experience of the Philadelphia grocer who grinds 15,000 pounds of coffee a month with an "Enterprise" Mill electrically-driven at a cost for current of $3.00.



He bought the Mill as a great convenience—a time and labor saver, and an up-to-date attraction for his store. Its economy astonished him.

Look through our catalogue and you will find Mills of any capacity, any power required, for direct or alternating current. Your local power supply company will co-operate with advice and assistance.

The Mill illustrated here is No. 08712, fitted with ½ horse power motor for alternating current. Capacity of each iron hopper, 6 pounds of coffee. The ARCTIC REFRIGERATOR for BUTCHERS and GROCERS

The Pioneer Refrigerator of Canada

The accompanying cut will give some idea of the scientific construction of the Arctic Refrigerator. There is no refrigerator on the market that will give the same results.

The circulation of air is perfect, being widely distributed over the cooling room, below the pan. A temperature as low as 34 can be obtained, which will give you some idea of the keeping qualities of the Arctic. The air is perfectly dry.

Our Grocer Refrigerators are all built on the same principle, and our assortment of styles is unequalled.

Bad Bills--Slow Collections Something's Wrong

When a grocer fails his reason is usually: "bad accounts," or "couldn't collect." What's the use of such talk, when there's away to prevent the trouble?

ALLISON Coupon Books

Enable the grocer to keep all credit customers "under his thumb." And the best part of it is, the customers like the plan. Allison Coupon Books not only save many a dollar, but they SAVE MANY A BUSINESS.

How They Work

A man wants credit. You think he is good. Give him a $10 Allison Coupon Book. Have him sign the receipt or note form in the front of the book, which you tear out and keep. Charge him with $10 — No trouble. When he buys a dime's worth, tear off a ten-cent coupon, and so on until the book is used up. Then he pays the $10 and gets another book. No pass books, no charging, no lost time, no errors, no disputes. Allison Coupon Books are recognized everywhere as the best.

Klondike, Jubilee and Sterling Brooms

Among the many brands of Brooms there are none so well known the country over as Klondike, Jubilee and Sterling. This is not the result of any extensive advertising campaign, but they have come to the top solely upon their merits.

For the customer who wants a good heavy Broom, made of the very finest corn and having great staying qualities, there is no Broom to equal the KLONDIKE and when once used no substitute is accepted.

For those who desire the highest quality, with plenty of elasticity and medium weight the JUBILEE never fails to please.

For the rank and file who demand a good Broom of medium price the STERLING has long been a favorite and will give the best of satisfaction.

All these lines are made on selected maple handles, not daubed with cheap varnish, but highly polished, and this point tells in our favor every time. If you have not handled these lines, try them now.

We also manufacture the famous Keystone Brand Brushes, including the only line of solid back Hair Brushes made in Canada.

A Popular and Profitable Drink

SUNSET ORANGEADE

The BEST way to serve this refreshing beverage is from a SUNSET ORANGEADE COOLER.

A great many dealers—even those who have no Soda Fountain—are handling Sunset Orangeade from the Cooler and making a handsome profit.

It costs one cent a glass ready to serve at five cents—the dealer makes a profit of four cents on each glass. Does this not appeal to you?

The liquid does not come in contact with the cooling ice—a block tin pipe coil runs from the neck to outlet—a very small quantity of ice is required.

The proceeds from the first gallon will pay for the Cooler.

Simple to serve, and a genuine repeater.

One gallon concentrated makes eighteen (18) gallons ready to serve.

A MESSAGE TO THE TRADE

With this issue The Canadian Grocer again presents its annual Spring and Export Number. It is several years since the first Spring and Export Number was issued. We have tried to make each number better than the previous one and we believe that we have not failed in our purpose in the issue that is now before our readers. "Good enough" is never good enough for The Canadian Grocer, which strives for perfection. And as perfection is always a little ahead of us there is always an ideal for which we strive. The Canadian Grocer is now in its twenty-third year and has secured a position unique in the trade newspaper world. It covers Canada from ocean to ocean. Not only is it read regularly in the well known centres of trade and commerce in the country cross-roads stores; but it is to be found in the most remote parts of this growing Dominion, some of which are only accessible in the winter by dog teams and in the summer by canoes.

J. MEREDITH McKIM,
88 Fleet St., E.C., London, Eng.

But its influence is not confined to the Dominion, great and important as that is, but it extends to Great Britain, the United States, the West Indies, India, China, Japan, Ceylon, South Africa and Australia. It is acknowledged to be the leading grocery trade newspaper in the world. "It is a puzzle to me," remarked a well known grocery trade journalist in New York, "how you get out in Canada such a magnificent trade newspaper as the Canadian Grocer. There is nothing like it in the United States." He is not the only one who has uttered similar sentiments.

The mission of the Annual Spring and Export Number of The Canadian Grocer is two-fold. At its inception twelve years ago it was designed to assist in the upbuilding of the export trade of the Dominion. We have spent a great deal of money in furthering this idea, but by no means feel that our efforts have been in vain. Since the first Export Number was issued the export trade of the Dominion has doubled twice, and we have sufficient evidence to assure us that The Canadian Grocer has contributed something to this increase. Our proof is the connection which exporters in Canada have established with large importers in Great Britain and other parts of the world through advertising in The Canadian Grocer.

In the second place the purpose of this number is the betterment of the grocery trade of Canada. This purpose is held in view with every issue of the Canadian Grocer, but we try to make it even a little more so, if possible, in a number of this kind. At any rate we spend more money with that end in view, trusting that remuneration will come to us in the shape of increased circulation and a higher appreciation of our services by the trade. Since the last issue of the Special Spring and Export Number there has been the largest increase in circulation in the history of the paper. We are persuaded that during the ensuing twelve months there will be a still greater increase in the circulation. At any rate we are making plans with that end in view. We have stationed at about twenty leading commercial centres throughout this country our own special representatives whose duty it is to build up circulation. In addition to this list there are nearly 200 subscription agents who are devoting either whole or part of their time soliciting subscriptions. There is no other trade newspaper in Canada which has such a strong circulation organization as The Canadian Grocer.

J. P. SHARPE,

R. B. HUESTIS,

Besides the chief editorial and business offices at Montreal and Toronto we have important out-posts manned by our own men in London, Eng., New York, Chicago, Winnipeg and Vancouver. We have also agencies at Manchester, Eng.; Paris, France; Zurich, Switzerland. At these outposts, besides the business staff there are attached special writers who keep the publishing office well in touch with the outside world. Besides these and the regular editors at the office of publication, there are a number of special editors who contribute with more or less regularity to the columns of The Canadian Grocer. We have also correspondents who weekly send us the trade news at Halifax, St. John, Ottawa, Kingston, Belleville, Peterboro, Hamilton, London, Chatham, Fort William, Brandon, Regina, Saskatoon, Edmonton, Calgary, Victoria and other important centres. All this costs the publishers a good many thousand dollars annually, but the retail merchant can get it all for $2 per year. It would be cheap at $10. This fact must be patent to every one who considers that in each issue is given the latest news regarding the condition of the markets both at home and abroad, the latest ideas in window and interior arrangements, suggestions regarding advertising and store methods in general, and what retailers are doing throughout the country. Merchants and clerks who read The Canadian Grocer naturally find in it inspiration for better business methods and loftier aspirations, and all for about 3¾c per week.

To use an old colloquialism: "The latch-string is always outside the door" at either of our head offices, or our branch offices, to manufacturers and merchants. Whether you are at home or abroad, in Canada or in Great Britain or the United States or in the vicinity of any of our offices do not hesitate to pull the latch string; and if we can be of any service to you do not hesitate to command us. Our offices are not only for the doing of business and gathering of news, but they are also intended as a place in which we can welcome our friends in the trade, and where they can receive mail or write letters. Inside the door will always be found a hand to shake.

J. M. McKim, chief of the London office, and European manager, is a Toronto man. Fifteen years ago he joined the staff of the Maclean Publishing Co. He was assigned to the London office eight years ago, and has been successful in that important field.

R. B. Huestis who took charge of our New York office two years ago, was with A. B. Boak & Co., wholesalers, Halifax, N.S., for eight years, subsequently covering Canada from ocean to ocean as the representative of a banking institution. He was a member of the Toronto staff before being assigned to the New York office.

Eastern Townships Bank Building in which the new Montreal offices are located.

J. P. Sharpe, of the Chicago office, studied law for two years in Manitoba University. Taking up general brokerage, he identified himself for seven years with the business activities of the west. About three years ago he joined our Winnipeg staff and covered all west to the Pacific Coast for circulation work. Last year he was appointed manager of our Chicago office.

A thorough training in mercantile methods through his connection with a general store in Western Ontario was the initial stage of the business equipment of F. R. Munro, manager of the Winnipeg office. In 1903 he graduated from Toronto University, and for fifteen months was engaged first in editorial work, and subsequently as advertising solicitor on The Canadian Grocer at the Montreal office. He took charge of the Winnipeg office in 1904.

With such a staff of men in addition to our correspondents in all the important centres of the Dominion from Halifax to Vancouver, The Canadian Grocer is in a position to give its readers and advertisers the best possible service.

Particular attention is drawn to the cover of this issue. It represents a grocer who, although grown old in years and feeble in sight, still pins his faith to the pages of The Canadian Grocer. When all other journals have failed him, even after he has severed his connection with the trade he still adheres to his favorite paper. The original was a painting by Dickson Patterson, Esq., R.C.A., and was exhibited by the Canadian Government at the World's Fair at St. Louis. The Canadian Grocer has been enabled to reproduce it by special permission of the artist.

The Canadian Grocer is to-day the acknowledged authority in the grocery and allied trades. The market reports are taken as evidence in the law courts. This is because our editors are not only efficient but because they are uninfluenced by any ulterior motives or by any particular firm or firms. It is quite true that at times our prices may vary somewhat from those quoted by some houses, but they always represent the average obtained by inquiries among all possible sources of information. It has spent a great deal of money and time in fighting the battles of the trade. Wherever an injustice has existed it has not hesitated to seek its removal. Dominion and Provincial Governments have more than once been compelled to remove or modify anomalies which unwise legislation or irksome regulations had created in the trade. It believes in the grocery trade's importance and possibilities and our columns are always at the disposal of those who have a just grievance to air or a good cause to advance.

E. J. DODD.
Lieutenant to Mr. McKim in the London office.

Exhaustive History of the Currant and Currant Vine

Sources of the World's Supply and Story of the Development of the Fruit and of Trade With Foreign Countries—Difficulties Met in the Cultivation—Peculiar Differences in Tastes of People in Different Lands—England the Most Generous Customer of the Producer—The Uses of the Currant in Culinary Operations.

By T. A. Burlumi.

It is with great pleasure that I accede to the courteous request of The Canadian Grocer, to write for the benefit af the Canadian grocers an article upon Currants, about which, although now of universal consumption, little is known by their users. If long connection and association with an industry can constitute a title to special knowledge, I can lay claim to such title in the matter of currants. I may say that I was born in a currant plantation, and that I have just passed the fortieth anniversary of my connection with the raising, the shipping and the distribution of currants. As an introduction to my subject I propose to give you first a short history of currants and of the currant vine.

Greece, the Home of the Currant.

It is a fact that in spite of the liberal education which has been lately forced upon the general public by some benevolent institution, few of the consumers of currants are aware that this wholesome and delicious fruit can be grown only in a few districts of Greece and that all attempts to transplant the currant-vine in other lands of nearly similar climatic conditions, such as Asia Minor, Sicily, California and others have failed. In the two states of the Australian Commonwealth, Victoria and South Australia, an insignificant quantity of so called currants is produced, but it is too small to affect the position here described. In Greece itself it thrives only on a narrow strip of land, beginning at the end of the southern shore of the gulf of Corinth, by the town of that name, and continuing uninterruptedly round the coast of the Peleponnesus round to Cape Matapan in Laconia. This strip is seldom broader than five miles inland, while in many parts its breadth does not exceed one mile. It lies, in almost its whole length of about 250 miles, between the sea on its north western side and a range of high hills on its south eastern. It has been ascertained that the currant plant is a failure farther inland and that where a combination of mountain air and sea breeze is not available, the currant grape does not mature. The currant-vine thrives in four of the Ionian Islands, viz., Zante, Cephalonia, Ithaca and Lefkas (Santa Maura), but it fails in the other three, Corfu, Paxos and Cerigo. It also thrives in a narrow strip of land on the northern shore of the gulf between Lepanto and Vonizza.

First Nursing of the Vines.

The history of currants goes back to the era of mythology. It is probable that the first wine which mankind ever tasted was made from dried grapes, such as currants. As the cradle of the vine, historians have successively mentioned the lands by the banks of the Euphrates and by the shores of the Caspian sea; the valleys of Yemen and of Arabia Felix; the plains of Mingrelia and of Georgia; of Armenia and of Tabriz; of Sennaar and of many other countries.

T. A. BURLUMI, Patras, Greece, Author of this Article on the History of the Currant.

This mass of suppositions is evidently responsible for the general belief that this precious and beautiful plant was at first reared in the temperate corner of Western Asia. It is surmised that the inhabitants of this part of the world made their wine, in prehistoric times, from grapes dried in the sun, and to the beverage thus obtained they attributed divine origin. Hence the ancient Greeks, for several centuries, gave the preference to wine made from dried to that made from fresh grapes. Theopompus says that the islanders of Chios were the first to plant the vine and to make wine from the grape, an art which was imparted to them by Oneopoeos, the son of Bacchus, and which they afterwards taught to other mortals.

Another legend has it that Bacchus taught the art to Icarus as a reward for his hospitality to the vine-garlanded god. The nectar on the Olympian dinner table is believed to have been nothing less than a decoction made of honey and of dried-grape wine. We have this information from Ariston of Chios. Pliny, writing in the first century of the Christian era, mentions the tiny Greek grape, of fine quality and of thin skin. Be this as it may, the Greeks of the present day will hear of no other land as the mother of the currant-vine than the classic plains of Corinth, from which the product derives its Greek name, meaning "Corinthian Raisin," of which the English word "currants" is, no doubt, a slight corruption.

A Thousand Years Silent.

After Pliny, currants disappear from the pages of history for over a thousand years, but soon after the occupation of the Peleponnesus by the Franks, in the thirteenth century, they reappear and the inhabitants of countries less favored by sunshine than Greece, began to show some appreciation of the fruit which gradually became an article of commerce. Professor Thorold Rogers, in his "History of Prices" gives us the prices of currants, known then under the name of "Raisins de Corauntz," for the years 1334 to 1377 in several English markets. The average of these prices comes to about two pence three farthings per pound. Taking the relative values of money and of commodities at that time, this price would be about equal to five shillings per pound at the present time.

In the fifteenth century currants were already a recognized article of commerce in Western Europe, but it appears that in England a special licence was required for trading in currants. In the year 1448 a certain John Weldon was, according to the chronicler, condemned to a fine of three shillings and fourpence for having bought currants (byinge of Reysins Corent). In the year 1453 the weighing charge was a penny per carotel or barrel (ye butte or ye barele of Reysens of Corent). In 1463 the price of a pound of "Reysonys off Corawnce" was threepence and in 1512 the Duke of Northumberland paid at twopence per pound for the supplies required by his household. In 1554 the Stationers' Guild procured "5 punde of Currans" for a shilling and eightpence, with the object of giving a banquet. In 1582 the traveler Hakluit wrote: "Since we are trading with Zante the plant producing the 'coren' has been transplanted here and although it does not give perfect fruit, still what it gives us is pleasing to the eye." During the last twenty years of the sixteenth century English traders had formed close commercial relations with the Venetians in the Ionian Islands and with the Turks in the Peloponnesus. In 1581 Queen Elizabeth granted to Alderman Osborn a licence of exclusive trading with the "Great Turke." This licence was transferred in 1592 to the "Levant Company" to which the monopoly of the "small fruits called currants, being the Raysins of Corinth" was made over. This appears to be the first time that the fruit was spelt as we spell it now. Ten years earlier the Queen's Ambassador in Constantinople was for the first time received in audience by the Grand Seigneur who up to that time considered Her Majesty as only a simple princess, under the suzerainty of the French. It would appear that the Turks of the sixteenth century were not much different to their descendants of the twentieth, for Hakluit mentions that in the year 1585 the merchants sent a petition to the Viceroy of the Morea praying that he would protect them and their servants from the depredations of the Patras Yanitzaries, and to instruct Mahmoud House, Nadir of Lepanto, to give back to them or pay the value of three hundred bags of currants which they had forcibly taken from a vessel arrived from the Morea. It appears from the answer of the Viceroy that the Nadir extorted under various pretexts rich presents called even at that time "backshish." "He is not satisfied," say the petitioners, "in collecting the King's dues on currants, but he demands from the poor money with which he buys currants at a low price and then forces the currants upon us at much higher prices, pretending that the currants belong to the King, and in this way he causes loss and injustice to the poor."

Ancient History of the Vine.

The transplantation of the currant-vine in the Ionian Islands must have occurred in the second half of the sixteenth century. John Locke, in his description of Zante in the year 1553, says: "The island can supply twenty thousand warriors, but I wonder how it can feed such a large population since its principal product is wine and all the rest quite insignificant." Later on, in 1586, the island is described by Hakluit as producing wine and currants. At about the same time the currant-vine must have been planted in Cephalonia, for Sandos, writing in 1610, mentions currants amongst the products of this island, while of Zante he says that its prosperity was due to currants whose export to England and Holland brought in about 150,000 zeckins per annum, in addition to the 48,000 dollars which it pays as tribute to the Republic of Saint Mark. A zeckin was a Venetian coin worth about two and one half dollars. In the year 1612 Coryatt says: "Zante is known in many parts of Europe, Asia and Africa, because it sends them wine, oil and currants."

It is evident from the foregoing that the trade in currants at the end of the sixteenth and the beginning of the seventeenth century was carried on in the islands of Zante and Cephalonia, and that the Peloponnesus from which the islands had taken it was not wholly excluded from it. Morrison writes in 1617: "The English who live in the islands of Zante and Cephalonia, under Venice, and in Patras in the gulf of Corinth, under the Grand Turk, are exporting currants." Weller writes in 1682: "The currants of Patras are considered the best of that district, but the quantity is quite insignificant, as Patras, Nathalingo (the present Aetolikon) and Messolonghi together produce barely a cargo per year." Of course a cargo of that time could not have been anything more than a sailing vessel holding perhaps 100 tons. Tavernier, writing in 1687 says: "Corinth exports large quantities of currants, so does Patras, but this is the only trade of these two towns." Raidolff writes in 1689: "The first currant-vines were planted on the plains of Corinth. The country round Vostizza produces wheat, wine and currants." Raidolff speaks of the productiveness of Patras, but he does not mention currants among its products.

In Culinary Operations.

According to Parkinson, writing in 1629, there was then made in England a liberal use of currants both in bread-making and in cookery. He mentions the following ingredients as indispensable in the production of "payn puff": pumpkin, ginger, the yellow of eggs, dates and currants. He gives recipes for succulent dishes, among which one called "haberlade" required boiled lard with vegetables, dates and currants. Another mixture was to consist of pigeons, poulardes, currants, sugar and salt. The "tartolette" ought to contain among other ingredients, pork, eggs, currants; the "fish pye" could not be perfect without turbot, haddock, coddlings, dates, prunes and currants, while the "superior pye" required as a solid foundation a capon stuffed with minced steak, wild ducks, snipe, and should be spiced with nutmeg, cloves and currants. King, in his Art of Cookery, published in 1709, drops into poetry and gives us these lines:

"Our fathers most admired their sauces sweet,

CURRANTS DRIED AND READY FOR GATHERING.

And often asked for sugar with their meat,
They buttered currants on fat veal bestowed,
And rumps of beef with virgin honey strewed."

When the grocer, Allen, became, in 1659, Lord Mayor of London, his triumphant procession round the city included plants of cloves and of currants, the products of which, together with other kinds of fruit, were scattered to the people by an Arab attendant, while an itinerant poet harangued the processionists to this effect: "Your figs come from Faro, your currants from Zante, your raisins from Malaga and from various other countries your pepper and your dates." Then he sung the same in verse:

"Your currants from Zant
When your worships want
Come flying as wood
In vessels so good,
And raisins, you know,
Come from Maligo."

In the almanac of poor Robin, of 1675, the Christmas fare is described in verse: ,

"Then thy coyn freely bestow
For raisins sun, and Maligo,
No currants, prunes nor sugar lack Pepper, both the white and black.'

How Name Was Obtained.

The first and best description of the cultivation of currants is to be found in the itineraries of Spon & Weller. Dr. Spon was a French physician from Lyons and Weller a young student of the University of Oxford, to which, after his travels, he returned to continue his studies. These two travelers published their impressions and experience, each in his own language. Dr. Spon says: "Currants owe their name to the town of Corinth, and though they are not grown now in that district, it is certain that they were some time in the past. The name also indicates that the plant originated in Corinth. I made enquiries in the town and was told that not long ago currants were grown there and that even now they are grown in small quanaities in the village of Vassilika, in ancient Sikyon, about six miles from Corinth. The cultivation of the plant had been neglected because the Turks do not use the fruit. Besides, since the expulsion of the Christians (he means, evidently, the Franks) the Turk has built two forts at the entrance of the Gulf of Lepanto and does not permit the passage of our ships for fear that the forts may be suddenly occupied or attacked by Maltese pirates entering the gulf on the pretext of shipping currants. Notwithstanding this prohibition currants are gathered in Lepanto and in Vostizza and from these places they are carried for shipment to Patras where they are also grown. These three districts make up the cargo of a ship of moderate capacity. Just opposite Patras, in the land of the ancient Aetotians, lies a village called Anatolikon, having 2,000 inhabitants, and built upon a marsh like Venice. The villagers grow currants, the quality of which is fine and their size twice as large as that of the Zante currants. Anatolikon and Messolonghi produce enough currants to load a large ship. When I was there, an English merchant was loading his ship. It was a pleasant sight to watch a fleet of small canoes carrying to the large vessel six or seven bags of currants each. Whenever the wind became boisterous the canoes disappeared like a swarm of bees. The Englishman paid no duty, but he had to present the Voevoda of Anatolikon with a gift of one thousand crowns. This was profitable to the merchant, because the duty in Zante was one crown per cwt. The large island of Cephalonia, together with Ithaca, produce about seven to eight cargoes, and Zante about one-half of this quantity. One thousand pounds cost twenty-four crowns, but the first cost is only ten crowns and the rest are duties and taxes."

SPREADING FRESH CURRANT BUNCHES ON THE DRYING GROUND.

On the Golden Island.

The other traveler, Weller, writes: "Zante has been called 'the Golden Island,' a name which she deserves for the fertility of her soil and for the pleasure she affords to those residing on her, but above all, she deserves it because the Venetians receive from her, and from Cephalonia, sufficient gold to keep up their Armada. Zante is the first island from which we receive the currants out of which we make in England such delicious dishes. The name of currants is derived from Corinth, the famous town by the isthmus of Morea. Hence, their Latin name 'Uva Corinthiaca.'

"Currants are not now grown in Corinth, probably because there is no sale for them owing to the jealousy of the Turks who have forbidden large vessels the entrance into the Gulf. Here the price of currants is twelve dollars per thousand pounds, and as much more has to be paid to Venice as duty. This island (Zante) produces enough for five to six cargoes, Cephalonia for three to four, and one cargo is made up by Nathalingo (Aetolikon), Messolonghi and Patras, together with what is brought there from the Gulf of Lepanto. To carry on this trade the English keep here a consul and five or six merchants; the Dutch a consul and two or three merchants, and the French one merchant, who is also the consul. The largest share of the trade goes to the English, and this is just right because the English eat six times as many currants as the French and the Dutch together. The Zantiotes have no idea of the use we make of their currants. Some of them are quite convinced that we use them as a dye and cannot imagine our Christmas cakes, our plum puddings and our other delicacies."

Advance of the Cultivation.

We are justified in concluding from the foregoing that currants were at first produced around Corinth; that their cultivation gradually extended along the whole of the Peloponnesian coast of the Gulf of Corinth and the shores of the Aetolia. That from there the raising of currants was introduced into the islands of Zante, Cephalonia and Ithaca. After the conquest of Peloponnesus by the Turks the cultivation of the currant vine was restricted, and in parts, as in Corinth, it was wholly abandoned, while in the Ionian Islands it prospered and contributed in taxes a considerable amount of money to the Venetian Republic. Beaujour, Consul of France in 1790, writes: "The plant is not indigenous to Peloponnesus, because none of those who wrote about it previous to the sixteenth century mention it, while the conclusion of my own researches points to the introduction of the plant into Peloponnesus from Naxos, about the year 1580. It is true that no such plant is now to be found in Naxos, but it is no less true that it is not found in Corinth. Yet, certain it is that it was cultivated there at the time of the Venetians."

A colleague of Beaujour, Consul of France in the Ionian Islands during the years 1787-1798, writes: "The first plants were imported into Zante from Corinth about two centuries ago. Precise accounts about the time or about the first importers are not available, but conclusions are drawn from examination of the ordinances of the Venetian Senate which regulate the customs dues.

"We have seen that currants were then subjected to heavy duties both by the Turks and the Venetians. But the duties in England, which imported once and even down to our own times, about six-sevenths of the whole crop, were not less onerous. In the reign of James the First a merchant named Bates protested against the imposition of an additional duty of five shillings per cwt. over and above the existing tariff of half a crown. Bates brought an action against the Treasury but the judges decided against him for fear that they might offend the King. In the year 1600 the Levant Company, which had lost its privilege of exclusive trading with the east, appealed for redress to the Highest Council of Elizabeth. In their petition the company say: "We have protested against the new duty not so much on account of the amount, though this would reach four thousand pounds, which currants cannot bear, but on account of our inability to continue this trade. The Venetians are employing all possible means to oust us from that country and the loss of the Royal favor will embolden the Venetian Senate to put in our way greater obstacles." The petition of the company was of no avail, and the state council commanded the treasurer to collect forthwith the duties on currants, on raisins, and on oil, which were formerly collected by the company, on payment to the state of a lump sum.

In the year 1604 the duty was raised to seven shillings per cwt., and in 1613 it was made over for seven years, at an annual rental, to three individuals. There have been several changes up and down in the meantime until in 1794 we find the duty in England at twenty-two shillings and sixpence per cwt. In 1806 the duty was raised to twenty-eight shillings, in 1809 to thirty-seven and fourpence, and in 1813 to forty-four and fourpence. In 1834 it was reduced to just one-half, on representations from the High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands. In 1844 it was further reduced to fifteen and ninepence, to seven shillings in 1860 and to two shillings the present duty, in 1890, by the late Lord, then Mr. Goschen.

Genealogy of the Vine.

We leave now history on one side to say something about the genealogy of the currant vine. The currant vine is a variety of the ordinary grape-vine (Vitis vinifera). Certain authorities have even contended that it is a degenerate descendant of the grape-vine,having lost in consequence of some disease, its seed and with it the power of self-reproduction. This is a mistake. As a matter of fact, the currant, like the grape-vine, may be said to be immortal. When an old plant, which may have lived over 100 years, shows decided signs of decay, a grave is dug round its roots and the old trunk is buried into it with one or two of its latest shoots attached to it. These shoots are left to project out of the ground about five to six inches and are fed by the buried parent for two or three years, at the end of which they become full bearing plants. Thus does the vine reproduce itself. The most appropiate soil for the plantation of the currant vine is one composed of gypseous or calcareous marls, because they allow of the deep penetration of the roots of the vine, which go very deep, in fact much deeper than the roots of other shrubs of the same size.

Propagation is effected by grafting on stocks of the grape-vine or by planting out in the spring the young, vigorous and specially selected shoots obtained at the end of the previous year from full-grown currant vines. The shoots are planted about three to four feet apart on carefully prepared and well-tilled garden plots. The grafts bear full crops in four to five years, the slips in six to seven. A full-grown currant plant, when clad in all its foliage, rises about as high over the ground as the ordinary English currant shrub, but the resemblance ends there. The currant vine looks so much like the grape vine that only an expert can tell the one from the other. The shapes of the leaves are exactly alike, but the green color of those of the currant plant is a little darker than that of the leaves of the grape plant.

Cultivation Done by Hand.

Let us now enter a currant plantation and watch the course of the cultivation of the currant vine, which requires so much labor and diligent attention that to adequately describe it we say, in Greece, that a currant planter enters his farm on October the first and comes out of it on September the thirtieth of the following year. I will take you rapidly through the principal operations. Please remember that all the work has to be done by hand. Almost before the fall of the leaf the planter must have a basin, about a foot deep, hoed round each plant. This is necessary to retain the water of the autumnal rains as long as possible round the plant in order that its beneficial action may reach the farthest roots. Soon after, the clearing of the plant by expert gardeners is taken in hand. They cut off superfluous shoots and clear away weakly and decayed wood, leaving only two to four shoots for fruit bearing in the next season, according to the age and the vigor of the plant. These shoots or branches are cut back to the third or second bud, which is also called an eye, before digging is commenced, and the medium shoots are pruned off. In January the digging, which is the most expensive work, commences and lasts up to March. The whole farm is dug up into little conical mounts round each vine. In March the eyes begin to bud out and when the young and tender shoots are about a foot long the conical mounts are dispersed and the ground is levelled. All this while, and up to harvest time, the planter has to be very vigilant in guarding and defending the young shoots against the numerous enemies of the vine of which I will have to say something presently.

In May the flowering begins and immediately after it the ring-cutting has to be done. This is an incision round the stock going no deeper than the bark, and its object is to prevent the sap from descending to the root, but to retain it instead at the upper part of the plant, so as to feed and enlarge the size of the berries. This ring-cutting is a recent discovery, for it was unknown fifty years ago, and the currant berries were then only about half their present size. We are now at the end of May; the shoots are daily expanding. A luxuriant foliage surrounds the fruit, which is formed into clusters of bunches, and protects it against the too ardent rays of the sun. By the middle of June the foliage must be thinned and the bunches exposed to the sun, so that the ripening may not be retarded.

SULPHURING THE CURRANT VINES.

The long branches heavily laden with fruit, must be supported on strong wooden poles, else they fall to the ground and the fruit perishes.

An Enemy Barred From Greece.

I mentioned already the enemies of the vine. There are a good many of them and they are broadly divided into insects and vegetable parasites. Of the former the most dreaded is phylloxera vastatrix. Greece has happily escaped so far the invasion of this destructive insect. Very drastic preventive measures have been taken by the Greek Government as soon as the phylloxera made its appearance in Europe and began to ravage the rich vineyards of France and of the other viniferous countries. The importation of plants, of flowers, of green fruit and of several other products of the vegetable kingdom has been strictly prohibited. This fell enemy of the vine surounded us on all sides. It ruined the sultana plantations of Asia Minor, atttacked the vines of Sicily, of Crete, and of several islands of the Aegean Sea, but it has been kept out of Greece. Once attacked by this terrible scourge the vine is doomed. France and the other affected countries have had to reconstitute their vineyards by the substitution of the American vine, which has proved immune to the attacks of the phylloxera. The reason of this immunity is said to be the inability of the insect on penetrate the bark of the American plant. Nurseries of this vine have been established in several parts of Europe and the young American plants are grafted with the desired variety and in two years after grafting they begin to bear fruit.

THE HARBOR OF PATRAS.

They Hunt With Torches.

Another insect which attacks the currant vine is a little black thing of the coleoptera species called carab. It commences its depredations as soon as the vine begins to bud. The planters hunt it at night, visiting each plant with a torch in one hand while with the other they capture the insects off the buds and place them into a tube, which at the end of their hunt they empty into a blazing fire. At the flowering, if the weather is wet, another dreaded enemy, the coulure, attacks the vine and hinders the process of fertilization. There is also the pyrallis, a kind of tiny butterfly, which has to be guarded against. Later on when the fruit is ripe, it is attacked by worms whose number increases rapidly, if atmospheric conditions are favorable.

Of the fungoid diseases of the vine the most destructive are the oidium and the peronospora viticola. The oidium first attacked the currant-vine in 1851, and for five consecutive years there was practically no crop. It was eventually discovered that sprinkling the vine with finely ground sulphur was an effective remedy and ever since the planter has to watch carefully and proceed to sulphuring his vines betimes and very often. In humid temperature the sulphuring has to be repeated several times.

he peronospora is really the mildew and it is more virulent than the oidium. Given favorable atmospheric conditions it develops with great rapidity and can devastate a plantation within twenty-four hours. The crop of currants was reduced by the peronospora in 1900 from 180,000 tons to 46.000, and in the year 1906, we lost through the same cause about twenty-five per cent. of the crop. The peronospora is combatted by spraying all parts of the vine, and especially the leaves which are the first to suffer, with a solution of sulphate of copper and lime. The spraying has to be repeated as often as there is any sign of the presence of the malady. There are other diseases such as the blackrot, the anthracose, the caterpillar and others, but enough has been said in this respect to show how much the poor currant grower has to contend against before he can gather the fruit of his arduous labor.

By the end of July the fruit is partly ripe for cutting. The fresh fruit is very luscious and highly flavored, but it is so delicate that it cannot stand a long voyage and it has been found so far impossible to market it as a dessert outside Greece. The drying grounds, or wooden trays, are prepared by a special treatment to receive the fruit. The work of cutting the bunches is in a great measure done by peasant girls.

When Rain is Dreaded.

They cut only the ripe bunches by scissors and place them in baskets which when full are carried to the drying grounds. There, experienced laborers lay one by one the bunches on the trays close to one another after cutting off unripe and unsound berries. There is no chemical treatment whatever, such as is necessary in the case of raisins and sultanas which are dipped into a solution of soda, or in lye, in order to accelerate the drying process. The drying of currants is effected simply by evaporation through the action of the sun. The fruit is exposed to the sun for ten to twelve days according to the temperature. During this time the planter dreads the advent of rain. For though the fruit can be protected by stacking the trays one upon the other, or by spreading over the drying grounds tarpaulins fixed on short poles, about a foot above the fruit, the cooling of the atmosphere retards the process of desiccation. The delay causes great inconvenience and even danger, for, the grounds being full, there is no accommodation for the second and third cuting which follow each other at intervals of about ten days after the first and in the ordinary course as soon as the previous cutting has been dried and removed. Happily it is very seldom that we have rain at this time of the year in Greece and even if there is a shower, it only lasts a few minutes and it is generally succeeded by glorious sunshine which soon repairs the mischief.

Of late years a new process of drying under shade has been put into practice for the finest currants, but it is an expensive and a tedious process, as it requires more than double the time. The bunches in this case are hung up on strings and placed inside a slight wooden hut which is exposed to the sun. Currants so dried retain their fine silky texture and their blue black colour and they feel very soft to the touch. When the currants are thoroughly dried they are picked off their stalks and carried to the winnowing and separating machines. After going through the machines they are ready for marketing.

The World's Currantopolis.

I must now take you to the principal currant market of the world, which is the City of Patras, at the entrance to the Gulf of Corinth. Currants are sold, bought and shipped in several other Greek towns, but Patras is the chief centre of the currant export trade, and it is most aptly called Currantopolis.

The average weight of currants exported annually in the last five years is about 120,000 tons, and more than half of this was shipped at Patras. The growers, or their middlemen, send the currants to Patras by sea in small craft, or by rail, and there they are sought by the exporters at varying prices according to quality. The price obtained by the growers varies from two to four cents per pound of dried currants and when it is considered that it takes from four to five pounds of fresh fruit to make one pound of dried currants, the price cannot be considered excessive. The packing, the freight, the other intermediate charges, and the duties raise the price to the consumer considerably, but even then very good currants can be bought from the grocers in Canada at from seven to eight cents per pound. The best qualities are produced on the shores of the Corinthian Gulf and the best of the best are grown at Vostizza.

The whole crop is broadly divided by the trade into two categories—the fine qualities and the provincial qualities. The first category comprises the produce of Vostizza, Gulf, Patras and Zante. The second that of Amalias, Filiatra, Pyrgos and the other districts. The currants are cleaned once more by the exporter, sorted into sizes and the little tails cut off by special machinery.

Canadian Consumers' Taste.

Certain countries like the currants large and others prefer them small. It is strange to notice this difference of taste. I will mention two extreme cases in Germany; Cologne wants the boldest berries possible, while Dusseldorf, only about twenty miles lower down the Rhine, will have nothing but small berries. The confectioners and bakers like the smallest possible berries, known as siftings, because a pound of them goes in their trade much farther than a pound of large berries. Holland prefers the fruit of Cephalonia, because it is small sized, and America takes mostly the provincial, because it is large. Canada has a predilection for Filiatra and Amalias, with a yearly increasing appetite for the finer sorts such as Vostizza and Panariti, the latter being the finest quality grown in the district of Corinth.

In the matter of package, there is also a divergence of tastes. England takes only quarter cases containing about 50 pounds of fruit. Germany takes cases and half cases of 120 and 60 pounds respectively. Holland takes barrels of 250 pounds each, the United States of America takes larger barrels of 350 pounds, while the Australian Colonies and Canada take the fruit mostly in half cases. The packing is done by experienced workmen and the packages are then weighed under the supervision and control of the Customs authorities and put on board the steamers.

The Amount Produced.

The statistics being very troublesome and difficult to carry in one's memory, I shall give only a few round figures. The land under currant cultivation is about 150,000 acres. It is mainly owned by small peasant proprietors numbering over 60,000, so that each preprietor owns on an average two and one-half acres. The land belonged originally to the State, but it was by law allotted to the people on easy terms. The average yield per acre may be taken at one ton, but the yield varies considerably from district to district; it is the same with the cost of production.

The production has increased by leaps and bounds in the last fifty years. In the early part of the last century and during the first years of the Greek war of independence, few currants were exported from the Peloponnesus. In 1825, the crop was barely 1,000 tons and in 1828 about 2,000 tons were smuggled away to Trieste and Malta. In 1831, just on the eve of the liberation of Greece, the whole crop of the Peloponnesus was 2,300 tons. In 1845, it was increased to 6,500 and to 27,000 tons in 1851. There were no crops from 1851 to 1856 on account of the oidium, but in 1860 the crop attained 52,000 tons including 13,000 from the Ionian Islands. In 1871, we produced 81,000 and in 1878, 101,000 tons. In 1888 the production, stimulated by the high prices paid by the French wine makers attained 160,000 tons, and by 1895, it was further increased to 177,000. The record crop was so far, that of 1903 as it gave us 183,000 tons, but that of 1908, bids fair to run it very close.

The protective tariffs of France and Russia dealt a heavy blow to the currant industry. France had become the best customer of the currant grower, in 1889, she took over 70,000 tons of his currants, about one-half of the whole crop, and turned them into wine to supplement her own vintage, largely diminished by the ravages of the phyloxera. When her vineyards had been replanted with the American plants and her vintage increased, she legislated currants out of her territory. The same was the case later on with Russia. In 1896, that country took over 30,000 tons, but in 1897, she put on a duty of $90 per ton, increased since to $135 and so she has effectually shut them out of her territory. Neither France nor Russia produce currants and the heavy duties are intended to protect their wine industry, because dried currants are capable of producing excellent wine. The exclusion of currants from these two countries brought on a severe crisis which would have ruined the currant industry, had not the Greek Government come to its assistance by special legislation. The surplus currants have been diverted into industrial channels and the grower is enabled to sell his crop at a price covering at least the cost of production.

The Grower's Best Customer.

England is and has always been the best and most generous customer of the currant producer. She does not use yet so many currants per head of her population as Holland, but she takes more than any other country and she buys the best qualities and pays the highest prices. The available British statistical records go as far back as 1678 and in that year 1,840 tons of currants were imported. The figures vary little in the following twenty-five years, but in 1701, 2,382 and in 1726, 2,943 tons were brought in. The figures then took a downward course until in 1757 they dropped to 1,056 tons. They rose to 1,768 tons in 1767, 2,604 in 1778 and 3,911 in 1795. In 1820, the annual consumption was 5,631 tons and the price on December 31st, 110s per cwt., with the duty at 44s 4d. In 1835, the consumption rose to 9,685 tons and the price had dropped to 68s, with the duty reduced to 22s 2d. Ten years later we find the consumption at 15,489 tons, the price at 48s, and the duty at 15s 9d. In 1860, the consumption had increased to 32,081 tons, the prices were from 25s to 34s, and the duty at 7s. In 1880, the consumption rose to 41,861 with the prices at 29s to 41s. In 1890, the duty was reduced to 2s per cwt. and the consumption jumped up from 45,039 in 1889 to 55,765 tons in 1890, with the prices at 22s to 39s.

There have been since violent fluctuations in prices but the consumption remained about stationery. The record consumption was in 1907, reaching 63,745 tons, with prices from 20s to 35s per cwt. duty paid. The country standing first in the consumption of currants is Holland with about five pounds per capita. The British Isles and New Zealand follow at a distance with about three pounds. The Australian Commonwealth takes nearly two pounds per head.

Canada Likes Currants.

The deliveries for home consumption in Canada were in 1908, 10,503,366 pounds, equal to about one and one-half pounds and Germany follows Canada with a little under one pound. Belgium takes just over and the United States just under half a pound per capita. Currants are used in smaller quantities all the world over, including Japan and China.

This article having grown to larger dimensions than I originally intended to give it, I refrain from saying anything about the merits of currants. I leave every reader to form his or her own conclusions from personal experience, confident that such conclusions cannot be other than very favourable to currants.

IN FINE NEW BUILDING.

Ottawa Wholesale Grocers Vacate Their Old Stand and Move Into New Establishment.

On May 1 Provost & Allard, wholesale grocers, Ottawa, vacated the premises on York Street they occupied for years, to move into their large new warehouse, 41 to 47 Clarence Street, but a block away.

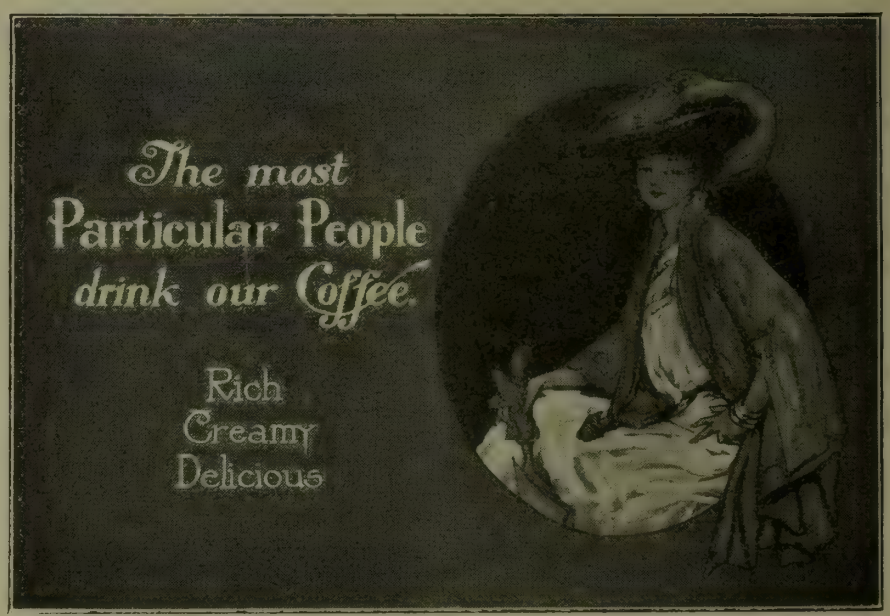
The growing business of the firm made the move necessary, as the old warehouse was not nearly large enough to suit them. In the new building, which is 66 feet wide and has a depth of 200 feet, they will have at their disposal 20,000 square feet of floor space. The building runs through to Murray Street, and is up-to-date in every particular, many special alterations having been made before the purchase was accomplished. Throughout it is fireproof and the floors are all well-lighted and high-ceilinged. The offices will take up the whole ground floor front, while the rest of the warehouse will be used for storage purposes and the transaction of the firm's shipping business. There are three storeys and a splendid basement, with easy access to all by an electric hoist.

Both Mr. Provost and Mr. Allard are proud of their purchase. Both are veterans in the grocery business and in the buying of the new property they have shown that they are experienced and know quite well the needs of a modern wholesale grocery in warehouse accommodation. Two other features of the new stores to be commended are the central location of the buildings, and the considerable yard accommodation.

Advantages of Show Cards in Displaying Goods

A Simple Advertisement Used by the Few—Particularly Beneficial When Goods Are Seasonable—The Method of Manufacture of the Show Card and How it Can be Made Effective.

By J. L. Wyckoff, Manager T. A. Rowat & Co.'s Branch Store, London, Ont.



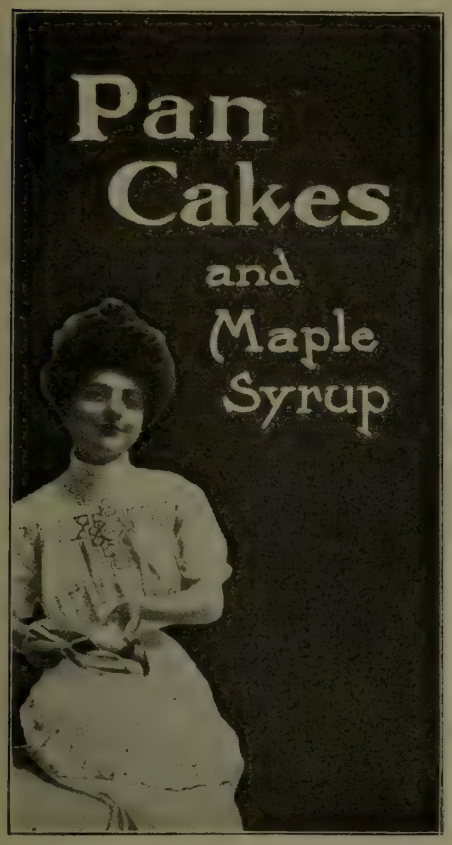
The use of signs as a method of advertising originated hundreds of years ago. In those days very few people could read or write so the tradespeople were compelled to use some sort of a sign to mark their places of business; but as people became more educated these signs gradually disappeared until at the present day about the only signs which survive this olden-time method of advertising are the three golden balls of the pawnbroker and the red, white and blue barber pole.

The merchants of years ago realized the benefit to be derived from erecting some kind of a sign on their building to advertise their business; so must the present-day merchant realize the fact that to be able to meet the keen competition of the advanced times he must use modern methods of advertising. Two of the most up-to-date and inexpensive methods are the show windows and a liberal use of show cards. The goods must be properly displayed and attached to them should be cards calling attention to the quality and price. With very few exceptions this is not usually done in grocery stores.

Cards for Seasonable Goods.

A few grocers have realized that their windows are the best advertisement they have and their sales greatly increase by changing often and keeping seasonable goods displayed. But even in these stores there is a lack of price cards. It is not necessary to mark up every article in the store, but the seasonable goods on display should be properly ticketed and especially the goods in the show window.

The grocer buys a line of goods of good quality that could be sold at a profit below the regular price. If a window display is put in with these goods and a neatly written card announcing that the goods are of high quality and the price much lower than the regular is placed in a prominent place in the display, would the goods sell? They would "sell like hot cakes" and the card is the medium which causes the sales. If the goods are displayed without a card very little would be sold. Now then, if a card sold these special price goods, would not properly written cards sell goods at the regular price?



An appropriate arrangement of Words and Picture.—Note.—The cards shown in this article are the work of J. L. Wyckoff.

Show cards should not be very elaborate, but should be neatly written, so that when placed in a conspicuous place in the window they would catch the eye of every passer-by. The card should not be crowded with a lot of words; people will not stop to read a long sentence on a card, but just a few words that can be read at a glance will arrest the attention every time and that is the purpose of the show card—to attract attention to the goods displayed—for when people stop to look at your show window it means a sale nearly every time. This has been my experience.

The most important part of a show card is the general layout. There should be plenty of margin around the card and the letters correctly spaced. The card will be attractive even if the letters are not accurately drawn.

How to Make Cards.

For good, serviceable, everyday cards use dark cards with the letters in white. These will not soil very rapidly and can be used continually for some time. If a picture appropriate to the wording is pasted on the card, it will be doubly attractive; but for all ordinary cards nothing looks quite so neat as a plain white card lettered in black.

A full sheet of cardboard such as used by cardwriters is 22x28 inches in size and ten-ply in thickness; half sheets are 22x14 inches and quarter sheets are 11x14 inches and eighth sheets measure 7x11 inches. The firm which sells cardboard will cut the cardboard into the different sizes with a card-cutter's knife, making a smooth edge which cannot be done very well by hand.

Cards written with stub pens are very neat and easily read. Pens for this purpose can be obtained in different widths and are excellent for writing small cards and price tickets, as they can be written very rapidly.

A card writing outfit need not be very elaborate—an assortment of stub pens, a penholder, two brushes (red sable riggers), Nos. 9 and 12 being the best sizes for good all-round work; three bottles of show card ink, red, white and black; three dishes for the ink, a straight-edge, a pencil, sponge and rubber being all that is necessary to make good show cards.

PART PLAYED BY WINDOWS.

When talking over the matter of window displays with one of New York's best known grocers, he said: "I consider it the most valuable asset of my business. It brings trade to the store that I would not otherwise get. It is the best salesman I have got." As our readers are aware we have for years been doing what we could to get the grocers of this city to take more interest in their window display and we are more than pleased to notice the missionary work we have done is surely bearing fruit. Any one who recollects the grocery windows of ten years ago and compares them with the display windows of to-day will, we think, frankly admit that there is a marked improvement and along lines that mean much to the retail grocer.—Retail Grocers' Advocate.

AS HE EXPECTED.

A grocer was converted to the way of thinking of a sect which periodically was inspired with a foreknowledge of the imminence of the day of doom and set the date, preparing for Gabriel's greeting.

The date was set and the day come. The grocer donned his white robe and went out into the fields to await the coming meeting with the celestial throng. The day passed until it was late in the afternoon, and the grocer, having arisen at the stroke of midnight on the morn of the eventful day, grew drowsy, and throwing himself down upon a pile of hay, fell asleep at his watch.

Boys discovtred him, and with the natural mischeviousness of boys, they set fire to the hay. The smoke and heat soon woke the slumbering grocer, and sitting up with a start he cried with the anguish of the lost:

"Just as I expected! In hell after all!"

A LITTLE BIT GREEN.

She was newly married and did not know a little bit about either housekeeping or shopping, and was giving her first order. It was a crusher; but the grocer was a man used to all kinds of orders, and could interpret them easily.

"I want ten pounds of paralyzed sugar," she began with a business-like air.

"Yes'm. Anything else?"

"Two tins of condemned milk."

Yes'm; anything else?"

He set down pulverized sugar and condensed milk.

"Anything more ma'am?"

An Attractive Card with a Talk That Carries Force.

"A bag of fresh salt. Be sure it is fresh."

"Yes'm. What next?"

"A pound of desecrated codfish."

He wrote glibly desiccated codfish.

"Nothing more, ma'am? We have some nice horseradish just in."

"No," she said, "it would be of no use to us. We don't keep a horse."

Buying Methods Save Hundreds of Dollars

Hard and Fast Bargains With Salesmen Wherever Possible is One of R. C. Braund's Principles—Advises Grocers Never to Allow Stocks to Run Short—Goods on the Shelf a Strong Talking Point With Travelers—Cash Discount Always Procured—Anticipates Wants of His Customers—Clerks Given Access to all Invoices and Business Books—Large Business Built up on These Foundations.

By Harry Theobald.

A business principle which Ralph C. Braund, proprietor of one of Peterboro's largest general stores, has always aimed at is to endeavor to buy at the best price from his standpoint. An advantage secured in this respect means a gain before the goods have been shipped from the warehouse. The manner in which the grocer can accomplish this stroke of business depends upon himself. There is one point, however, which Mr. Braund considers applicable to every buyer and that is, he should never allow his stock in any one line to run low. In that case, when a traveler comes along, the grocer finds that he has to accept the goods at the price demanded. He has practically no other alternative.

The average traveler is looking for all the orders he can obtain. If he receives the reply that the grocer is not short of a particular line of goods it means that there is no business for him for the time being with that grocer. For instance, if he is selling soap, he finds the grocer with a supply that is not yet run down. There are times when the traveler, being especially anxious to get an order, will say "Well now, can't I induce you to take a small lot, anyway?"

"No, I do not really need any more soap for awhile," is the answer.

After some dickering or persuasion the traveler may say: "Look here! I want your order. If you will take so many boxes I will knock off something," which amount he mentions. The traveler probably may intimate that the reduction is coming out of his own pocket, whereas the grocer considers that it is the "long way around for the shortest way home." If the grocer accepts he gets his first extra discount and he knows the goods will not suffer in his storeroom. If he is in the position to accept he may be sure that on future occasions he will be able to make as good a bargain, if not better. At any rate, he has made a gain on the soap before he receives it. Business is business. If the traveler could not offer an extra inducement he would not do so and the sharp grocer never misses an opportunity for making more profit than on past deals.

This is one point in connection with buying which Mr. Braund has found worth while attending to and soap is only an illustration for many other lines. It may be that the grocer is not in a favorable position to grasp an opportunity of this kind when it is presented ,but as stated above this depends upon himself.

A rule Mr. Braund has rigidly adhered to has been to buy only such goods as he knew he could pay for within the specified time in which to secure the cash discount. He has always taken advantage of this regardless of the amount or the period. By this means alone he has saved hundreds of dollars which a less careful man would have lost.

Began With $2.50.

Results obtained in business by Mr. Braund have certainly justified the soundness of his business principles. He arrived in Peterboro 15 years ago with $2.50, representing the sum total of his financial assets. For six months he was employed as night operator with the Bell Telephone Co., receiving 85 cents a night. At the end of that time he resigned this position to become a clerk in M. Carton's grocery store. After a year and a half, during which he saved a little money, he married and from that date his career as a grocer began.

He secured a house at the corner of Park and Albert Sts. and transformed a room opening on Park St. into a grocery shop, obtaining his stock from his employer. He continued to work uptown while his wife looked after their grocery business.

At the end of another year he found it necessary to give his entire attention to his own store and resigned his clerkship with Mr. Carton. His capital had increased most satisfactorily and he was enabled to add another room. It was at this time that he added a stock of dry goods, and this department has been gradually assuming larger proportions until it is now probably the most important, although he handles general lines.

Success Due to Buying System.

Each year has been but another step up the ladder of success, and he attributes a great deal of it to his buying system. He commenced with a store 20 ft. by 12 ft. in a part of his home. So many additions have been made that the first building was only about one-eighth the present size—if indeed it was that much. His first week's business amounted to $3.15. In six months he was doing a business of $100 a week, and in three years he bought the house and lot. He has made seven additions to the store, which is now 86 ft. by 35 ft., two stories in height and with a large basement. His weekly business now averages $1,500.

Practically everything is found in his extensive stock. He can completely furnish a house from the woodshed to the guest's bedroom in a manner to suit almost any taste.

Honesty in the grocery business, Mr. Braund states, is just as necessary as in any other, and a good trade cannot be built upon anything but a foundation of integrity, uprightness and straightforwardness.

Anticipates Public's Taste.

A grocer should attempt to handle large quantities of goods which turn over quickly. Mr. Braund has seldom carried over a stale stock in any line. He possesses that faculty of knowing what the public will demand. It has cost him a good deal of thought at times but by careful attention to studying the conditions and desires of his clientele, he has moulded his buying principles so that as far as possible selling will follow purchasing as naturally and as smoothly as night does the day.

This is where many merchants fail. Too often they allow themselves to be carried away by the arguments of the salesman so that they purchase goods their customers will never call for. Of course, that is the traveler's affair and if he makes the sale all well and good for him—it shows that he possesses the qualities necessary for good salesmanship.

Every merchant, and particularly the one doing buiness in the suburbs of a city or town or in the village or country, has a different clientele to which to cater, from any other. It is, therefore, up to the merchant, as Mr. Braund contends, to study the class of goods he buys in order that its turn-over will be made within a reasonable time. It's the store where goods stand for years on the shelf that fails—not the one which is not only alive to its customers' desires and demands, but to what those customers should purchase at different times in the year.

If this phase of the stocking of a store is properly looked after and if the cash discount is invariably profited by, the merchant stands a splendid chance to win out in the business arena. This, together with shrewdness in buying—essential to every good business man—forms a foundation in retail merchandizing which will stand a mighty stiff depression.

Buying Open to Clerk's Inspection.

Another important consideration in Mr. Braund's opinion is the selection of clerks. He wants not the smooth and polished individual, but the one who will interest himself in every line of goods that is purchased. If goods are bought they are to be sold and his clerks are educated to that fact. He wants salesmen for his goods and not simply "waiters" on customers.

His clerks are allowed, and in fact, encouraged, to look over all invoices and books in connection with the business in order that they may thoroughly comprehend every situation and be alive to the wholesale market, as buying prices vary. In doing this he aims to give them an education that will stand them in good stead in future years.

He secures clerks in whom he can place implicit faith. He shows them that he believes in their integrity and they in turn believe in him.

Owing to the fact that Mr. Braund is located away from the city's centre he has held that it is practically useless to advertise in the paper, as he can scarcely hope to attract outside buyers to the south ward, a mile from the business section. He, however, uses them at times. He has adopted the system of advertising by means of handbills, which he distributes mostly through the district surrounding his store and also sends them out with orders.

Co-partner in Business.

One other point worth mentioning is the fact that Mr. Braund owes his success largely to the encouragement his wife gave him in their years of early struggles. He is a strong champion of marriage and is now father of six or seven children. Mr. Braund is interested in many local companies, has good real estate holdings and as a public man holds a prominent place.

In conclusion, he says there are no established rules for the grocer to follow. He must keep his eyes open use good judgment and particularly know his business in every detail..

Opportunities different from any ever experienced in the past often arise and the merchant must be always on the alert to make use of them. Whether in buying or selling, whether in venturing on new ground or surveying the old, it's the man who possesses the qualities of shrewdness and foresight and who never forgets the mistakes of the past, who, in Mr. Braund's opinion, makes the success in the field of retail merchandise.

The Present Premises of a General Store Business Founded on $2.50 Capital.

SOME THINGS TO THINK ABOUT.

If money is so slippery that you can hardly keep hold of it when you are watching it all the time, how can you expect to get some enormous return for money which you invest in some far-away scheme, which you probably never will see and which is absolutely beyond your control?

If you consider yourself as a worm of the dust you must expect people to trample on you. If you make a doormat of yourself, people are sure to wipe their feet on you.

There is no disgrace in failing, if you have done your best, and if you are still facing toward your goal. But your failure will be a disgrace if your back is turned toward your goal.

Trust your employes and they will trust you; believe in them and they will believe in you.

Have nothing to do with people who dramatize their woes.

"Radiate a sunny self-trust, and make whatever you touch luminous."

It is grip and grit that conquer success; not alone the vigor with which one takes hold of his task but also the doggedness with which he holds on after he has taken hold.

If you are not doing good with the little you have; if you are not making the most of it, you may be sure that you are not likely to do the great good that you think you will when you get a lot of money.

After one has once felt the joy, the exhilaration, the infinite peace and satisfaction which come from the exercise of his highest faculties, he can not be satisfied ever again to grovel by the exercise of his brute faculties.

"It is the young man whom labor can not weary nor enemies scare, nor drudgery disgust; who confronts reverses with an unflinching front; who can neither be turned aside from his settled purpose by the world's dread or laugh, nor by its scorn or its frown, who makes his mark."

When a man gets religion aright his horse soon finds it out.

Advantages to Merchants of Export Development

The Greater the Home Production and Better the Demand the More Wealth Will Circulate—What the Retail Merchant Can Do to Assist Both—One of His Primary Considerations—Wonderful Development of Canada's Trade Since Confederation and What It Has Done for the Retail Business—Where Our Foreign Money Comes From.

Two hundred and eighty millions of dollars. That's the amount in round numbers of the exports of the Dominion of Canada during the year 1908.

Although at first sight it may not appear that the export trade has anything to do with the retail merchant, very little reflection will show that such is the case. The exports of Canada depend almost entirely upon the home production and on the home production depends the amount of money that will be expended among the merchants.

It is plainly visible that in order that the retail merchant should succeed, he must do business and the wealth obtained from the export trade forms a great portion of the money which circulates through him. He therefore has a direct interest in the goods that leave our shores and he should do all in his power to increase the demand for them.

It is quite within reason to assert that a fair share of that $280,000,000 of foreign money which was distributed among the Canadian people found its way to the merchant. Above all things else man must have food to live—therefore of the retail merchants who benefitted it is a safe conclusion that the grocer has fared a little better than the best. The grocer should more than any other merchant be interested in export trade development and methods for that development should be one of his chief considerations.

Everybody knows that a missionary address or a political speech overburdened with figures is dry. Nobody wants to listen and if the audience is large feet begin to shuffle.

Readers will therefore not be unduly imposed upon with figures but will be just presented with those absolutely necessary to demonstrate that the wheels of progress in Canada are by no means clogging up. They also demonstrate that Canada is a nation to be reckoned with among the progressive commercial nations of the globe. They show that trade in this country is on the forward march and they indicate that manufacturers who have their money invested judiciously in Canada have no need to fear any slight depression that may occur from time to time.

We realize by comparison. Therefore when we come to consider that in 1868—the year following Confederation—our exports amounted to some $57,000,000 and that in 1908 they were over $280,000,000, we reason that "Father Time" has been good to us. That means a five-fold increase in four decades.

Coming down to modern times reliable statistics show that in 1905, Canadian exports amounted to over $203,000,000; in 1906, they were more than $256,000,000; for nine months in 1907—when a change was made in the fiscal year—the amount was over $205,000,000 and last year it was, as stated before, $280,000,000. There has therefore been a steady advance, with an occasional lean year, ever since Confederation. Development is still on the wing and manufacturers who are succeeding now have years of plenty to which to look forward.

The accompanying charts show clearly in a nutshell where Canada is regarding her exports. The first treats with the total exports including home and foreign produce for each fiscal year since 1868; the second with Canadian merchandise exported each fiscal year to Great Britain, United States and to other countries. The figures speak for themselves by comparison; they are authentic, having been compiled by the Trade and Commerce Department of the Dominion Government.

Canada's great market is the mother country. Great Britain in 1908 took from us merchandise to the value of over $134,000,000 which almost equals the total exports to all other countries. United States, of course, came second on the list with $113,000,000 and our next best customers mentioned in order of importance are West Indies, South America, Newfoundland, Belgium, Australia, Germany, China and Japan, France, Holland, Italy, Spain and lastly Portugal.

Canada's great possibilities are her fisheries, agricultural and dairy products, her forests, her mines and her manufactories. The value of her fish alone which was exported through ocean ports during the year ending March 31, 1908, was over $9,900,000. Halifax leads with a total of over $4 500,000 with Vancouver second with over $2,600,000. Canned salmon, dry salted codfish, canned lobsters, and herring formed the bulk of the export trade.

In the fisheries the Dominion has an asset that has no limitations and with a special committee appointed by the Government at Ottawa to look after this industry development in the future will be more pronounced than it has been in the past. To compete with the world in fish is an easy matter if proper attention is paid to the industry, for Canada has the most extensive fisheries of any country on the face of the globe.

Value of The Farm.

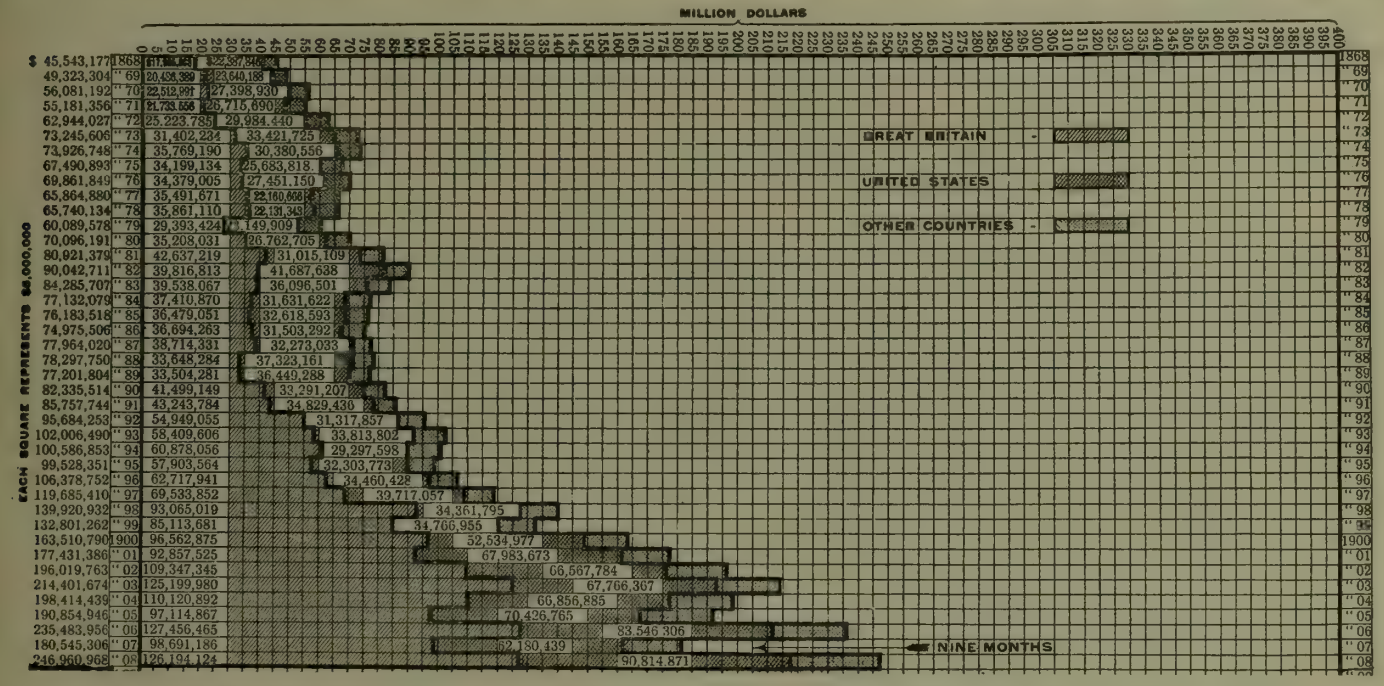
Agricultural products including grains, fruits, flour, cereals, maple products, seeds and vegetables, are another link representing the vast chain of Canadian resources. For the same year as mentioned above the exports of these exceeded $57,000,000, the chief articles being apples, oats, wheat, flour, and cereal foods.

How the Merchants Benefit.

The question arises in the mind of the retail merchant in a perusal of these figures as to what benefit he will derive from the development of the export trade of the country.

He should know that the extent of his business depends greatly upon the extent of the export trade. The products of the farm, the forest, the mine and of the manufacturing establishment cannot all be utilized at home. The greater the amount of wealth each produces above the home consumption the more will there be for export purposes and the greater will be the amount of money coming from foreign countries.

This is what counts to the advantage of the merchant. If a factory in a certain town closes down one week in every month that means a less amount of money distributed among the employes. The result is obvious. The retail merchant sells less and gives more credit and therefore his profits decrease.



If the farmer's crops are poor he has less for sale and hence there is less for export. With the wealth coming into the country curtailed on account of crop failure or neglect, the farmers, who are heavy buyers from the retail merchants, have less money to spend.

It will thus be seen that any decrease in home production and export trade reflects adversely on the retail merchants. With the latter with less money to spend, the manufacturers are forced to curtail their export, and business is depressed.

What can merchants do to aid in the increase of exports? Since the development of the farm, the dairy, the fisheries, the fruit-gardens, stock-raising and the mine means more money in the hands of the bread-earning population, it behooves every merchant to do his little share in aiding in this developemnt.

First, he must be a public spirited merchant. This is probably his best method of imparting knowledge to those employed in the occupations intimated above. Agriculture has made rapid strides, but with Canada's vast area of arable soil there is yet room to spread. Newer and better methods in farming, dairying, etc., are coming before the public every year and with the introduction of these, better results are bound to follow. A few men in the past have taken deep interest in the propagation of agriculture and what we want are more such men to assist in the education of those who are responsible for our export trade. Merchants can aid if they will, not only publicly, but privately. The export trade of a country is its life, and conditions relating to its development should be a subject for consideration by all.

Establishing trade commissioners in countries from which a demand for our goods may come is one method of procedure. This is the work of the government. The commissioner must be a thorough business man with a keen observation to detect the wants of the people among whom he is living. He must watch for every opportunity to aid the export trade of the country which has placed him there. He cannot be too wide-awake, and probably more care might be taken in such government appointments to good advantage.

Building Up of Name Lists by Retail Merchants

Methods by Which the Grocer May Become Better Acquainted With the Heads of Families—Benefits of this Scheme to Merchants in Country Districts—Keep an Eye on the New Families Moving Into the Community—A Valuable Asset.

Something new to the retail grocers, or the majority of them, is the plan of building up a name list and getting better acquainted with the heads of families in the community. Thus the name list is made a valuable asset to any merchant. Merchants, of course, have different methods in obtaining the list.

The retail grocer in the country village can use such a list to as much advantage as can the largest city merchant.

It is not always easy to obtain the right class of names, especially in a small town where there is no "name broker" who makes a business of dealing in the names of the residents of the city. In small towns the merchant must usually depend upon the resources at his command to build up a suitable list of names. Several devices have recently come to our notice which show that the old saying, "Find a way or make one" is as applicable to name list building as to anything else.

Secured Names Easily.

One merchant made use of the following plan to secure a name list without leaving the store to get it: He issued several thousand calendars with his name and some advertising on them. While the calendars were not expensive they were attractive and convenient. In his newspaper ads. he invited every one to call at the store and get a calendar free. When anyone asked for a calendar he or she was asked for his or her name and address. These were taken down and preserved for future use by means of a card index. Children asking for calendars were required to give the name and address of father and mother. Thus the calendar was made to produce a serviceable name, and a list was kept which prevented many calendars going into one family. In a few weeks the merchant had a choice name list, and had made friends with a large number of people, many of whom were not regular customers. These were circularized until eventually nearly all became customers of the merchant.

One merchant who wished to secure a name list sends out one or more of his clerks during dull times to call upon the people in their own homes. These clerks drove about the surrounding country and secured the names of all adults, arranging them under the various headings—Father, Mother, Young Ladies, Young Gentlemen, Boys and Girls. To these were sent circulars describing goods appropriate to all classes. If a family contained only adults, the circular describing children's goods was not sent.

Another method of collecting names is to give a voting contest of some kind, and arrange the ballots that each person voting must record upon it his name, address, and such other information which the merchant wishes to know.

Still other methods of getting good names are to get copies of the tax assessors' lists, and the poll lists of the townships in the vicinity of the merchant.

Another method by which the names may be obtained at practically no expense is to prepare cards containing five or six ruled lines, and give one of these to each of the country customers when they call at the store to trade. Request them to fill in the information asked and return the cards.

Some merchants offer no inducement more than the promise that the names go to make up a mailing list and those whose names appear on the list will always be promptly notified of any new goods or special bargains on sale at the store. Some merchants hasten the return of the cards by offering some inexpensive gift for each one brought back properly filled out.

Young Ladies Assist.

A plan practised by a merchant which enables him to get names and make sales at the same time is as follows: Two young ladies who are good talkers drove about the country calling at every farm-house. There they left advertising matter and showed samples of staples carried in stock, such as dress goods, underwear, hosiery, etc. The name of each lady called upon was taken down as well as her opinion of the goods shown and the name of her usual trading place for these goods.

These names were preserved as a mailing list, and ten days later were followed up by imitation typewritten letters calling attention to the advertising matter left and asking the reader to call at the store and look over the other bargains even if there is no immediate intention of making a purchase.

Effect of Letters.

Typewritten letters or their imitation, are always effective advertising material to send country patrons. In many cases the effect is equal to that of a private dictated letter. These letters may be written on a typewriter, or if the merchant has none, a good penman may be secured to write the original, and any number of copies may then be produced on one of the many copying machines now on the market. Forty to sixty copies may be made from one typewritten original, and seventy-five to one hundred copies from a pen written copy. Send these letters in an envelope of striking appearance with some brief message on the outside which will assist in arousing the curiosity as to the contents, and you will not be disappointed at the results. Of course much attention must be given to the contents of the letter, but as a means of advertising it is particularly effective.

When a goodly number of names have been secured they should be kept for reference on cards about three by five inches, one card to one name.

In addition to the name and address, number of people in family, and other information of this kind, the merchant should form the habit of noting on the card each bit of information about the the percon which may prove helpful in retaining or increasing the amount of his trade. Many people possess certain peculiarities which make them very unpleasant to deal with unless the merchant is familiar with them. As fast as these are known they should be noted on the card and the various clerks encouraged to consult the cards during idle moments to make themselves familiar with these customers so as to handle them properly when they call. The clerks should be instructed to jot down any facts of a similar nature which they have learned while selling to the various customers. These points may be discussed between the merchant and his clerks with a decided effect for good upon the sales account.

One merchant makes it a point to keep track of all new families moving into his trade district. As soon as the name and address may be obtained the merchant sends them a letter of welcome accompanied by some small gift and the request that he hopes to merit at least a portion of their patronage. He invites them to call and get his prices before going elsewhere. In this way a good impression is made and in many cases a valuable customer is secured.

These are only a few uses which the retail merchant has for a good name list. Other uses will occur constantly and the list will grow to be one of his most valuable assets.

The Course of Condensed Milk From Cow to Can

Wonderful Development Since its Discovery by Gail Borden, Scarcely Half a Century Ago—Rapid Advance in Its Consumption in Canada—Indispensable in the Mining and Lumber Camp and in the Summer Resort—Possibilities for the Future—Why it Appeals to Consumers.

Gail Borden, to whom is accredited the honor of originating the condensed milk industry, was not one of those who passed beyond the great divide within sight of the castle of his dreams. With his indomitable energy and pluck he waged his campaign against the obscurity of undiscovered regions and by walking hand-in-hand with science he was permitted to complete his life's work and leave to posterity the knowledge of an industry that has developed beyond the realm of expectations, and which knows no limitations. When one reads the life history of Gail Borden from an impoverished surveyor to the founder of an industry that has within a few years reached a huge magnitude, he perceives that his great work was culminated, not for glory's sake—that he might feel the glamor of the world—but that he might leave for humanity something substantial and real, something that would aid in the prolonging of existence between the cradle and the grave.

Even the majority of us who have passed the first score of years in the three and ten can look back upon the past to the time when condensed milk was unheard of. And when we reflect upon the wonderful development in Canada alone we wonder how our ancestors as pioneers braved the unexplored depths of our primeval forests without its aid. To-day mining centres, construction camps, summer resorts and even towns and cities find it indispensable. Milk is claimed to be the only substance known to science which contains all the foods necessary to fill the requirements of the human system. It is absolutely necessary to the proper development of the child and its absence from the body certainly does not prolong the life of older folk. Milk is, therefore, a necessary commodity and when it cannot be procured direct from the old-fashioned cow its place is filled and admirably filled by the condensed milk factory.

Success Follows Persistency.

To go back for a moment to Gail Borden. He was born during the first year of the nineteenth century—a hundred and eight years ago. His birthplace was New York State and for twenty-six years of his life he lived there. In 1827 he wandered to Galveston, Texas, and aided in extinguishing a band of pirates—invaders from the Gulf Stream. But his business was a surveyor, and shortly after his brief military experiences he surveyed the town site of the Port of Galveston, where he had been appointed the first collector.

Evolved the Meat Biscuit.

Having been born with an inventive strain in his veins he was given plenty of opportunity in his toilsome journeys up and down the desolate plains of the southern states. Nourishing food was needed and needed badly for such a life. A "meat biscuit" was his first attempt and this was made from the juice of beef combined with bread. Believing that he had struck a profitable vein, he invested what money he had to develop it. This "meat biscuit" in 1851 was successful in taking the highest award at the first world's exhibition in London. Unfortunately for him, however, it did not prove a commercial success and he was compelled to direct his talent and energy elsewhere.

Granting of the Patent.

About the year 1849 he had begun to make experiments in the condensing of milk, but before his work reached a successful culmination he was destined to surmount some huge obstacles. It is human nature to lie secure within the certainties of the present that have been safely molded from the events and experiences of the past and to place little faith in the new and untried. So others could not see beyond the horizon of their present with the same light as could Gail Borden, and it was with sheer perseverence that he prevailed against the jibes of his friends and against his own weaknesses and won the victory. On August 19, 1856, he was granted the patent for "producing concentrated sweet milk by evaporation in vacuo."

Interior View of a Modern Condensed Milk Establishment (Borden Factory at Tillsonburg).

In the last half century and particularly in the last decade, the condensed milk and evaporated cream industry has advanced by huge strides. As intimated above it was practically unheard of in Canada a score of years ago but it can truly be said it is here to stay and to develop.

Factories are now located in various parts of the Dominion and it was the privilege a short time ago for a representative of The Grocer to visit one of these and get a closer view of the manner in which the milk is prepared for use. As an indication of the rapidity with which the business of this plant had grown, the company was employing 125 men although in operation only eighteen months. It is a fact known to all that the strictest cleanliness must prevail in every factory. But the companies go further to make assurance doubly sure and see that the sources of the milk supply and the condition of the stables and surroundings are in the soundest sanitary conditions.

The Force of Cleanliness.

It is this phase of the business that appeals to customers. They perceive the care exercised by manufacturers in providing for them a food which must necessarily tend towards the building of a sound body and a sound mind. It makes them more confident in using the article and often is a favorable contrast to the slovenly manner in which some milk vendors attend to the wants of their customers.

From the factory visited—and it is to be presumed that the others have similar arrangeemnts—two men are constantly visiting the stables and herds of the dairymen who supply them to see that their regulations are adhered to. Some of the requirements are that all stables must be whitewashed and cleaned twice every day. Similar care must be given to the milking utensils. The milk must be removed as soon as possible from the stables so that no odors will be absorbed. The farmers are supplied with a modern aerator and cooler, over which the milk passes to remove the animal heat. It is then kept in a milk-house in cans placed in ice cold water. The herds are inspected several times every year with a view to determine and stamp out any disease that might have found its way among them. The water and food supplies are also looked after, and the herds fed principally on corn, the farmers not being allowed to give their animals turnips or any other root that is in the least objectionable.

From Cow to Can.

When the milk arrives at the factory it is subjected to a severe test to see that it is rich in solids and butter fats—free from contamination—and in as perfect condition as modern appliances and scientific precautions can make it. The contents of the cans, after being weighed go into the reciving tanks and all the cans are thoroughly cleaned and sterilized in the fastory before being returned to the dairy.

After this extreme care has been exercised it would be supposed that the fresh milk was all that could be desired, but it is now an acknowledged fact that all milk even if produced with the precautions already described is alive with bacteria. Before being put on the market, therefore, evaporated cream and condensed milk go through a thorough sterilizing process to render them free from all bacteria.

From the receiving room the milk passes into the huge sanitary tanks of the cooling and purifying department. There it is held until ready to pass into the condensing department where by the most modern sanitary machinery, it is greatly reduced in consistency by evaporation in vaccuo. From here the milk goes into the filling department where automatically every can is filled, each containing the same quantity. The cans, after being hermetically sealed by special machinery, are next conveyed to the sterilizing department where they go through a secret process which renders the milk entirely free from germ life and puts it in a more digestible condition than fresh milk by greatly softening the casein. The milk is then held in the factory from thirty to sixty days to ensure it being in perfect condition before it is placed on the market. This in brief, is how the milk is transferred from the cow to the can in such a clean and sanitary manner, and is never touched by hand.

Free From Germs.

Evaporated cream is richer in butter fat and phosphate properties .than ordinary cream because all the solids are retained. It is completely free from germs, all harmful bacteria being destroyed. Another surprising fact is that two-thirds of the time in the factory is taken up in cleaning and sterilizing the tanks and machinery. No machine is driven by belts; electricity and gas producer power being employed.

The water supply of the company is obtained from constantly flowing artesian wel's six miles from the factory and conducted by gravitation to a concrete reservoir in front of the building capable of holding 300,000 gallons. The water is used for cooling purposes in the factory, and also for cleaning the plant. In the latter process no soaps or acids are used, only pure clean water and steam.

Typhoid Outbreaks.

In the introduction of any new, convenient and improved product there are naturally barriers of prejudice and hurdles of distrust. These, however, have been overcome long ago with respect to evaporated cream, and the product is now much more popular than ordinary cream, not to speak of its numerous other advantages. The typhoid outbreaks, which occurred some time ago in Montreal and Chicago, were shown to be directly traceable to an impure milk supply. In the City of New York to-day there is as much condensed cream consumed as there is of ordinary fresh milk or cream, and in other cities this sanitary preparation is rapidly supplanting deleterious and tainted supplies from dairies.

Evaporated cream can and is being used in all climes and constitutes a perfect food for hunters, miners, lumbermen, explorers and fishermen, as well as for the ordinary household. Both evaporated cream and condensed milk are treated in a similar manner, only that the latter is preserved by the addition of granulated sugar.

A Market in China.

Canned milk is in demand all over the world and there appears to be a bright future for the industry. Even China has become an important consumer of this product and the consumption of it among the Chinese is on the increase; many of the stores now handling these prepared milks report that large quantities of the various brands are being taken by the Chinese. The Chinese have never used any great quantities of milk, as they usually allow the calf to take all the milk for its nourishment, in order to later have another animal, and fearing that the calf will die if deprived of any of the milk. No dairy farms exist except in the various foreign settlements and colonies. In fact, among the Chinese fresh milk is practically never used, owing to its scarcity. There is every indication, however, that the Chinese are beginning to realize the value of milk as a food, and when once the use of it becomes general the manufacturers of the canned product should find a large market in this country.

The business in canned milk in China is one of considerable size. During 1906 there was imported into that country 225,559 dozen of tins of milk, valued at $248,887, which increased to 257,300 dozens, valued at $262,575, in 1907, From Canada there was exported in 1907 to China 12,140 tins.

Among the companies in Canada now manufacturing this product are: Borden's Condensed Milk Co., Tillsonburg, Ont.; the Aylmer Condensed Milk Co., Aylmer, Ont.; St. Charles Condensing Co., Ingersoll, Ont.; the Truro Condensed Milk Co., Truro, N.S.; Sweet Milk Condensing Co., St. Lin, Que.; Charlottetown Condensed Milk Co., Charlottetown, P.E.I.; the Canada Milk Condensing Co., Antigonish, N.S.; Jno. Malcolm & Son, St. George, Ont.; Canadian Condensing Co., Chesterville, Ont., and others.

Magnitude of Poultry Industry Around Smith's Falls

Some Years Ago the Poultry Raised by Farmers There .was Disposed of at a Big Fair—Wagon Loads Were Then Seen on the Main Street—Time Brought About Changes and Buyers Now Invade Territory of the Farmers — Annual Production Valued at Thousands of Dollars.

By Jessie V. Dayton.

The town of Smith's Falls is a rapidly growing, prosperous business town of about 6,000 population, situated 125 miles from Montreal. It is an important divisional point on the main line of the C.P.R. between Toronto and Montreal, and is also on the short line running between Brockville and Ottawa. It is surrounded by a good farming country, and populated by an intelligent enterprising class of farmers. It has excellent facilities as a shipping point.

Smith's Falls has for many years been an important market for poultry and for years an annual poultry fair used to be held there which to the merchants of the town and the farming community was one of the important events of the year. The fair was advertised throughout the country, over a radius of twenty miles by large and attractive posters. At that time neither the Brockville and Westport railway nor the short line running from Prescott and Kemptville to Ottawa had been built and Smith's Falls was the only railway centre within a radius of many miles.

Wagon Loads of Poultry.

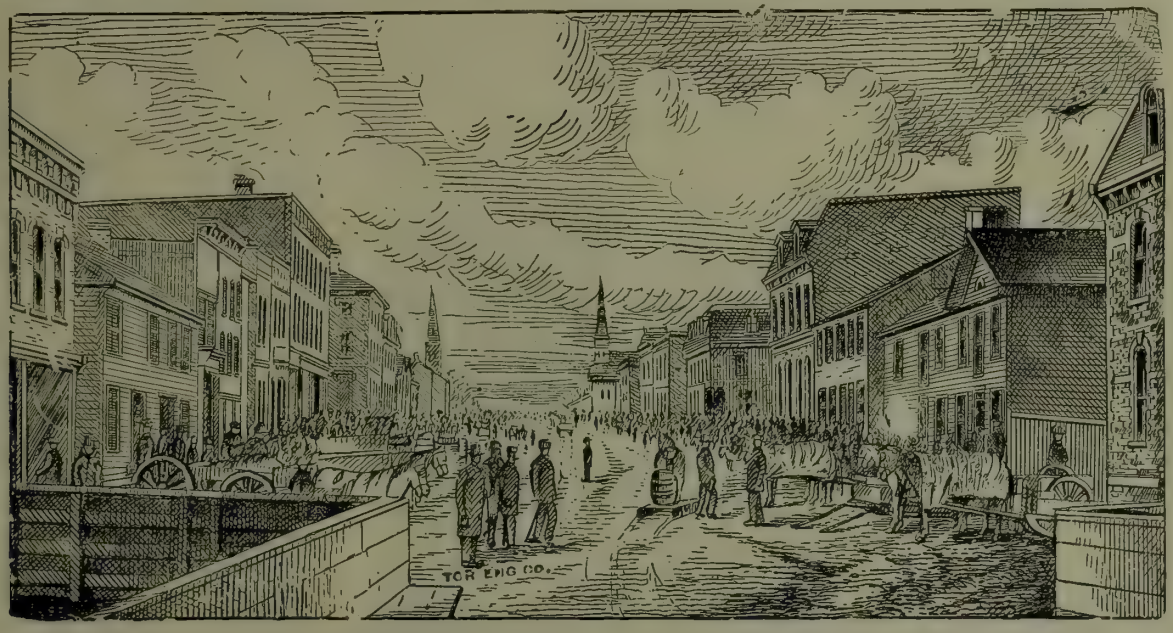
On the days appointed for the fair, farmers drove to the town, many of them arriving at daylight with their sleigh or wagon loads of poultry, many of them accompanied by their wives and daughters ; and Beckwith Street, the principal business street of the town was lined on each side with farmers' sleighs and the pavements thronged with the women-folk who had accompanied them. Buyers from Boston, New York and Ogdensburgh for the United States market were the principal shippers.

In 1891 a new market was opened when a Mr. Beach came from Winnipeg for the purpose of buying for the western and British Columbia markets. Through M. K. Everetts, one of the influential poultry buyers in Eastern Ontario and a resident of Smith's Falls, Mr. Beach bought that year over five car loads of poultry, the value of the shipments amounting to $17,000, the prices averaging as follows : turkeys, 10 to 14 cents ; chickens 5 to 7 cents ; geese and ducks, 6 to 7 cents.

Forty Tons in a Year.

In 1892 about 40 tons of poultry were shipped from Smith's Falls. Some local buyers also shipped many hundred weight. From ten to eighteen cents for turkeys ; six to ten for chickens and seven to ten for geese were the average prices paid.

The old days of the turkey fair when the merchants of Smith's Falls engaged extra salesmen and the milliners supplied the farmers' daughters for miles around with hats purchased with the money received from the summer's work in raising poultry have now passed and the more modern method of selling to buyers who visit the homes of the farmers and purchase the fowl to be delivered on a certain date at the nearest shipping point has taken the place of the old time fair.



In 1899 the McKinley bill completely cut off the United States as a market for Canadian poultry. Nevens & Soles of Irish Creek, a small village on the C.P.R. six miles from Smith's Falls, in one season shipped 52 tons of poultry to the Northwest for which they paid $65,000.

Decrease is Noticeable.

It is difficult to obtain records of shipments made after the abolition of the turkey fair, as the dealers from the West, Toronto, Montreal and other centres, drove through the country and bought up all the poultry for sale and it was shipped from various points from Smith's Falls. It has been an unfortunate thing for the poultry raisers that the regular poultry fairs of the past have been abolished as there has been a marked decrease in the amount of poultry raised. There has been no deterioration in the quality, however, as for some reason the buyers claim that there is a marked improvement in the quality and flavor of the poultry during the past few years in the country surrounding Smith's Falls.

Last Season's Results.

During the autumn of 1908 small fairs were held at different villages near View of Beckwith Street, Smith's Falls Ont., on a Poultry "Fair Day" of Some Years Ago.

Smith's Falls, viz.: Irish Creek, Merrickville, Kemptville, Westport, Elgin and Athens. Six carloads of poultry were in that year shipped to Winnipeg to be distributed to various points in the Northwest. The prices ranged as follows: turkeys, 14 cents; chickens, 10 cents; geese and ducks, 11 cents, and the value of the shipment was $20,000.

The past year saw a great shortage and many orders for thousands of pounds were not filled owing to the scarcity of grain for feeding. The poultry market offers a great opportunity for large profits as the supply has been and continues far short of the demands.

An Important Industry.

A return to the old turkey fair days might be advisable as many of the poultry raisers claim that under the present system the uncertainty of the date of the buyers coming is a drawback. However, whether there is a poultry fair or not the raising of poultry for the autumn market is something which no modern and successful farmer in this vicinity can afford to ignore.

Auctioning of Tea in the Capital of Ceylon.

Some 2,000 Parcels go in a Few Hours—All Sold by Sample —Auction Sale Every Week—The Four Great Tea Drinking Countries of the World—How the Bidding is Done.

It will probably be of considerable interest to many of the readers of The Canadian Grocer to know something of the history of Ceylon tea between the time of its manufacture to the time it is ready for shipment by boat, as shown in the accompanying illustration. After the manufacture of the tea on a garden, samples are mailed to the agents in Colombo. The tea is then packed in chests and held until a sufficient number of packages accumulate to make a consignment practicable. A few days later—the length of time largely depending on the size and capacity of the garden—a caravan of bullock carts is put into commission to carry the chests to the nearest railway station—perhaps a dozen miles away over hilly country but excellent roads.

TEA IN COLOMBO AWAITING SHIPMENT.

A Tea Auction Every Week.

The railway performs its part in the marketing of tea by bringing it to Colombo where it is warehoused awaiting the result of the auction, which may send it to Great Britain, Australia, Russia, or North America—the four great tea drinking countries of the world.

Several days before each of the weekly auctions, the would-be-buyer sends to different garden agents for samples of their teas listed to be in the next sale. These he draws carefully and decides which he wants, and what he can afford to pay for them for his trade. On the morning of the auction the buyers are in their places in the auction room. At eleven o'clock the auctioneer commences offering the various "parcels"—as the lines of tea are called—the larger ones first. A buyer, as a line comes up that he wants to get, will put in a bid fractionally lower than he is willing to pay. Another man may raise him to such an extent that he will allow it to go, or he may determine that it is worth a still further slight advance in price.

Sales Made in a Hurry.

To a visitor strange to a tea auction pandemonium seems to reign. The auctioneer in a few short words is able to name each parcel, no description being necessary as all the purchasers have previously seen samples, and sharp excited bids come from the contending buyers. Only a few seconds are spent over each lot, and one can well understand this when it is known that between 1,500 and 2,000 lots have usually to be auctioned within a few hours.

As various parcels are knocked down to buyers a clerk enters the sale, and later invoices are sent out. The buyer sends a cheque, and gets in return an order for the tea. The remainder of his work consists of arranging for shipment, insurance, and Custom formalities.

As previously stated, the illustration shows the last stage and the staff that has been responsible for the valueing, buying, etc., of one of the large shipments of Salada tea. This goes on week after week every month in the year in Colombo, and has always been the pride of the country that Ceylon with its equitable climate is able to produce fine teas all the time. This obviates the necessity of the distributer stocking up as protection against the bad season, which in some other countries gives them only a few months of tea producing weather.

BILL INSIDE.

Bill Smith is a Bucks County storekeeper, and last Spring he came down to Philadelphia to purchase his stock of goods for the Summer trade. The goods were shipped immediately, and reached his store before he did. Among the lot of cases and packages was a box shaped something like a coffin. When Bill's wife saw this one she uttered a scream and called for a hammer. The drayman hearing her shrill cries, rushed in to see what the trouble was. The wife, pale and faint, pointed to the following inscription on the box:

"Bill inside."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Village Merchants Can Kill the Mail Order Habit

Business Men in Small Places Should Watch Competitors in Surrounding Cities and in Mail Order Houses, Instead of Neighbors Across the Street—Carefulness in Selecting Stock and Up-to-date Methods are Other Counterbalancing Forces—Other Troubles Experienced by the Village Merchant—Farmers' Lack of Financial Ability a Drawback—Story of the Development of the Business of A. F. Choate, a Warsaw General Merchant and Methods he Follows—Advantages of Securing Exclusive Agencies—A Village Store Equipment.

By H. Garnet.

From calico to codfish via pitchforks and pianos certainly seems quite a range and suggests the city departmental store; but is it not descriptive of the stock of the up-to-date country store?

The time has come when, with numerous mail order houses pushing to the country with agents, catalogues and newspaper advertising, the village merchant has to rise to the occasion and supply the local demands, and, yea, luxuries. Is there any reason why he cannot sell as cheaply or even more cheaply than the mail order house?

True, he cannot enjoy the advantage of buying in such large quantites, nor of such a variety, but expense is at a minimum, unless he be so situated that the item of cartage from a railway station is to be considered, and even then, what is that in comparison to taxes, rents, light, heating, not to mention compulsory advertising and the hundred and one other extras that go in the expense account of his competitor—the city merchant?

Counteracting Mail Ordering Customs.

The sending of mail orders is in most cases a habit and is contagious. A catalogue reaches a family, one of the members is attracted by one of the "extra specials" and probably sends an order. If this gives satisfaction, a second is sent, and so on, until the "extra specials" are lost sight of and the habit, thoughtlessly acquired, has spread through the family and been contracted by friends.

Once the habit is formed, considerable difficulty will be found in breaking it off, but by careful management in selecting stocks, keeping in touch with new styles and being generally up-to-date, though he may have to show new goods some time in advance of their reception in the country, the village merchant may hold his general trade, and, in addition, make considerable profit on these extras.

Difficulty in Dealing With Farmers.

It has been said that the average farmer stands fourth from the bottom of the list for business ability; those having less than he being musicians, artists and poets. The three latter, however, knowing their disability, very seldom attempt business transactions, and so may not be considered.

The great grievance of the farmer is his impression that he cannot dictate as to prices. When he wishes to buy he must pay the price asked, and when he has anything to sell he must take the price offered. There is no consideration taken of the law of supply and demand. This feeling of being much abused is the cause of a great deal of the difficulty in dealing with farmers.

Then, how many farmers are there who fully understand a financial obligation? It is on this point that the merchant dependent on country trade, loses his temper and in many cases his courage.

The one redeeming feature of the credit business in the country is that while farmers are very tardy in closing accounts and extremely sensitive in regard to monthly statements and accrued interest, there are comparatively few losses through uncollectable accounts. It is simply a case of following the old adage, "Learn to labor and to wait."

The growing tendency, however, is in the direction of the cash business, though it is difficult to say, whether it is the natural inclination of the people or the local education applied by the merchants who, no doubt, can do a very great deal in this line, if they choose to co-operate.

Watching the Wrong Competitor.

In every village there is a large amount of energy and money going to waste through the inability of the merchants in locating their real competitors. Especially is this the case with the firm new in business in the small place.

A merchant, aroused by some action on the part of his competitor across the street, such as cutting the price on tobacco or raising the price of eggs one-half cent, immediately proceeds to "squash" his "opponent," and slashes legitimate prices right and left, regardless of any of the first principles of business. This is kept up more or less continuously, and all the while the trade that really needs watching is going unmolested to the nearby town, city or mail order house.

While honest competition is the life of trade, spasmodic opposition will put a business in the hands of an assignee by the rapid-transit route. Let the local competitor alone to a large extent and all join hands in reaching for the trade that is passing the door and going to enlarge the city business.

The following description of a store in a small village, surrounded by a good farming community, shows what may be accomplished by earnest effort in the way of uplifting the country store to a higher basis than is generally recorded of it.

It was early in the spring 'way back in the year 1836 that the late Thomas Choate, of Port Hope, accepted the contract from the Hon. Zaccheus Burnham, to build a saw and flour mill on the Indian river, and the snow was deep on the ground when the strenuous undertaking of making the trip was commenced.

The party spent the night at Peterboro, then known as Scott's Mills, a hamlet consisting of five houses or shacks and a flour mill.

Development of Village Trade.

The site chosen by Mr. Choate for the mills is the same as is now used by the Warsaw Milling Co., and the picturesque village, under the shadow of surrounding hills, is on the west and south.

With the establishment of the mills that same year came a rapid influx of settlers, and the question of supplies being an important one, Mr. Choate decided to open a store. In 1842 a post office was established, and the settlement given the name it continues to bear. It was in 1856, however, that Mr. Choate gave up the milling business and erected a large building on the site of the present store, where he put in an extensive stock. This building served its purpose until 1906, when the present owner, A. F. Choate, son of the founder of the business, and who succeeded his father in 1880, finding that the business had outgrown the building, had a new section added and the whole remodelled. This practically new building, planned from the knowledge of experience, is most convenient in interior arrangement..

The Interior Equipment.

The basement, 25x36 feet in size, and at one end of which is the coal furnace, with which the building is heated, is used to some extent as a storeroom for reserve stock.

It is here that a coal oil tank of 250-gallon capacity is located. Other oils, such as linseed, machine, castor and turpentine and gasolene are also kept here The basement has both exterior and interior entrances.

The ground floor, which gives something over 2,000 square feet floor space, is covered by the main section of the store, the millinery department and a stock room. In the latter, convenient to the entrance, is the oil pump, connected with the tank in the basement, and a sink for catching any overflow there may be. Other things kept in this room are the wall paper stock, a large refrigerator for butter, etc., and general reserve stock.

Two handsome plate glass windows, one on either side of the doorway, grace the store front. On the two sides are the shelves and counters extending the entire length of the building, and displaying the goods of the different departments all distinctly separated. While the location of some of the departments is changed for the sake of variety, the general situation is—on the right; groceries, confectionery, patent medicines, stationery, hardware, and on the left, dry goods, fancy goods, gentlemen's furnishings, and china and glassware. Down the centre are tables, flat for clothing, underwear, etc., and double-decked for china and glassware. Against the rear wall in the centre are the private office and public telephone cabinet. The former is used for general office work, and it is here that the telephone exchange switchboard is located.

Post Office Arrangement.

Mr. Choate has apparently solved the difficult problem with which every village postmaster-storekeeper is confronted, viz., a private and convenient place for the post office. In this store it is a department entirely separate from the business, and yet, occupying as it does, a central position in the rear, with aisles on all sides, it can be easily reached by the public on the exterior or any of the clerks, who distribute the mail. The front of the office is circular in shape, with general delivery wicket in the centre, while on one side are lock and call boxes and money order wicket; the opposite side is taken up with newspaper boxes and sorting table. The exterior is finished in ash and standing about seven feet high, and with fancy spindle work about the top, it presents an attractive appearance and one a very great deal more up-to-date than the usual post office-on-the-counter affair seen in so many country stores.

In these days of electricity and numberless lighting systems, one would imagine there would be no difficulty in the way of illuminating a store. There being no electric light plant in Warsaw, the luxury and advantage of such is denied the merchants, who must choose one of the systems. Mr. Choate has, after many experiments, installed one which, in his estimation, cannot be beaten for quality and quantity of light at small cost. The lamps are similar in appearance to the round-wick hanging lamp, and burn coal oil, though in much smaller quantity, and are fitted with a mantle, with the result that the light given out is pure white and perfectly steady.

When Mr. Choate remodelled his store he decided to have it well ventilated, and to this end had transoms put in over each of the four windows at front and rear. These are made in one sash, with hinge in the centre, and may be opened to any degree.

Exclusive Agencies Desirable.

There is a class of dealer that is forever working the plunder game on the merchant who takes the initiative, and when the latter has, by his reputation and labor, worked up a good trade for an article or agency, the former finds a means of getting the goods, or a substitute, and parasitically plies his trade. This custom, while being perfectly legitimate, does not suggest progressive business methods.

Mr. Choate has secured himself to a large degree by insisting on exclusive agencies, and has a long list of reliable firms, the names of which he sets forth on his calendar when opportunity affords. Among these are: Telephone agency, laundry and dye works, stoves and ranges, paints and oils, fashions and patterns, barn door hangers, roofing, stock food, pianos and organs, made-to-measure clothing and coal.

The dressmaking and millinery workrooms are situated upstairs and on this floor there is also a large room that is used as a place of meeting by several societies.

In a community with a business such as this, conducted by the same people for so many years, and in which the Golden Rule has ever been the motto, where does the necessity or opportunity of the mail order house become apparent?

THE LOCUSTS.

"Lord save us from the Locusts," should be every merchant's prayer.
For "Mendicancy" unabashed is stalking everywhere,
From every rural hamlet doth the begging letter come,
With such shameless importunity as strikes the victim dumb.

Such dodges and devices, such pleas and such pretexts,
By Clubs and by Committees, by Societies and Sects,
For getting other people's coin, was surely never known—
Why they beat old Barnum hollow, and outvie "The Devil's Own!"

The Rifle or the Racing Club, a big drum for the Band,
An Address to Snooks the Mayor, all afford a new demand,
A Town Hall Clock, the Chapel Bell, Oh, anything at all,
Is counted good enough to make another Sydney call.

By every mail, twelve times a week, from Tenterfield to Bourke,
"Dear sir, the ladies here have organised a Sale of Work,
And as my dear wife's mother is presiding o'er a stall,
We depend on you to stock it. Yours truly"—that is all.

Then the local show must get a prize, and eke the annual race,
Where "brumby" vies with "brumby" round the course with flying pace,
And the annual grocers' picnic, where perspiring lovers meet,
Without your contribution would be sadly incomplete.

The brawny football "forward" begs a trifle for his club,
And the lad who "wields the willow" is "upon" you for a "sub.,"
And the maids, and wives, and widows, till " 'e don't know where 'e are,"
Are upon "the eternal bustle," for some local church bazaar.

Because we've always dealt with you, you must give they will say,
Or—Because we never bought your goods, but if you give we may;
If you don't give, why you needn't sell, is another tack they try.
You must "ante up" or close accounts, we'll from some other buy.

If the little Bethel roof should leak, they pass the empty plate
For the Sydney merchant's off'ring, to provide the needful slate.
Then the "traveller" is buttonholed, presented with a list,
"A trifle for the Children's Treat! Come, come, it won't be missed!"

"Cast thy burden on the Lord," 'tis writ, "and He will thee sustain."
"Cast it on the Sydney Merchant," is the N.S.W. refrain.

"No doubt a "cheerful giver" is "well pleasing to the Lord,"
But to give to every local scheme one really can't afford,
Hence this poor unstudied protest, which is made with bated breath,
For we're trapped, and bled, and blistered, till we're nearly "done to death."

Winnipeg Grocer Prescribes Service for Success

This, Combined With Quality of Goods, is his Fundamental Business Principle—Twenty Years of Steady Growth from a Youth Without a Dollar—How he Chooses and Handles his Clerks—Believer in Daily Window Dressing and a Bright Store.

By L. C. HARKNESS.

"No grocer who cherishes the highest ideals for his business can afford to overlook the matter of kind treatment of customers and choice quality of goods."

These are the sentiments expressed by A. Hendry, who has made a remarkable success of the trade in Winnipeg.

It is so often the case in every vocation of life, that the man who makes a paramount success of his life's work was once a poor boy who made the best use of his circumstances, that we have almost come to expect it.

Mr. Hendry has probably made a greater success from the standpoint of money than any other grocer in the city, without sacrificing any of those principles which make life as a whole one grand success.

Two Decades in Business.

From the first day that he entered business life, over twenty-one years ago, his one great ambition was to cater to the finest trade and build up a first-class business at any cost.

Those who know the trade thoroughly will understand that to do this necessitates considerable sacrifice. To cater to the high-class trade means a choice of the best goods on the market and that means high prices paid, and high prices for which they must be retailed.

When he entered into business for himself on a small scale about one year after his arrival in the city he had to compete with stores which had not the same mottoes as he, and they could afford to undersell him in many lines—simply because, as he claims, they had the inferior article.

A Study of Salesmanship.

Mr. Hendry adhered rigidly to his early set-up standard of excellence, however, buying carefully and making use of the best tactics in salesmanship until he could better afford to increase his stock of finer lines and make a more attractive display. And so the business grew slowly and steadily until "the boy without a dollar" became the proprietor of one of the finest grocery stores in Winnipeg.

Mr. Hendry occupies the third store which he has owned since he began the business. Each move was occasioned by increased trade and lack of accommodation for his clientele.

He first began on Main St., where he succeeded in inviting the best custom; later he moved a few blocks west toward the residential section occupied by those whom he depended upon for the maintenance of his trade; and again, only three years ago, he moved to the present site on Portage Ave., which is destined to be Winnipeg's leading business street.

His Wisdom Justified.

Each move which Mr. Hendry made practically doubled his business. Seven years ago he was netting about $5,000 per year; to-day his business is almost double that, and it is substantially on the rise. It may not be long before another move will be made, and if so it will be to Fort Rouge, to the very door of the best residential section in the city.

A. HENDRY,

Successful Winnipeg Grocer Who Began Business Twenty-one Years Ago Without a Dollar.

His present place of business is scarcely large enough for the fast accumulating trade. It is 75 feet long by 22 feet wide, and every inch of space is well utilized.

Behind the counter there are three telephones, over which the majority of orders come, and next week a fourth will be installed. The oposite side of the store is piled high with goods, as may be seen in the accompanying illustration.

Observant Society Lady.

The window in this store is always a catchy feature. A few days ago a leading society lady and hostess was passing by when she was attracted by the fresh goods in the window. She entered the store and paid a flattering compliment to Mr. Hendry for presenting such a beautiful window and left an order for some of the green vegetables on display. This window is made an exceedingly important part of the business and is in charge of Clerk Simpson, who changes it daily.

Mr. Hendry has always given his business personal attention. For years he has had in his employ a "head clerk," but he himself is the mainspring of the business behind the counter. At present there are fifteen in his employ, ten clerks, four drivers, and one book-keeper. He has had great difficulty in the past in acquiring proper help because his patrons were leading citizens with whom courtesy counts very largely, and he found out that the only way to get the best out of the clerks was to "show them how." He is naturally kind and genial, and notwithstanding his large frame he is well able to please and hustle.

Teaches His Clerks.

Every grocer knows the value of a first-class clerk and he also knows how an inferior clerk can damage the trade. Mr. Hendry knows what is wanted of a clerk, and he is rigid in those demands. He is, however, kind and considerate to all under him and he is also willing to pay well for the best, and by so doing he is successful in retaining the best that can be had.

A stranger entering the store to-day would note at once the polished business-like air of all employed and the smoothness with which the business is done.

Mr. Hendry has paid dearly for his business accomplishments. He insists on having the best goods, the best clerks and the best store and he also believes in making use of the best tactics which belong to the craft. It means something must be sacrificed to get these, but he has achieved that to which he has set his heart and he is repaid by his present-day enviable business.

Little Things That Count in the Store

Loss of Custom Often Caused by Neglect in Minor Details—The Broken Latch Forgotten—Watch the Dust, Dirt and Dead Flies in the Display Window—A Merchant's Method in Greeting Every Customer—His Consideration for His Clerks—What Personal and Store Appearance Stand For—Persist in Showing the Prospective Customer the Goods You Have for Sale.

By Chas. W. Mantony.

The would-be purchaser on the outside pressed and squeezed and jerked at the latch-lock of the door. He paused, stared at it a while, sized it up carefully, and made a more scientific attack. The scientific attack had no effect on the door ; but the would-be purchaser tugged till he grew red in the face.

"Wonder what's up," he muttered, suspiciously.

He glanced around for the bailiff's ill scrawled notice, the usual token of a distress for rent. None was in sight. People were inside the store, and business seemed to be going on as usual.

Just then the door was opened from the inside, and a cheerful clerk remarked :

"Lock's out of order. Awfully sorry. Get it fixed right away. What can we do for you ?"

As a matter of fact, the lock had been out of order for nearly a week. People who were not acquainted with the peculiar knack of making it work properly when it didn't want to, had tugged vainly till the cheerful clerk came—or till they tired of the job, and went elsewhere.

Just how much passing business the merchant lost through that defective lock he never knew. How many sensitive people who had grown red faced with the foolish but natural conviction that the entire street was watching their futile efforts, is a matter for guess work ; suffice that a fair proportion, whether they ultimately broke in or not felt like shunning that place forever afterward.

Of course, people should not be sensitive. This, doubtless, is a truism. There are very few people who are not sensitive, however, and some of these belong to the dead beat class, which, like the poor, we have always with us. So, after all, instead of trying to persuade people that it is foolish to be sensitive about a little thing, it is usually cheaper and quicker for Mr. Merchant the minute he finds his lock out of order, to telephone the locksmith.

Just One of Many.

The defective lock is frequently met with in stores in towns and small cities —particularly in the stores of merchants who are apt to procrastinate or forget. Incredible as it may seem, a merchant has been known to leave his door for a couple of months in such a condition that it is a genuine torture for a sensitive person to get out or in. It is a little thing. It is one of many little things which may bulk big in bad results.

It is very nearly related to the door that gets swollen with melted snow and won't shut or open except under almost hydraulic pressure ; or the door that, the moment the customer enters, flies shut with a terrific and nerve racking bang ; or the sidewalk that in winter is left covered with slippery ice, which often forcibly reminds the passerby that eternal trick balancing is the only price of safety and that carelessness goeth before a fall—and that leaves in him, too, whether he falls or not, a deep rooted dislike to Mr. Jones, the only merchant in the block who left his sidewalk as slippery as he found it.

Of course, this is May. But December is coming. Paste this over your desk, if you happen to be Mr. Jones, and next time you see ice on your sidewalk, have your clerk, first thing in the morning, in the quiet spell right after 8 o'clock, sprinkle a little sand where it will do most good.

In the Show Window.

This eternal watchfulness, this careful, microscopic attention to the little things of business, may be tedious to the man who has never practiced it—but it pays. In time it becomes a habit. The merchant becomes careful, watchful, attentive to little things, as a matter of course. No effort is required. The clerks get a good example, which, often, is a great deal better than a good "dressing down." And, after all, the employer's example counts a lot with the clerk.

For instance, your show window is intended for one purpose—to draw trade. The hot weather is here. Will that wilted lettuce, those shrunken cucumbers with the lines of drouth about them, those peaches and tomatoes with the obstreperous and outspoken bad spots—will they draw trade ? Those glass sealers that have been piled into the window with the obvious dust still upon them because you were "rushed"—will they prove as attractive to the woman who joys in housecleaning, in comparison with the sealers carefully polished off by the man across the street ? Are people going to be magnetized into coming in and buying when the white paper which carpets the bottom of your show window is black with the fly specks which have accumulated in the weeks that you have been too busy—or too careless—to change it ? Will those dead flies in the odd corners emphasize the purity of your sugar and spice ?

Show windows there are which naturally and inevitably inspire just such questions. People are touchy, especially about what they eat ; and, even before cheap goods, the average housewife insists on clean, fresh, uncontaminated goods. So see that your fresh vegetables in season are kept fresh, that the dead flies are removed as they accumulate, and that your display is clean, even in preference to being artistic. Put yourself in the buyer's place. Then common sense will do the rest.

Little Things Inside the Store.

I know a grocer who makes it a point to speak to every customer who enters the store, right after his entrance. He may be waiting on an earlier customer at the time, but he will say, "Excuse me a moment," while he gives the newcomer a word of greeting and sees that a clerk looks after his wants. This grocer has developed the habit of doing this in what one might call the twinkling of an eye, so that, while the little diversion can hardly offend the first customer, it has inevitably a certain flattering effect upon the second. Frequently, even when he himself is not busy, the grocer will after the first word or two of greeting, turn the customer over to a clerk. He does this purposely.

"I believe in giving my clerks work to do," he says. "In some stores there is never a clerk will move unless the proprietor is busy. No—I don't think it's laziness, in most cases, but natural deference to what the clerk, rightly or wrongly, considers superior salesmanship ; allowing such a practice isn't giving a clerk a fair chance to make good. Furthermore, it is educating a lot of customers to ask for the proprietor, and refuse to be waited upon by anyone else. When I call a clerk to wait upon a customer, I show my confidence in that clerk. I think it is good business."

As for his practice of dropping everything to greet each newcomer, he calls it "my fad." It may be good business for some merchants, bad business for others. He is satisfied with the scheme.

But, whether so extreme an idea is going too far or not, it is much better business than keeping customers waiting while a clerk marches all the way from the back of the store, or while the proprietor concludes a half hour conversation with a bosom friend on some topic which has nothing to do with his business.

The customer merits the merchant's first attention, and that of his clerks. It should be prompt attention. Many merchants make it a rule to instantly drop private conversations the moment a customer comes in, and wait on the customer before resuming the thread of the narrative.

At the same time, it is not a bad idea when time is not pressing, to indulge in a little chat with a customer, regarding some topic of interest to the latter. You should be pretty sure beforehand, however, that the customer is not in a hurry to get away; and you should never linger to talk when there are others in the waiting line.

Other Little Things.

A man's personal appearance is doubtless his own affair. Nevertheless, it pays the grocer to dress well. A week's growth of incipient beard or a mop of hair that hasn't been combed or an old suit with patches and grease stains—these, really, are not prepossessing items in a merchant's make up. Neither are they in a clerk's.

It pays to have the paint brush used on the store front now and then. Usuallythere is very little woodwork about a modern store front, so that the expense of an annual retouching is scarcely worth mentioning. And it brightens things up immensely.

There are little sections of the windows that careless clerks persistently neglect to clean properly when they are at work with the mop. You may never have noticed them. Just take a look, and, if there are any little, dusty nooks or corners, have them swobbed out. Then take another look, and note the marked improvement in the general effect.

You use price cards in connection with your window displays. See that names are properly spelled. See that prices are distinctly marked. Strange as it may seem, the funny spellings which adorn price cards are legion. A missing letter, a "3" that looks like a "5" or a "5" that looks like an "8"—these are little things. But they count.

Let People See the Goods.

Keep your goods in view. This doesn't mean exposing perishables to sun and flies, but it does mean displaying stuff where it will be a continual reminder to the customer of something he wants and would not have bought if he had not seen it. Change these displays in window and on counter frequently. It may seem like unnecessary work to move a lot of unsold stuff back to the shelves and move a lot of other stuff out to the counter—but I've met many a merchant who credits a good share of his sales to the persistent habit of putting things where people can see them, and changing often.

And, above all, cultivate the faculty of looking out for the little things, of doing the little things that will help you to success, and of leaving undone the little things that are bound to militate against you.

BUSINESS POINTERS.

People like to do business with a man who is prompt. Be there when you say you will. Punctuality is the courtesy of kings.

Like master, like man. Many a good clerk has been spoiled by the wrong sort of employer, while many a poor clerk has made good under the right kind of instruction and example.

Some merchants treat traveling men as if they were all thieves. Those same merchants get mad if their customers treat them that way.

An ungainly, home-made word is "Sticktoitiveness," but it spells success in advertising more than in anything else. Don't be a quitter.

It's easy to begin well. A new broom always sweeps clean, but it is in the home stretch that races are won.

Treat your clerks like honest men, but don't tempt them with loose cash handling methods. Even honesty has its limitations.

Special sales are all right. Advertising is a necessity. Window displays are valuable, but the first rule in the book is to have the goods.

Every window display should be so made that each observer will go away with one idea in mind that will do you good.

The merchant who isn't generous soon gets the name of being stingy. Who ever heard of a stingy merchant being successful?

When you say to a customer, "What else would you like, Mr. Smith?" aren't you more likely to make him stir his mind for something else that he wants than if you say, "That's all, I suppose?"

Be merciful to the man with the subscription paper. He doesn't like his job and he isn't after money for himself. He will remember your courteous treatment.

Don't tie so much red tape around your parcel-wrapping and change-making methods that your customers will go to the other fellow's store when they are in a hurry.

In advertising follow the line of least resistance. Push hardest where competition is weakest until you are as strong as your competition.

Quality is the best talking point. Cut prices only attract the bargain hunters. They will leave you the next day. Customers who like the quality of your goods will continue to trade with you.

Do not sell goods that are regularly slashed by the price-cutters. The biggest cutter in your community sooner or later will make the biggest assignment for the benefit of his creditors.

Neatness in a grocery store pays well. Bread tasting of kerosene is not desirable and the patrons will go elsewhere for the next loaf. See that clerks have ample facilities for washing their hands, but above all, see that they use them. Some customers are very notional about such things.

There are thousands of people in the great failure army to-day who might have been successes but for losing their grip through discouragement, caused by constant fault-finding and suppression. It is not every youth that has the stamina to hold up his head, no matter how much he is repressed. Some tender natures, very finely and superbly organized, succumb to such treatment, and never develop, just as some delicate buds will not open their petals and fling out their fragrance in a cold atmosphere.

THE HOGS WERE WISE.

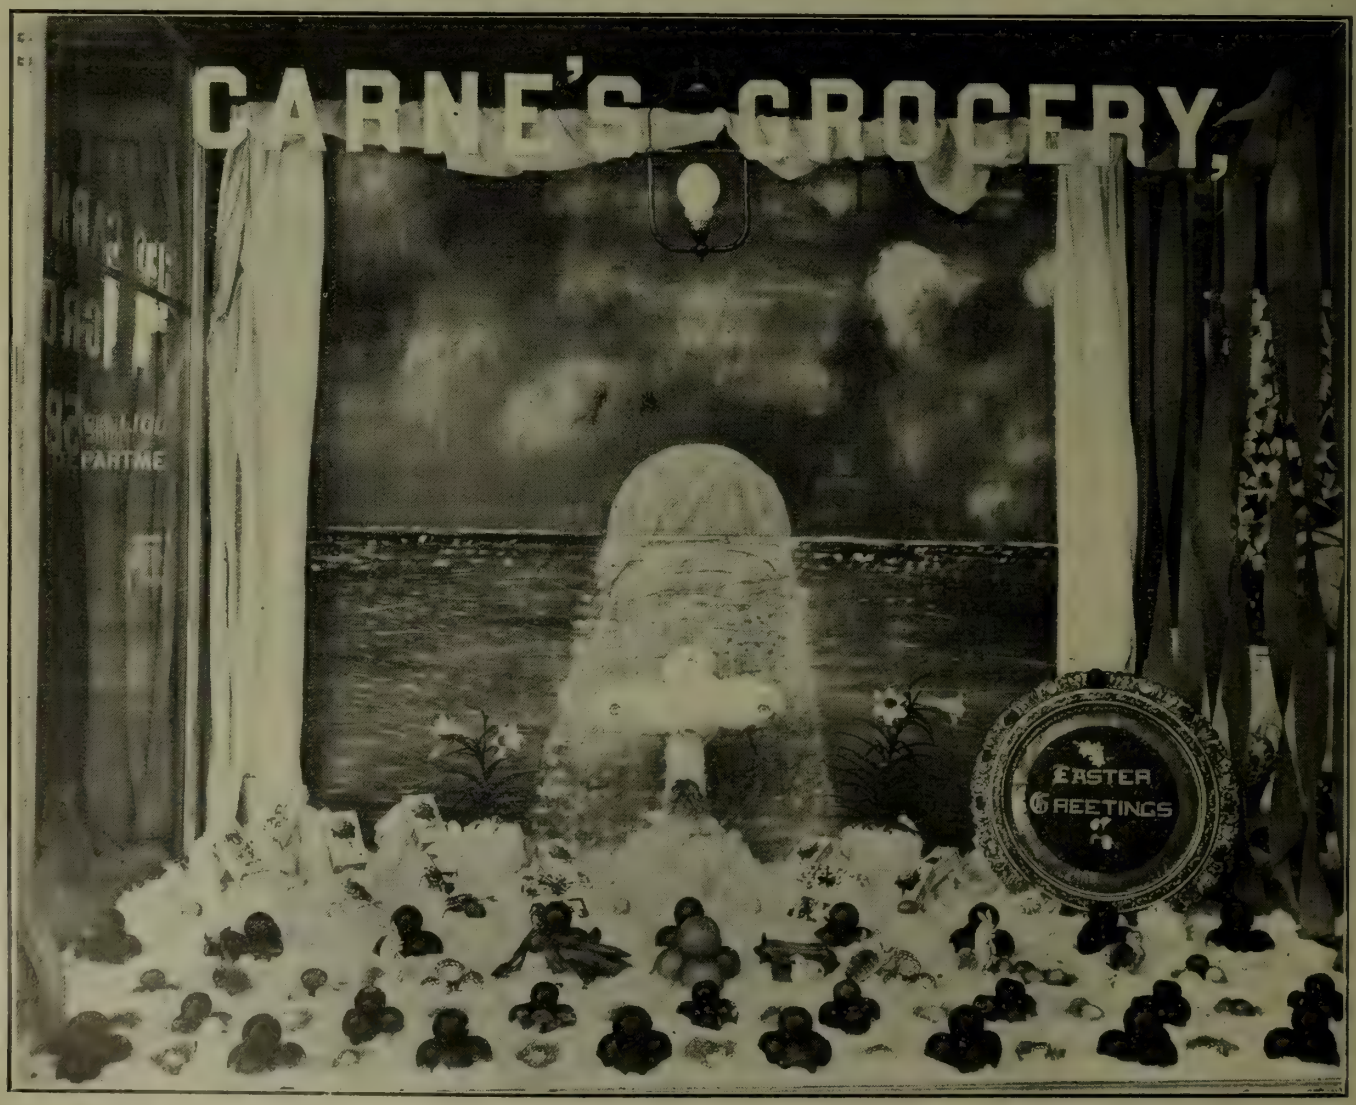
The sages of the general store were discussing the veracity of old Si Perkins when Uncle Bill Abbott ambled in.

"What do you think about it, Uncle Bill?" they asked him. "Would you call Si Perkins a liar?"

"Wall," answered Uncle Bill slowly, as he thoughtfully studied the ceiling, "I don't know as I'd go so far as to call him a liar exactly, but I do know this much; when feedin' time comes, in order to get any response from his hogs, he has to get somebody else to call 'em for him."—Everybody's Magazine.

Value of Window Displays in Selling

Concrete Examples of How Humble Articles in the Grocery Store Were used to Advantage—Blending of Colors an Important Adjunct—How to Construct Foundations for Display Windows—The Benefits of Show Cards Illustrated—Advance of This System of Advertisement in Recent Years.



By H. A. Somerville.

As is the case in many other fields of human endeavor, window-dressers are born, not created. This may at first seem to preclude from this profession the large majority of people, but it is found on close inspection, that such, however, is not the case. There are, relatively speaking, a large number of people with good taste, and this propensity or quality manifests itself in their personal appearance, or in a multitude of other ways. Granted that a person possess this most coveted quality, plus some ingenuity and a dash of simple mechanical principles, the evolution of a window-dresser is easy. Without, however, the absolutely necessary essential of taste, the field will always remain a sealed book, to those who aspire to enter. By dint of hard work perhaps, a certain amount of success may reward the effort, but the person who so attains it will always find himself in a false and artificial position.

At first thought it might be assumed that the field was limited by well defined lines, but such, however is not the case. It may be well to start a dissertation on window-dressing, with a few general observations on life in general, and point out their connection with this art.

Necessary Qualifications.

Most women and men in this world are ladies and geneltmen, or want to be. To the first class, good taste appeals immediately, to the second-class it appeals also because they consider it necessary that it should, and what is most remarkable, a large percentage of these people are astute enough to know when to admire. Now, to the aspiring window-dresser, if he or she wishes to climb to the greatest heights, it will be necessary to become familiar with the fundamental principle of colors, their combinations and also design. It should be thoroughly understood that it is a heinous offence to associate two colors which are not in harmony. The effect on the mind of well-ordered individuals is disastrous to the best results of the trade of the store.

It should also never be forgotten that the object of window-dressing is to attract customers and is, therefore, commercial in its purpose. The simplest things are the most artistic. There are some people who imagine that disorder is art but this is a pure fallacy.

matters of detail that changes are possible and desirable to make.

Simple Goods Sometimes Desirable.

Nothing in the grocery store is too humble to be displayed in the window, and frequently it is these everyday old-fashioned products that make a hit when displayed in the right way. Of course, seasonable displays are always advantageous.

Some time ago a grocer procured a few tall glass jars ranging from two to four or five inches in calibre, and from two to three feet in height. These urns had fancy glass stoppers to prevent any extraneous matter reaching the contents. Into them he put West India molasses and arranged them in a semi-circle, in the centre of which he placed some ginger bread, ginger snaps fruit cake and butter-scotch. On the central bottle there was a neatly printed straw board with these words: "Freshly imported Barbadoes molasses. This molasses will make delicious ginger bread. ginger snaps or butter-scotch."

Another grocer received a shipment of extra fine potatoes. He carefully selected about a bushel of three different varieties, thoroughly washed them, arranging them in three neat heaps in his window, and placing a card on each describing the qualities of each variety. He stated that this was somewhat of an adventure, but that the business which had resulted therefrom had shown him that simple window displays were of value. There are many instances, too numerous to mention, where just such displays as the one described have accomplished their purpose.

Effect of Show Cards.

There is one point which should not be omitted and which has not been previously touched upon, and that is the necessity for neat and attractive display cards. Frequently an otherwise beautiful window is spoiled by untidy and distasteful display cards. It is easy nowadays to get apparatus with which these may be made and a little practice will achieve surprising results.

The average man is not much of an authority on color combination, but a man's wife or lady friends may give him a little advice along this line and with the exercise of a little taste and common sense, the otherwise neglected window may become a wonderful trade attractor.

CHANGE IN COMMISSIONERS.

W. A. MacKinnon, Acting-Canadian Trade Commissioner, at Bristol, Eng., has been transferred to the Trade Commissionership for the Midlands and Wales and his address is now Central House, New St., Birmingham.

The newly appointed Trade Commissioner for Bristol and the West of England, E. D. Arnaud, (late of St. John's, Newfoundland,) has taken charge of the Bristol office, and to him correspondence relating to Canadian trade should be addressed.

The Importance of Selling Properties in Display

Examples of Good Window Dressing by Canadian Grocers—Impressive Easter Display From Victoria, B. C.— Two Bracebridge Windows Seasonable for Spring Time — Price Cards Shown to Advantage by a Vancouver Trimmer.

For a number of years The Canadian Grocer has advocated that attention should be carefully paid to the art of window dressing in every grocery store. It has aimed to awaken in all window trimmers a sense of the importance of this art to the advertising scheme of the retailer. That it is advantageous in developing trade is undisputed. A pretty window is always admired and if the artist has the necessary qualifications to produce a "selling" window as well, he has pretty well solved the problem.

The "Rock of Ages" window shown on another page is one which appeared in the Carne grocery store in Victoria, B.C., It was trimmed by Harry Young, whose work is by no means unknown to Grocer readers.

The background is simply an old window blind with a sky scene painted on the upper half and water on the lower. To secure the setting moon effect a semi-circle was cut out of the blind and the hole covered with red paper. At night a light was placed behind it producing a beautiful moon-light scene. A cross was erected at the water's edge with an electric light in each arm and kneeling at the bottom of it is a doll dressed in white silk. The "Rock of Ages" effect is splendidly illustrated. The front portion of the window consists of oranges, bananas, apples, eggs dyed in several colors and fancy candy appropriate to Easter times. The floor is covered with cotton batting sprinkled with ground glass. The sign "Easter Greetings" is placed in a frame of gold with an electric light above. Mr. Young has certainly shown thought in the nature of this display for Easter, and good judgment in working it out.

Kirk Bros., Bracebridge, Ont., Showed This Splendid "Castle" Seed Display Window This Spring Which Brought Good Results.

A Dreadnought Window.

"Our dreadnoughts conquer the enemy—dirt"—the card shown in the window of Hutchison Bros., Bracebridge, Ont., is an appropriate inscription. The display was exhibited a couple of weeks ago and it proved to be a good seller. The seasonableness of the goods is what strikes one forcibly. Whitewash brushes, brooms, wash-boards, mops, soap and lye make a splendid combination and especially in the spring time of the year when the housewives vie with one-another in their house cleaning operations.

Up in Muskoka forests big game is common but the sight of a moose head in a town is something not so usual. However, it is becoming to the place the same as the "dirt conquerors" are to the season and no doubt the window-trimmers had this in view when they planned the display. It is one of those windows which a person can "take in" at a glance. Too many articles only serve to distract the attention, confuse the eye, and destroy the attention-compelling effect which is made possible by an attractive arrangement of one or more lines of especially interesting goods.

The window of Hutchison Bros., although containing a variety of articles does not lose in effect because of its connection with the other in producing the central thought.

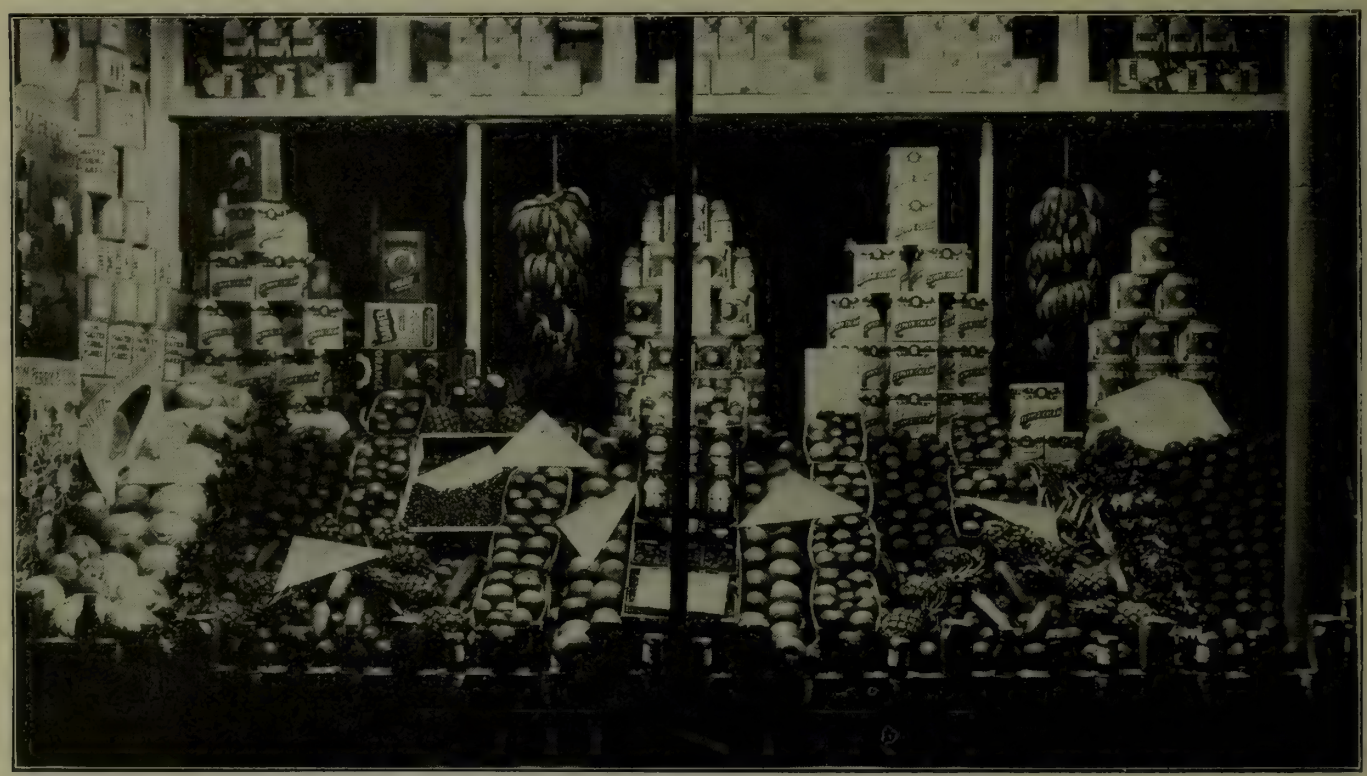
Another Seasonable Display.

During the last few years grocers have been handling large quantities of vegetables, grains and flower seeds. This spring a large amount of business was transacted in these and many "seed" window displays were used to advance the sales.

The illustration showing the seed-window of Kirk Bros., also of Bracebridge, represents a display "with some class." One of the requisites of a good window is attractiveness and Kirk Bros. whose windows have been shown before in The Grocer are not unknown to The Grocer readers seem to be past-masters in the art in that respect.

In originality the seed window stands high. Good samples of Canadian wheat, oats and rye are shown in the sheaf with a view to illustrating the quality of seeds sold by Kirk Bros. That alone produces a tendency to buy.

The thought that comes to the mind at a glance at the display is that of a castle. It is constructed from packages of varieties of vegetable seeds and surrounded by a rampart of beet seed packages with an outer wall protecting the flanks of the castle. The sheaves stand as sentinels and flags float from the castle wall—the whole conveying the idea of the strength of the seeds sold by this grocery store.



Additional selling power is given to the window from the fact that neat display cards are used giving the special names of some of the seeds. A few price cards added might not have been amiss from a selling standpoint.

Advantages of Price Cards.

The Vancouver window shown by McDowell and Kinnis is undoubtedly an inviting one. It was dressed for the Easter time which explains the featuring of poultry, fresh vegetables and eggs. Although little originality is used, the display is exceedingly attractive and its selling properties are splendid.

The open front—seldom seen in retail stores of Eastern Canada at the Easter time—and the neat arrangement of goods suggests a freshness and wholesomeness about the place which is indeed commendable.

A selling window wherever possible should contain price cards and in this respect McDowell and Kinnis show good judgment by a liberal use of them. There are, of course, occasions when price cards might not be advisable, but these are few.

WANT EASILY SUPPLIED.

What is it, madam?" asked the man behind the desk in an intelligence office.

"I want a cook," explained the lady, patting the directoire knot on the back of her head, "and I want her bad."

"Quite simple, madam," the clerk assured her. "We have no other kind."

CATALOGUES AND BOOKLETS.

Manufacturers and wholesalers are requested to send catalogues, booklets, etc., to The Grocer in order that it may be announced to the retail trade that they have been issued. Retailers in sending for catalogues referred to, should mention this paper to show they are in the trade and they should be read thoroughly by them on account of their educative value. Often they may be able to secure new ideas.

Coles Manufacturing Co.—In a neat circular sent out by Coles Manufacturing Co., of Philadephia, they refer to their new electrically driven coffee mills, the new models of which have recently been completed. The booklet describes the changes and improvements made on their old styles and is nicely illustrated with a cut of the mill, the prices and qualifications of which are given. The new mill is the result of eighteen years' experience by the manufacturers.

PLEASED WITH THE PROSPECTS.

W. G. Patrick, of W. G. Patrick & Co., importers, Toronto, returned home last week, after spending some six weeks in the West visiting Winnipeg, Calgary, Vancouver, Victoria, Seattle, and Portland. This being Mr. Patrick's first visit through the West, he was greatly impressed at the vastness of this great country, and much pleased with the business prospects in the different cities which he visited. While in Winnipeg he appointed W. H. Escott, wholesale grocery broker, to look after his interests in the West. Among the lines to be handled are shelled nuts of all kinds, French fruit and vegetables in cans and bottles.

What Can be Considered Good-Will of a Business

A Difficult Problem To Solve—Depends To a Large Extent On The Purchaser—Various Cases Cited As Illustrations.

By G. W. Brock.

Good-will, which is described as the custom of any trade or business, may be such an evanescent, intangible, uncollateral thing that in a sense it is like prospects, opportunities or ambition, which may or may not be realized.

It cannot be weighed and must, therefore, remain to a certain extent an unknown and unget-at-able quantity. It is vastly different from a stock in trade of which an inventory will carefully record every article and its value while the bank books and ledger of a business will afford a purchaser a definite idea of the turnover, the width and worth of the constituency served, the probable number of customers, etc. Invoices and price lists will furnish a buyer with some conception of the class of goods which are mostly called for and turned over frequently but, in the sale or transfer of a business, the one thing which must remain unknown to the purchaser to a greater or less extent, is the good-will.

On this some men place a very high value while others view the matter in a different light and proclaim that the good-will except in rare instances is worth little or nothing in itself. Of course, if there is no opposition to the particular business and the man who runs a grocery, a dry goods store or a hardware establishment has very few or weak competitors, the good will of his business may be very valuable but, if the rivalry is strong and aggressive, then what? The whole matter assumes a totally different aspect and the worth of the good-will has to be largely determined by circumstance, the growth and prosperity of a town or district and the wealth, requirements and thrift of the community.

Little To Work On.

But cases which can of themselves be regulated and sized up accurately in such a matter as a good-will are few. Take an average retail business in an average town doing a fair turnover and what is the good-will worth then? Supposing there are about as many competitors as the town will stand and a dealer for some good reason—ill health, family affliction, or other interests which he has in hand, desires to dispose of his stock, or perhaps it may be that he has made enough money on which to retire—what is the good-will under these normal conditions worth?

This question has occasionally been discussed by merchants. One man who has made a success in the management of his business has said that the good-will should represent the amount of stock ordinarily carried; that is, a business with a $20,000 stock should have a good-will equally as valuable. Another asserted that the good-will of a retail store was worth ten times the net annual profit which means that, if the enterprise was clearing $1,500 a year, the good-will might be estimated at $15,000.

It must be understood, in the discussion of this subject that no such thing as a franchise or monopoly is being considered, or a business which has grown so strong by long years of establishment and progressive methods in its particular line that it has developed such proportions as to be practically unassailable. In such an event it is generally conceded that the good-will would be as valuable as the stock or plant itself or even more. Ordinary conditions and an ordinary business in an ordinary town are under review at the present time.

Changes in a Year.

It would be preposterous to say that the good-will of a retail store was worth the amount of stock carried in a case like this. A grocer recently told of selling his business at 105 cents on the dollar and retiring to a farm. In a year he took the business back at 75 cents on the dollar. a depreciation in value of thirty per cent. The year before he had sold he had a cash turnover of $45,000, with book debts amounting to $17,000 more as a legacy of several years' business. His successor let the business run down to $18,000 total business in his year, and the former proprietor, acquiring the store again, a year ago, has managed to increase this by $17,000, making it $35,000. And recently this retailer bought out his opposition at 100 cents on the dollar, the opposition's clerk immediately opening another store.

Depends on the Purchaser.

Then does not the good-will of a business resolve itself into the fact that its valuation depends largely on the purchaser, his fitness, experience, methods, system, foresight, aptitude and vigilance? If he has not these qualities to such a degree as the man whose interests he purchased, then the good-will, if he pays anything for it, is really a loss to him and is as invaluable as a non-dividend paying stock—in fact a great deal worse, for the stock in an industrial concern, which is not now earning anything on the investment, may do so some day, but a good-will is not an asset, unless there are brains, energy, concentration and ability behind it. In other words, the value of a good-will in a retail store appears to depend to a great extent on the qualification of the buyer, his grasp of the situation, his talent to satisfactorily meet the wants of his customers, and his foresight in ministering to and anticipating their needs.

One man succeeds in a certain store or locality, where, perhaps, a dozen others have failed, and so it is with a good-will; the dollars and cents represented by it depends very much on the purchaser himself and not so much on business, its connection and clientele as one might at first glance suppose.

From Another Viewpoint.

Take another case. A shrewd, smart and active stranger comes into a town and goes to a dealer who desires to sell. The negotiations progress satisfactorily so far as the rate on the dollar and the value of the stock are concerned. This is all agreed upon, but the seller then says: "I have been in business here so many years and I have the best trade of the town. It is practically all cash and the profits last year amounted to $3,000." Would the good-will of the business be worth $30,000? The purchaser, when asked this amount for the intangible and uncertain asset called "good-will" balks and says: "I will not pay you a cent for it." Or he agrees to allow the seller very little, and the deal is declared off. The intending buyer then calmly sizes up the situation and says: "I have the necessary capital and experience to start business right here and, after looking over the field, I think it presents a fair prospect of success." He leases a store in the vicinity of the man from whom he was going to buy and commences business with a well selected and representative stock. His premises are bright and attractive, he advertises judiciously and thoroughly, and his goods are clean and reliable and his system excellent. He is content with a moderate profit; he keeps all promises and deceives no one. His method of doing business is aggressive and progressive; he wins new customers every day and holds their trade. In a year or two he has corralled a fair share of public patronage in his own particular line and is making money. What is the good-will of his competitor. whose stock he thought of buying, then worth? Nothing at all.

It would seem, therefore, that the value of a good-will of an ordinary retail business depends more on the powers, insight and capacity of a purchaser than on the business itself.

Effective Advertising for Retail Grocers

Mistakes Too Often Made By The Improper Use Of Display Type And Copy Without Ideas Or Information—Persistency a Necessary Requisite To Good Results—How To Prepare Copy—A Knowledge Of The Goods To Be Advertised and of the English Language Essential—Some Good and Poor Advertisements.

By W. F. Ralph.

Advertising does bring results, but sometimes the results are on the wrong side of the ledger. The right kind of advertising pay, but all advertising is not the right kind.

The two most important factors of resultful advertising are right mediums and right copy.

In the first place, to be effective, your advertising must be seen. That involves the question of mediums and display.

Then it must excite and hold interest, convince and lead to favorable action, that brings up the matter of the copy itself.—Extract from an address by T. D. McGregor before the American Institute of Banking.

An advertisement solicitor is frequently met with this reply when calling upon retail grocers: "I can't afford to advertise." That is a most unfortunate position to be taken by any retailer whose business is adequately capitalized. As a matter of fact, the retailer who is in business with the object of getting any more than a hand-to-mouth living out of it, cannot afford to refrain from advertising. This fact is borne out by the huge successes which have been evolved in all spheres of business largely by the aid of advertising, and by the spectacle of failures innumerable traceable to the lack of advertising.

As Mr. McGregor says in the above paragraph—good advertising does pay.

However, the merchant who disclaims belief in all advertising is as rare as snow in August. With most people the fact that advertising is a good thing—an indispensable thing—to a business man is admitted without question. Where merchants chiefly differ is in the method of advertising.

Some merchants hold the view that a "good stand" and careful attention to quality and service is the best form of advertising for a grocer. This is partly true. Without the latter, no grocer can attain real success. The matter of a "good stand" is of secondary importance nowadays. With increasing frequency, instances are coming to light which show beyond a doubt that good newspaper advertising combined with careful attention to quality and service can greatly minimize the disadvantage of an inferior location.

This fact however, is no argument against the importance of selecting the best location available it merely goes to show that consistent publicity in the columns of a newspaper is the all-important thing in modern merchandizing.

Persistency Necessary.

The trick in grocery advertising is to be seasonable and persistent in every form of advertising that is within command. Don't despise any form of publicity that has the elements of sanity, but be careful in selection. If a number of methods present themselves use ordinary logic in selection; and in the majority of cases, where a newspaper is available, it will be found that logic leads you to the use of newspaper space. Whether a newspaper is available or not logic will lead you to the absolute necessity of effective window display, convenient store arrangement, and to the necessity of a high standard in quality and service.

Apart from good window display and careful attention to quality and service, the newspaper is unquestionably the best medium of publicity. In its columns you can reach people who seldom pass your store. You can induce people to trade with you, by a persistent offer of extra good values, that cannot be induced to enter your store in any other way. By newspaper publicity you can build for yourself a reputation that will make your name and business household words throughout your community. No other out-of-store advertising is comparable in effectiveness to that of persistent newspaper publicity.

Just as an automobile is a desirable form of conveyance, but is dependent upon the supply of gasoline for its actual motion, so is the newspaper the most desirable means of publicity, but dependent upon the supply of "copy" for its actual effects.

The Right Kind of Copy.

"Copy" is the technical name given to the contents of a piece of advertising space. Upon its composition and display depends the effect of the advertisement. It naturally follows that if an advertiser is content to fill his space with a trite announcement of his name and business he cannot expect his space to effect any great rush of customers into his store. Neither can the advertiser who fills his space with a confused mass of disconnected phrases displayed in a confusing array of big type, expect to accomplish much more than the confusion of his readers. And the advertiser who tries to be "funny" to the accompaniment of grotesque "stock" illustrations need expect to accomplish very little in the way of impressing the reader with the dignity of his store and the importance of his values.

The right way to make newspaper advertising pay is to conceive of your space as the threshhold of your readers' homes.

If you were standing upon the doorstep of a prospective customer's residence with the lady of the house inquiring your business, what would you do? Would you merely state your name and place of business, then turn on your heel? Would you shout—"The Great Bargain House," "Immense Slaughter of Canned Goods," "We Lead, Others Follow," or such-like phrases, in a voice loud enough to be heard in the next block? Would you say "Break it Gently," while at the same time throwing a brick through the parlor window, as an introduction to the information that you were offering fresh eggs at 22 cents?

No, dear reader, you would no more think of doing any of these things than you would think of trying to cross the Atlantic Ocean in a gasoline launch. If you did any of these things you would be considered by all people as an object of pity; and by some you would be considered a promising candidate for the insane asylum.

Example of a Poor Ad.

Yet the "copy" one quite often observes is really little better than one or other of these things. Take the ad. marked Fig. 1 and headed "Our Lines are Corkers" as an example. This is an actual ad, with the name erased, taken from an Eastern Canada newspaper. Do you suppose any advertiser would have the temerity to ring anyone's doorbell, and, upon the appearance of the good housewife shout, in stentorian tones,—"Our Lines Are Corkers" followed in a more moderate shout with a long list of bottled goods, ending up with a shrill shriek to "Order Now." Then why utilize the white-space entry to a buyer's home in such a manner?

"Copy" should be in reality "printed salesmanship." It should leave the same impression on the reader as would be made by a polished and skilful salesman calling upon housekeepers. It should contain offerings, values and suggestions worded and set up in a forceful, convincing and pleasant manner. Pleasant and attractive to eye and mind convincing in argument.

The requisites for the production of good copy are a knowledge of what to advertise and when to advertise it; the use of plain English; with, if possible, a knack of composing strong, brief, attractive catchlines; together with an appreciation of the value of contrast in the matter of type display.

It may be assumed that most readers of this paper know what to advertise in their own line of business, and when to advertise it; and also that they possess an adequate knowledge of English composition. The ability to compose strong, brief, telling headlines is more or less of a natural gift, but is a knack that is capable of cultivation by a person who gives it some study. It is merely "boiled down" expression. Take a thought or a proposition of value that can be expressed in a short sentence—and boil it down.

Take this thought, for instance:—"There are indications that the price of lemons will soon rise considerably and people who buy at our present prices will save money." Now, to make a telling catch-line of this thought requires that the meaning shall be given in condensed, but unmistakeable language. We might put it this way: Indications Point to a Rise (in heavy type) in the price of lemons and you will save money by ordering now at our present prices (in smaller type). Or: "Lemons Are Rising—Buy Now" or: "Buy Your Lemons Now—Prices Rising." This is a simple example the principle of which may be applied to any thought in the preparation of an attractive catch line.

Wherein Lies Strength.

It is in the matter of type contrast that many retail advertisers go astray from the path of effective display. Yet the matter is a very simple one and may be summed up about like this: Don't over-emphasize. Setting up an advertisement may be compared to an orator making a speech. If the orator hammers the table and shouts every other sentence at the top of his voice the thing becomes monotonous, and the expressions upon which he means to lay the greatest stress dwindle in force because too much energy has been spent on his minor thoughts.

So in the construction of an ad.—the more lines you display in heavy type the weaker each line becomes, merely for lack of contrast. Concentrate your emphasis at one or two points and rely upon the fluency and interest of your language to carry the reader along. And it is an axiom among professional ad-writers that the grouping of type areas so as to leave plenty of white space results in a strength of contrast that makes the ad. more attractive to the wandering eye of the reader and the easier to read when the eye has been attracted.

That is a very neat and effective ad. of Robson's Pure Food Store, from the Lindsay Warder. Though full of suggestive items the ad. does not appear crowded. The copy is brightly written and displayed to the best advantage. You will observe that the same style of type has been used in all display lines—a fact which rarely fails to produce a pleasing effect. Many an otherwise good ad. is more or less spoiled by mixing type styles.

The ad. of Kirkup & Wilkie is a striking one. A little heavy at the top, perhaps, but the size of the ad. with its body of neat paragraphs relieves the weight. A trifle more of strength might have been obtained by using type a few points smaller in the two sub-head lines. "Select Your Easter Delicacies from the largest and best stock in the Twin Cities." If this had been done the line— "Some Easter Specials" in the rule box would have gained considerably by contrast. The copy in this ad. is especially good. Every paragraph is crisp and suggestive.

From among a number of excellent ads. sent in by Forsyth, Jr., of Dartmouth, N.S., we have selected just one for reproduction. The paragraphs in this ad. are extraordinarily crisp and interesting. The pen of Forsyth, Jr., is indeed a lively and effective instrument. Take the "Clam" paragraph as an instance. It is a splendid combination of fun and suggestion. And the "Kippered Herring" paragraph. If there is a more attractive way of expressing the method of cooking a kippered herring it hasn't yet crossed our line of vision. It just shows how interesting the most commonplace articles of food can be made by a man who understands the nature of the articles and who possesses a good flow of language.

Attractive Store Front Aid to Business

Value of an Artistic and Imposing Exterior in Impressing the Public and Drawing Custom—The Views of an Architect —Ground Floor Plans of a Cape Breton Grocery and Men's Furnishings Store—Unique Fixtures Utilized.

By Chas. P. Band.

What the frame is to the picture so is a store front of unique and striking design to the art of window-dressing and the display of goods.

This is true in all lines of business. A handsome and impressive exterior will not alone draw custom, but when conjoined with appropriate window trimming, the effect is lasting because it is both inviting and pleasing. The impression is retained in the mind, and memory is invariably drawn to that store when a particular line of business is mentioned. A tasty and artistic exterior does not, as many erroneously suppose, mean one of glass and nothing but glass. It is time this idea was shattered and a proper conception realized of what constitutes an up-to-date business front, one designed to arrest attention, draw trade and advertise a store.

On various occasions I have found merchants who, in erecting stores, wanted the expense cut down as much as possible and particularly the expense of the front. I always took exception to this and urged upon them that a larger expenditure on the front from a business point of view is advisable. In some cases my advice has been taken and I know that those clients have many times been complimented by their constantly increasing number of customers on the enterprise exhibited in having unique stores which are advertising the business more than can as yet be estimated.

Lack of Judgment.

It has always been a puzzle to me why our shop-keepers who are looked upon as keen business men, can rarely ever be prevailed upon to spend money on the fronts of their stores. I can only attribute this lack of judgment to the fact that stock in trade and window-dressing have been, and still are, to a very large extent, the only occupants of the store man's mind as a medium to attract the public eye, but let me tell these people that here lies a huge mistake. Only a short time ago I tried to persuade a prospective client to erect a good front; but he said all he wanted was glass and lots of it to show his goods. I could not argue him out of it. I pointed out that he might show all the goods in his store in the windows and while gazed at they would no doubt create a good impression, but where is the memory of that impression a block or so farther on when other nice things have been seen and admired?—all forgotten, so far as my experience is concerned. Block after block has the eye been feasted until the mind is incapable of remembering one special store. On the other hand, erect a front which commands attention and the memory of that store and its owner's name will be carried constantly in the mind of the public as well as of the private individual and will be looked upon as a sort of landmark when one is in its vicinity.

This applies to any class of business, but in my opinion one that has been neglected a great deal up to the present time is the grocery store. With few exception our groceries, and especially those in the outskirts of a town or city, are dingy and far from inviting. Just notice how the bars and restaurants and other places which cater to the animal nature have brushed up their premises and compare them with groceries which cater to all classes of people. The contrast is quite startling. Why should not the latter wake up to the fact that if only from a business point of view a change in the present condition would repay well in dollars and cents the pioneer who ventures out of the apparent rut into which some grocery stores have fallen? When any change is made the cry seems to be plate glass and plenty of it. That to the storekeeper appears to be the height of beauty, but to my mind, plate glass has no beauty in itself, but depends entirely on its setting. Take the human eye, for instance. With the many different settings it has there are as many expressions; but cover up these settings and show the eye only, and you have a hard glazed expressionless surface—very uninteresting. So with plate glass. Glass to my mind is firstly a useful article for the purpose of getting light, and secondly artistic only when it takes a subordinate place with other materials.

If two grocery stores be within a block of each other and one owner improves his premises, see how quickly the competitor alters his. Why? Just because he is afraid the other chap will attract the public and so gain an advantage. This, almost everyone can remember seeing done, which bears out my contention that attractive fronts mean better business.

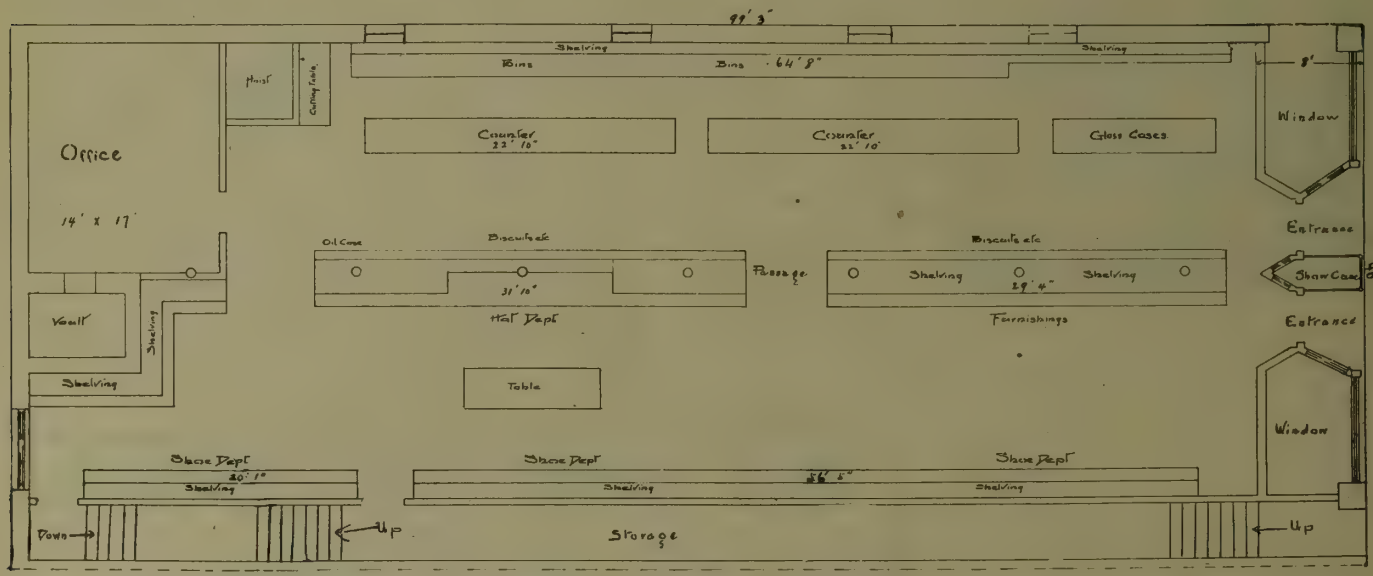
But bear in mind I don't refer to the flashy article. It has its place, certainly, but for the grocery we want something quiet, artistic and inviting, making one feel a desire to know what lies behind.

Interior Arrangement.

Next to the attractive front comes the interior arrangement, which in grocery stores, to be really successful, should be quiet in design and unpretentious, showing thought for the comfort of the customers and so arranged tha they can quietly move about among the counters and show cases. The attendants, while always within call, should never be constantly at one's elbow.



I trust these few words will be of benefit to some and cause a change which I am sure will increase business and at the same time increase the pride in the business.

[Editorial note].—The store front pictured in connection with the above article is that of A. D. Ingraham's store in Sydney, Cape Breton and the plan shown is that of the ground floor of the same building erected a few years ago. The interior is laid out for groceries, boots and shoes and gentlemen's furnishings, the one-half being used for groceries entirely and the other for the rest.

Looking at the store front we have the fine appearance referred to by Mr. Band, of a three-storey building. Different from most other such stores is the entrance. In fact, there are two entrances with a handsome shoe show-case separating them, and two large well. lighted display windows with glass prisms at the top for distributing the light to all parts of the interior. The second storey is fitted out into offices, the entrance to them being located to the left of the display window on the left. The whole building is 99 ft. 3 in. by 40 ft.

A glance at the plan of the interior shows that there is one general division down the centre. In the grocery department on the right are glass cases, and counters with shelving and bins behind for canned goods, cartons, etc. The counters are different from the ordinary variety. Stationary seats are arranged in front of them and they are so constructed to allow a person's knees to go underneath. There is also a railing for the feet to rest upon and a place to put them below if desired. There are two counters each 22 ft. 10 in. long. Behind them and below are drawers for groceries. The shelves are movable, built so that they can be adjusted on pegs and therefore readily made any distance apart to fit the goods placed upon them. On the opposite side are the biscuit bins, the glass doors of which slide backwards over the next bin when opened. To the rear is the cutting table for meats, etc., the hoist to storerooms above, the refrigerator, and the proprietor's office.

Altogether there are three passage ways from the grocery department to that of the men's furnishings and boots and shoes. The plan of this is easily followed, showing the shelving for furnishings, the hat department—the hats are shown in a large glass case—a display table and shoe sections separate for men and women. The circles marked down the centre represent columns extending to the ceiling and which can be seen above the partition containing biscuits, etc., on the one side and men's furnishings on the other. In fact, the whole store is recognized as one of the best equipped of its kind in Cape Breton and the expense in constructing is said to have since been fully justified by results. The cost of the erection of the entire store and fitting it up with all the fixtures in preparation for the stock was in the neighborhood of $20,000. The architect was Chas. P. Band, formerly of Sydney, but now of Toronto.

DON'TS FOR CLERKS.

Don't fail to get address of customer when possible. Don't fail to memorize the ads. of your store. Don't let your interest lag. Don't hide from a poorly dressed customer. Don't converse with other clerks while serving trade. Don't forget that if you want promotion you must merit it. Don't forget that the more you know the more you are worth. Don't get angry if the other fellow gets a raise—just hustle. Don't fail to be honest with your employer and customers. Don't be a "knocker." Don't growl when asked to do a little extra work. Don't forget that a lot of small sales are as good as big ones. Don't think by watching the clock that the store will close any sooner. Don't fail to impress customers so they will ask for you next time. Don't lose patience with a hard customer. Don't forget to induce some other article to customers besides that which they bought. Don't fail to try and make as many extra sales as possible.

Discarding Measures for the Weighing Scales

Hamilton Grocer Threw Away The Former Years Ago And Pins His Faith To The Latter—Never Sells Small Fish by The Dozen—He Wants To Give All His Customers a Square Deal, He says—Advocates a Seventy-five Pound Potato Bag As a Government Standard—Disadvantages of Present System.

"The grocer who can keep out of trouble is the grocer who sells by the pound."

That at any rate is the contention of Adam Ballantyne, a Hamilton grocer, who has spent the past thirty-five years in the trade in the Mountain City.

Adam Ballantyne is a grocer of the old school so far as years are concerned but he does not stick to conservative customs. He has been for some time and is yet a strong advocate of the weigh scales for selling goods. He claims that this is the only method of treating his customers alike.

"Why, I haven't a dry measure about the place," he said, "and what's more I threw them all away years ago."

In business since 1874, in the City of Hamilton, Mr. Ballantyne claims—and his claims seems just—that he knows something about the grocery business. He has worked his way up from a penniless youth and he says that "if he doesn't live too long he guesses he will quit successful."

Some Radical Ideas.

Discussing the scale question, he recently said: "I never sell those fish (referring to cisco herring) by the dozen, they go by weight. I was fooled for a long time by women who used to pick out a dozen of the biggest ciscoes in the box at the door, place them on top and then come in to tell me she wanted a dozen herring.

"In those times we did sell by the dozen because we scarcely realized that there was any other method, but when I came to see the injustice of it to some of my customers I changed my plans."

A few years ago therefore Mr. Ballantyne adopted the new method and claims that the satisfactory results obtained have entirely justified his action. During the past fish season no fish left his store without being weighed.

"And let me tell you," he added, "I want to know how many pounds I buy; we keep tracq of everything that comes in the store to see that we get what we pay for."

In this way there is no loss resulting from short-weight. If the latter occurs, as occasionally it does, the wholesalers are only too willing to investigate and make matters right.

No potatoes, carrots, turnips, etc., are ever sold by Mr. Ballantyne or his clerks by measure. They as well as fish are weighed, and in this he claims that he is one of the few Ontario grocers who adheres to such principles so common in the west.

"Guessing always leaves trouble; but no man can find fault when he sees you going to the scale."

A 75-Pound Potato Bag.

For some years Mr. Ballantyne has been advocating a standard bag of potatoes for Canada and that the standard weight should be 75 pounds.

"At present there is no government standard," he says, "outside of Quebec—there the weight is 80 lbs.

"In most cities and towns in Ontario, the municipality fixes the weight at 90 lbs. and a whole lot of trouble it causes."

He argues that since boys and old men are usually given the task of looking after potatoes 90 lbs. to a bag is too much. Most grocers have young delivery boys working for them and they are not able to handle with any degree of facility the bushel and a half bag.

When Mr. Ballantyne wants potatoes he orders them from the farmers in 75 lb. bags and gets them that way.

"A 100-lb. sugar bag just nicely holds 75 lbs. of potatoes but farmers are compelled when they go to market to use good, clean cotton bags for dirty potatoes and to discard the sugar bags.

"Ninety pounds is too much for men or boys to handle, while a seventy-five pound bag is easy. My brother-in-law brought me in a load the other day and unloaded them in a hurry."

To the purchaser there is'nt much difference whether he receives the large or smaller bag as the rate is no higher. Very often the smaller and therefore cheaper bag is found by Mr. Ballantyne to be preferable and especially among the middle and poorer classes who predominate in the buying field.

Not only has he cut down the weight of potatoes but the Ballantyne store handles no barrels of salt. They were excluded some time ago on account of their awkwardness to handle and now only the bags containing half-barrels are kept in stock.

Wants Government Standard.

On several occasions Mr. Ballantyne has advocated publicly the necessity in his opinion for a change and he has hopes of going into the matter more deeply, probably by visiting Ottawa and presenting his views to the members of the House. He contends that the conditions as they exist to-day are unfair to the producer, the merchant and the consumer.

He cited cases where farmers had come to market with their potatoes and because there weren't 90 lbs. in bags that wouldn't hold that much they were fined even though they measured correctly. Merchants sell potatoes by the bag and consumers do not all fare alike as regards the weight. If there was a government standard, this, he contends, would be eliminated, as it is in the case of farmers dealing with millers where the standard bushel is used.

"In selling wheat it doesn't matter whether the bag holds ninety, a hundred or a hundred and twenty pounds or whether or not the farmer measured out exactly two bushels—he gets paid by the weight and not by the bag."

All potatoes do not weigh alike and that's why Mr. Ballantyne contends the peck or bushel measures are of little or no value. That's why he threw them away years ago and now when a customer wants a peck of potatoes he gets no more nor less than 15 pounds.

Methods Used to Advantage.

Apart from these problems to which Mr. Ballantyne has given considerable thought and attention, his methods in business during his lengthy career have proved successful. He is one of those grocers who began at the foot of the ladder and has climbed steadily upward.

In 1866, he was working for the meagre salary of $5 per month, but after two years as a grocery clerk he succeeded in getting a raise of a dollar a month.

He spent some time in the wholesale grocery conducted by D. Murphy & Co., and in August of 1874, purchased a small business in Hamilton for himself. In those days education was not systematized and to secure enough knowledge to aid him in his grocery work he had to go to night school where he mastered spelling and arithmetic sufficiently well to carry him through.

He attributes his success to this early training which showed that he had to rest upon his own energies if he wished to succeed. Consequently by "straight hard work," he ermerged from the status of an ordinary clerk to an influential grocer. He attends to his business carefully but nevertheless never forgets that a holiday once a year does not make a man any poorer. A deer hunt in the autumn is his delight and seldom a season passes but he spends a fortnight among the haunts of the antlered monarch of the forest.

Profits in Handling China, Crockery, Etc.

Guelph Grocers Tell of Proper Business Methods to be Utilized in Carrying Such Goods—Careful Attention, Proper Display and Salesmanship Required—Benson Bros.' Store and its Modern Equipment—A Motto Firmly Adhered to.

Grocers, do you sell china, crockery and cut glass ware?

No money in it? Listen to what Benson Bros., Guelph grocers, have to say and read about their methods.

"Our business consists of high class groceries, fruits, confectionery and china ware. We devote about thirty-five feet of open shelving on the left to the display of dinner, tea and toilet sets and a closed-in case at the front for fancy china, rich cut-glass, and Crown Derby pieces. We find the china and crockery business pleasant to carry on and a profitable addition to our grocery. A nice display of pretty china is always admired and it brightens and improves the appearance of a store besides helping to attract attention."

What is necessary to make a success of selling crockery, etc., is attention and salesmanship. Bread, butter and the general groceries are necessities and sell according to the demand but it requires an aggressive salesman to sell cut glass and fancy china ware. The Benson Bros. have the store to show handsome and costly goods, they have the proper display conveniences and they have above all the spirit of aggressiveness so essential to the salesman who desires to become a little better than the best.

A Business Born in 1858.

The business now conducted in the Royal city by Benson Bros. is one with a history covering the last half century. It is one showing growth and expansion from its inception in 1858 by a Mr. Crawford. The first proprietor conducted it for one year only, when it was taken over by Jno. A. Wood, his clerk. His business connection with the store was of twenty years duration. He carried on a profitable trade and is yet well remembered by many of the older customers of Benson Bros. He was succeeded by Robert Mitchell, at present the Guelph postmaster, who was the proprietor until June, 1906. Next came the Benson Bros. who have now a business surpassed by few for up-to-the-minute methods and store equipment—and they are both young men yet.

Their Qualifications.

Wellington County, near Drayton, was their birth place. Wm. C. Benson was once a miller so that he had a good knowledge of flour, at least. He spent several years in Glencoe at the milling trade before joining his brother to take over their present business.

Jas. A. Benson went to Guelph in 1891 and was fortunate in securing a course in the Business College there. As a foundation to becoming a grocer he started as a clerk with Geo. Williams where for 13 years—a lucky number in this case—he got into close touch with the trade and the proper methods in the running of a grocery store.

For this year and for the past two years Benson Bros. have had the contract for supplying the Ontario Agricultural College and the Macdonald Hall and Institute. This is one of the largest government contracts and in order to fill it satisfactorily a grocer has to be "on to his job."

The Motto They Follow.

A grocery firm with a motto and which sticks to it through thick and thin has the better opportunity to win. "Do Right" is the one Benson Bros. adhere to and although it is short so far as words are concerned it embodies a great deal.

This is one of the principal reasons of the success of these young men in the grocery and crockery business. They have endeavored to deal with their customers as they would be done by and thus have upheld the principles of the Golden Rule.

Their assortment and arrangement of china and glassware as shown by the accompanying illustration is attractive, suggests cleanliness, care and attention and no wonder they have profited by it. The under part of the case showing the display consists of packets for oranges, lemons, etc. They also have a large apartment about 35 feet x 17 feet upstairs as a china-ware display room.

Just a year ago their store was remodelled by changing the front door from the side to the centre thus providing two display winnows instead of one. This re-arrangement resulted in windows more easily dressed on account of them being smaller.

"It took almost half a day to dress the big one," remarked Jas. A. Benson, "consequently it was not changed very often but with the new windows we can dress them every morning or every other morning at the least. A few articles are sufficient to make a nice display and everything can be taken in at a glance by the passer-by."

They use one window for groceries and the other for china-ware, etc. A large prism of glass extends across the top about three feet in width and they raised the window about three and one half feet higher than it was. For this they were criticized by many but they believe the results obtained have justified their action.

Attractive Store Necessary.

To show that the Benson Bros. want the best, they have a handsome cream-colored metallic ceiling in their store which with the assistance of the prism, light is diffused throughout the store in the best possible manner. Walker-Bin fixtures have been installed and silent salesmen are utilized. At the rear of the store is an archway and a stairway to the left of this leading up to the china department. To the right is a passageway to the warehouse. Opposite the archway is the refrigerator and a section of shelving on which are displayed canned goods and cereals.

In the store room there have just been installed large, deep shelves on which are stored delivery boxes, flour, salt, sugar, and other heavy goods. This spring the Benson Bros. have placed on the road three newly painted and nicely lettered delivery waggons. They believe that a clean, attractive delivery outfit with good horses is an advertisement for a business and one that should be consistently considered.

The Benson Bros. therefore in handling crockery, china and glassware show their fellow merchants how these goods can be made profitable. What is necessary is a bright store, modern equipments, proper display windows and salesmanship.

LAPORTE, MARTIN & CO.

Laporte, Martin & Co., Montreal, are advertising a list of their agencies which include a large number of European and American firms as well as Canadian companies. They are advising the trade to wait for their travelers before closing any business for canned goods of the present season. They are also drawing attention to the Soleil brand of imported canned goods for which they are agents. They have on hand a varied assortment of canned goods of the 1908 pack which may be obtained at very advantageous prices. Just at this time when the market is bare it is interesting to know that they are advertising a full line of teas of all kinds and grades.—Advt.

FIRST ILLNESS IN 28 YEARS.

Some three months ago, J. H. Devaney, a representative of Warren Bros. & Cp., wholesale grocers, Toronto, was taken ill in Sudbury and for two months afterwards was confined to his bed. This was the first illness Mr. Devaney experienced in the 28 years he has been traveling for Warren Bros. and two other houses. About June 1st he expects to resume his trips to the north where, no doubt, his friends will be glad to welcome him again. He is one of the old brigade of "knights of the grip" and when he began to travel the C.T.A. had a membership of some 2,600. To-day it has reached the 8,800 mark.

G. Wallace Weese, manufacturers' representative, Hamilton, Ont., has recently changed his offices from Myles' storage warehouse, corner Main and Hughson Streets, to larger premises at 30-32 Main Street East, Hamilton. A new agency recently added by Mr. Weese is that of the Montreal Biscuit Co.

PUT YOUR HEART INTO YOUR WORK.

By Jerome P. Fleishman.

The man who succeeds in any line of endeavor is he who has worked wholeheartedly, whole-souledly, whole-selfedly for success.

For this thing called Success is simply the realization of ideals we have formed, and striven to materialize.

Don't have a "grouch" against the firm that supplies your bread and butter. Better work for ten dollars a week and work than be employed at twenty-five dollars a week and shirk.

Coming down to the office in the morning with a desire to make the day pass as quickly as possible, and with as little real work performed as is absolutely necessary, is a dead-sure way to oblivion.

There's no exhilaration that can equal the feeling a man sensates after a particularly hard job has been got out of the way, and got out of the way by being done right.

The difference between enthusiasm and half-heartedness is the difference between a big, fat envelope on pay day and a salary that gets smaller in the eyes of the man who is always looking for, but never working for a raise.

Enthusiasm! That's the thing that builds bridges and tunnels through mountains. One enthusiastic employe in an organization is worth an army of wishers for six o'clock and Saturday afternoon.

And there can be no enthusiasm unless you are heart, head, and hand in league with your work.

The man who views his daily work as part of his daily self is the man who accomplishes things. The man who performs his duties in a spirit of let's-get-rid-of-these-pesky matters is the man you never hear of as making progress.

Put your heart into your work!

How Fort William Merchants Watch Deadbeats.

Agency Institutes a Protective System There Somewhat Similar to the One in Guelph—About Two Hundred of a Membership—Fee of $10 Paid Annually—Duties of the Members—No Collecting Done.

By J. R. Lumby.

The Sovereign Accounting Agency, of Fort William, is an off-shoot or development from the Sovereign Collecting Agency, which was originally simply devoted to the collection of accounts for the local merchants. After about a year's experience in this work, W. M. Rae, the manager, noticed that the same names recurred over and over again in their books, as owing sums small and large to a number of different merchants in the city. Many of these accounts were practically uncollectable, and were only a source of annoyance to the creditor and of useless work on the part of the collectors. It struck Mr. Rae that a system could be devised that would protect the merchants against the continual loss from these persistent defaulters, and at the same time prove a source of income to the agency. It was thus that the Sovereign Accounting Agency was established, and brought into being a plan which is to-day receiving the hearty endorsation of the retailers.

The Regulations Adopted.

The membership fee paid in to the agency is $10 per year, and the methods of doing business will be more readily understood by a study of the following conditions of membership, which are printed on the official certificate issued to each merchant upon his joining the agency:

(1) Each member is to furnish the bureau with a list of all accounts that he is having trouble with in the transaction of his business.

(2) We expect the members to include all persons who are hard to do business with, regardless of prestige, in this list.

(3) If a delinquent should make good within a reasonable time after being listed, it will be the duty of the member to notify the bureau at once of such.

(4) If a member has trouble with new business during the year, it will be his duty to notify the bureau at once, furnishing proper name and address.

(5) The books will be open for inspection by all members only at the office of the bureau, or information will be given by phone or through the mails. We reserve the privilege of not giving information by phone if we think the party inquiring is not a member or his clerk or agent.

(6) It is the desire of the bureau to include all men in all kinds of legitimate business as members, as the experience of one helps the other.

We expect the assistance and co-operation of all members at all times in furnishing information promptly in regard to delinquents.

(7) It will be the duty of each and every member to notify the bureau at once if he has a customer who leaves him owing a balance, and it will also be the duty of each member to make inquiries at the bureau office in regard to any party or parties asking for credit, who cannot show a clear receipt from the parties with whom they traded last.

(8) No one will be admitted as a member unless he is a bona fide business man of the City of Fort William.

(9) Any member who divulges any information received through the bureau to any party or parties not members, and it can be proven against him, he will forfeit his membership for the balance of the year, and for ever after.

The agency conducts a retailers' information bureau, and prints an alphabetical list of delinquent customers, partly compiled from the records of the collection branch, and partly from the reports furnished by members. This list is issued in full annually, and monthly supplements are issued which include the names of any persons who have been reported as poor pay for each month. These are graded by a private code into classes ranging from slow to dead-beat, while a special notation is attached to any who have had the misfortune of being sued and against whom judgment has been issued in the courts.

Acceptable to Merchants.

It will thus be seen that, while the agency itself can accomplish certain good results, the fullest satisfaction will only be obtained by the active co-operation of the retail merchants, in carrying out to the letter the conditions of membership given above. So far the books of the agency show that the merchants are availing themselves very readily of the benefits of this plan for self-protection, the membership being approximately two hundred, and most of these reporting fairly regularly.

The agency has worked into a business system a scheme which has been tried in many other forms elsewhere. In some towns and cities the same results are attempted by the retailers associations, which meet occasionally and discuss the black-listing of delinquent customers, but this being everybody's business, it often degenerates into being nobody's business, and under these circumstances cannot be as carefully systematized as when it is in the hands of a single capable firm. In the City of Vancouver the Retailers' Association employs a man on salary to do the work and pays the cost of printing and distributing the lists, and it is possible that in a city of that size, such would prove a satisfactory way of arriving at the same results, but in a city the size of Fort William it is probably better in the hands of an energetic firm which will do the work on the basis of a fixed annual fee, as in the present instance.

How the Scheme Benefits.

The opinion of many of the retail grocers of Fort William was asked regarding the work of the agency and information bureau, and without exception they endorsed its methods and testified to the value which it had been to them. One merchant intimated that the agency had saved him several times the price of membership in a few weeks, and that he regarded the fee as being extremely moderate, while another of the grocers said that he found it a very great help to him in the case of new customers asking for credit.

One instance was found in which the value of the system was proved in a negative manner. A new merchant opening in the grocery business paid his membership fee and secured the list, founded upon the experience of others. A month or two later he called at the office of the agency complaining that certain customers, to whom he had given credit, were apparently in the no-pay schedule. Mr. Rae referred him to the list, where the names mentioned appeared as not worthy of credit, and asked him why he had not allowed himself to be guided by the information he had paid for. The merchant urged as an excuse that they had commenced by paying cash and had slipped into the credit line by degrees. The obvious reply to this was that it was for exactly this class of customer that the list was compiled, and that it is usually safer to profit by the actual experience of one's predecessors in misfortune than to find out by personal loss that what they testify to is true.

In short, under the management of an energetic and capable man a service is being given which the retail merchants as a body find entirely adequate, and is worth to them every dollar that is costs.

A Cash System Founded on Novel Principles

Success Above all Anticipations has Followed—Once Formed Regulations Never Were Broken—Credit Refused Regina City and Even the Government of Saskatchewan—Operation of a Deposit Account System—Customers Pay Their Money in Advance—Cash on Delivery on Goods Taken Back—Enormous Increase in the Business.

By W. McInnis.

"Would it be advisable for me to adopt the cash system?" is a question which at some time or other confronts every merchant, especially in Western Canada, and the merits of the business run on the cash basis, as compared with those of the business done on the credit system, are constantly under review. With many the question never seems settled, as there are advantages to be cited in either system. But so far as one of the leading mercantile establishments of Regina is concerned, the question is settled once and for all. The store referred to has reduced the cash system to a science, and to-day the richest man in Canada could not secure goods there without the cash. How the system is worked out, is, of course, the interesting point and one which will bear explanation here.

At the outset, it may be stated that the store referred to, the Regina Trading Company, Limited, does the largest business of any store, not only in Regina, but in the Province of Saskatchewan Its trade has been spread throughout the length and breadth of this province, and in Regina the store carries a stock that can only be duplicated at Winnipeg, Toronto, or other large cities. The reason for all this is found in the cash system, which was introduced three years ago.

With the commencement of 1909, the Regina Trading Company entered the fourth year of business under the cash system, and the manager sums up his success in figures which sound almost too large to be true, and in words which are glowing tributes to the pay-as-you-go plan in operation there. During the two years of operation under the cash system the business has grown by leaps and bounds, and the store that started on a modest scale is to-day a busy hive of commerce, its spacious departments thronged with people from morning till night, and hustling clerks handling their trade, taking in the money for each transaction, and every sale making an addition to the cash receipts, which, in the evening, will be totalled up. Two cash girls are required to handle the business, and even during dull times such as have been experienced throughout the West during the winter months, they have been taxed to capacity.

The Regina Trading Company introduced the cash system at a time when affairs had reached such a stage that there was need of a move of some kind or other along a new line. Three years ago the management felt that some change must be made, and it was decided to give cash discount of five per cent. off the marked prices. Goods were all plainly marked and those taking credit were charged full price, while those desiring to pay cash could secure five per cent, discount. It was thought that by the introduction of this scheme the number of book accounts could be greatly reduced. But what was the result? That it was not satisfactory can be judged because after a year of this system another change was made. The experience of the management with the five per cent. cash discount scheme was that those customers who would pay cash anyway, took advantage of the discount, while those who were in the habit of running book accounts took the credit and paid for their goods at regular prices, apparently thinking that little was to be gained by endeavoring to pay cash and getting the discount.

J. F. BOLE,
Originator of Unique Cash System in the Store of the Regina Trading Co.

But under this cash discount system business was growing rapidly just the same. The city and the province were advancing, and large numbers of new people were coming into the district. It was easy to see that to continue to do a credit business would be to get more on the books than they would be able to carry with the banks.

Could Afford to Lose Money.

In November, 1905, it was estimated that the firm had book accounts to the amount of $60,000, and this was steadily increasing, for every day someone asked for credit, and every day a new account was opened, and some days there were a good mank new ones. It was estimated that they could afford to lose $40,000 off the annual turn-over, and still make as much money under the cash system as could be made under the credit mehod of doing business. It was a bold step to take, and one which required a great deal of courage, but after due consideration, the management decided that on and after January 1, 1906, the business would be conducted on a strictly cash basis.

Everyone Knew of It

Means were taken to make everyone acquainted with the change proposed and through advertisements in the Regina papers the announcement was made that there would be no credit after January 1. Every customer whose name was on the books of the company received a circular informing him of the change, and requesting that the balance standing against his name be cleared up. Through the medium of the daily and weekly press of Regina the announcement was also made.

New Rule in Force.

The new rule was strict. All goods had to be paid for at the counter or on delivery, and a system of c.o.d.'s was introduced. This was reduced to the simplest scheme possible, and is found to work exceedingly well. However, the management knew the convenience of the charge system, and decided that there must be some substitute for the straight monthly account—some means devised by which people could telephone in orders and pay for their goods monthly. After many suggestions and much consideration they adopted the plan of demanding the cash in advance from the customers who desired their goods without payment at the counter. This at first appeared to be a most extraordinary request for any merchant to make, but as it has worked out it will be seen that it is proving quite satisfactory to all who have adopted it. Customers who desired their goods charged up were required to make deposits at the first of each month, a credit entry being made for the amount, and four per cent. per annum added to the daily balance. When the customer with such a deposit account desires goods he places the order with the clerk, the counter check is sent through, marked paid by the cash girl, and returned to the clerk to have the order filled.

At the first introduction of this system some customers kicked. There were those who had always been good patrons of the store who got on their dignity at a demand for cash, and said they had always been able to get credit, and could get it elsewhere if the Trading Company would not give it. The management had expected that there would be some customers take this view, and although it was pretty discouraging to see one after another good customer refused credit and withdraw his trade, they never gave in to anyone. The first refusal of credit was to the City of Regina. The rule was made to fit everyone, and when the corporation applied for credit, it could not be secured. They went elsewhere. The next large customer refused was the Government of the Province of Saskatchewan, for even that institution could not secure a line of credit at this store. It is to this feature of the system that special credit for its success is attributed; favors were granted to no one and no one could get goods on time.

Deposit Account System.

Further explanation of the deposit account system will not be out of place here. A book is kept in the cash desk for each depositor, run after the fashion of an ordinary bank pass book. When a deposit is made the amount is entered up just as is done in dealing with the bank. Lists are posted in the different departments showing the names of those who have deposit accounts, and from this list each clerk takes his instructions in the main. When a customer having a deposit account makes a purchase, the clerk makes out a bill in the counter check book, this being sent in over the cash carriers to the girl in the cash desk. If the depositor still has a balance to credit, the girl stamps the bill "paid" and sends it back to the clerk. After this procedure is gone through the clerk puts up the goods, but he is not allowed to do so until the cash girl has placed her stamp on the bill. In this way the responsibility for seeing that customers do not overdraw their accounts is placed upon the cash girls, and their part in the deposit account system is no small one, requiring as it does accuracy and integrity.

When the bill for the goods is stamped "paid" by the cash girl, she immediately enters in the debit column of the deposit account book the date and the total of the bill. The duplicate part of the bill goes to the office, and there lady clerks enter on the ledger account the purchases, item by item. A loose leaf system is employed for this purpose, and at the end of each month the depositor is sent a statement showing the goods purchased with each bill, and the balance, if there be any, to his credit. A statement of the total of each bill of goods is also sent. The deposit book is returned with the statement, and the customer thereby has the means of checking off the items and assuring himself of the accuracy of the charges made against his deposit account. By the use of carbon a copy of the pass-book is also kept on file at the office.

Cash on Delivery System.

The c.o.d. system is handled in this way: There are customers who telephone orders, but who do not keep any deposit account. Their goods are delivered to them with c.o.d. slips attached, and the delivery man collects or brings back the goods. Each delivery man is given $10 in change, which he carries at all times. When a clerk takes an order over the telephone or at the counter for c.o.d., the duplicate of the bill goes into the cash desk and is filed on what is known at the "C.O.D. File." The clerks are furnished with large red stickers marked "c.o.d.", on which there is space for the address and the amount of the bill to be collected, the bill of the goods always being attached to the parcel to ensure no mistake being made. The duplicate bill, which was sent to the cash desk by the clerk, is taken from there to the office, and the bunch of these is separated into districts, one district for the route of each driver. In the morning each delivery man is required to cash-in the amount of his previous day's collections, and some times these men carry over night as much as $40 or $50, or even more. To secure men who can be held responsible for this work, the store must pay top wages, but it is found that in the end this pays, and the Regina Trading Company has never yet lost through an absconding clerk.

Result of System.

The result of the introduction of this very complete system has been most satisfactory. After two years' trial it is found that instead of losing $40,000 in volume of trade—which it was figured could be dropped without losing profit—during the first year the cash system was in operation, 1906, the business showed an increase in volume of $80,000 over the previous year. During the pear 1907, it showed an increase of $100,000 over 1906, or $180,000 over 1905, the last year the credit ?system was in force, and the year during which the five per cent. cash discount was allowed. Another most remarkable feature of the business of the Regina Trading Company is that during 1906 there was never a month that did not show an increase in business over the corresponding month of the year previous, and during the year 1907 there was never a month that did not show another increase over the corresponding month of 1906. When one considers the times of financial depression through which the country passed during the closing months of 1907, this statement is the more remarkable.

The Man Behind.

The man who has accomplished things as set forth in the foregoing is J. F. Bole, M.L.A., manager of the business of the Regina Trading Company. It is not without some degree of pride that he looks back over the past two years and views the success which he introduced with the cash system, and he has not the slightest hesitation in recommending to other merchants the adoption of a similar style of business. The details, he said, must of course be worked out to suit the needs of the community in which business is being done, but the principle is always the same, and he believes that what the Regina Trading Company has done, other stores can do. He remarked that the great secret of his success has been that he gave in to no one. Had he granted any favors and given credit to individuals, the first effect would have been to demoralize the staff of the store, and if the manager started to do such a thing, the clerks would be tempted to do the same. The very people to whom the favor of credit might be granted would be the first to lose confidence, and sooner or later others would learn that such favors were being granted, and they, too, would lose confidence. By refusing the requests of everyone, the management at first lost customers for the store, but the greater part of these have since recognized the value of the monthly deposit system or of paying cash, and they have nearly all returned with their trade, admitting the rule adopted to be the best one. Had the old credit system been continued, Mr. Bole says, instead of having no accounts on the books now, there would be $100,000 or more, and this would be more than the store could carry. Making people thoroughly acquainted with the new system of business was an important factor in the success of the undertaking, and another feature which helped along the business was that the store was able to and did sell cheaper than competitors were selling. They could afford to do this because there were no bad debts, and they knew that every time the carriers came to the cash desk they contained money and not additional bills to be charged on long monthly accounts.

Great Help in Financing.

There is another feature of the business which will be of great interest to merchants. The deposit account system, bringing in as it does large sums of money each month, provides a great assistance to financing. The depositor bringing in a deposit of $100 on the first day of the month is credited with $100, plus four per cent. per annum for the 30 days, or total of $100.33. On the day the depositor makes this payment of $100, the store probably has a bill of goods for $100 coming due. To pay this bill promptly would be to save the trade discount of five per cent. and with the depositor's $100 the store pays the bill of goods, securing five per cent. discount. In this way the depositor secured $100.33 for his even $100, and the wholesaler secured $95 in settlement of the $100 bill of goods. The store, on the other hand, having paid 33 cents for the use of the customer's $100 for the month, saves $5 by paying the bill due, and makes a net profit of $4.67 on the transaction, in adition to securing payment in advance for the goods sold out of the store and doing away with endless bookkeeping entailed by the credit system.

This is a feature which is well worth the careful consideration of every merchant, for by it he is enabled to finance almost without the assistance of the banks, and to carry stock varied in quality as well as in quantity, which he could not handle under the monthly account system.

THE PRICE OF BORDER.

Losses Recently Sustained by Manufacturers Will Likely Produce Better Prices.

Following the recent formation of the American Wall Paper Manufacturers' Association in New York, of which practically all the United States manufacturers are members, and which was formed for mutual interests in regard to freight rates, credits, and the general discussion of wall paper conditions, one of the most vital subjects of interest to the entire wall paper trade came to the surface, i.e., the border question.

It seemed obvious that few, if any, manufacturers had held their own since the flattening of the border price eight years ago, while 32 manufacturers have gone to the wall on account of the loss sustained in consequence. It is doubtful even now if any one of these men actually realized what his borders really cost him to make in proportion to hanging, until S. S. Boxer, of the Watson, Foster Company, Montreal, who was known to have made a series of comparative tests extending over entire seasons, was asked by one of the American trade journals to give his experience in the matter. His demonstration was so conclusive and reasonable that the snbject is now a very lively one, and all the American trade journals are inviting opinions from the dealers throughout the United States and practically all are favorable to a special border price.

Mr. Boxer showed by actual tests, based on his figures and experience, that the average roll of border, one and two-band, costs three times more than its hanging to produce. It would seem that even the man in the street can understand that the cost of the first roll of wall, border or ceiling of any pattern, being practically the same, the cost of the entire run of the border must be proportionately more than that of the hanging, the run of which is five times greater with practically no more expense. All people in the trade understand this, but have never realized what a tremendous loss it has been to the factories, who were never able to stiffen the price of their hangings in order to average up.

But it is not the manufacturer only who is interested in this; in fact, the retail dealer is more concerned in the reestablishment of the border price. He will sell, and the people will buy, as much as ever—more, because the dealer will then have some interest in pushing wall paper, which at present is not very remunerative.

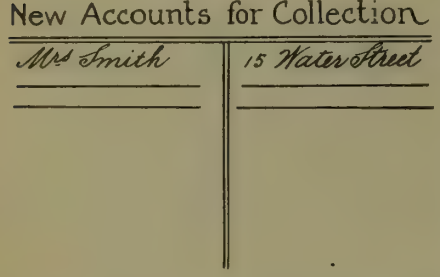
There is probably no other industry which does not base its selling price on the cost of production of any article. The wall paper people seem to be waking up to the necessity of doing this.

In view of the unanimity of the makers, jobbers and dealers in the United States it is safe to say that the flat border price will go down and out when the new season's lines appear, and it is likely that Canadian houses will follow suit.

A TRUTHFUL M.D.

"Do you drink coffee?" asked the doctor of an aged patient.

"Yes," was the reply.



"Coffee," continued the M.D., "is a slow poison."

"Yes, very slow," replied the old man. "I have taken it daily for nearly eighty years."

Workings of Collection System in Guelph

Methods Used by the Collector and Monthly Statements He Issues for Benefit of the Merchants—How the Assessment is Made on Those Who Receive the Benefits of the System—Merchants' Share in Providing the Collector With Necessary Information and the Method by Which Money Received is Divided Among the Different Creditors.

By this time retail merchants in every city and town in Canada have become acquainted with the fact that in Guelph there is a collection system in vogue which under no consideration would be relinquished by those it has protected from the unprofitable delinquent during the past year. The benefits of the system have been recorded on various occasions by The Canadian Grocer; but the purpose of this article is to illustrate the workings of the unique scheme, the promoters of which have been extolled by fellow merchants in the city of Guelph hundreds of times.

Unsatisfactory collections have for ages past been worrying the retail merchants where the cash system has not been adopted. In some cases it is considered unwise to adopt the plan of selling for cash only, and there's where the rub comes in. Since Guelph has been courageous enough to come to the front with a successful system for not only the collection of bad debts but for the prevention of them, other cities and towns are anxious to follow suit. In fact one city—Brantford—has just recently organized a system similar to the one established in Guelph; Chatham seems also to have caught the contagion; Berlin is making inquiries and Cornwall in the eastern portion of the province is alive to its own interests and in all probability will fall in line as soon as its merchants become apprised of the complete operation of the scheme.

Qualificatious of Collector.

Once the merchants of any town or city have decided to establish a collection system and have completed their organization plans, the remainder lies with the collector. It is therefore essential that a man be procured who knows his ground, who understands something about the differences in human nature, one who is energetic, strict but tactful, and one who always does as he says.

From the statements of the officers of the Retail Merchants' Association of Guelph, they seem to have secured pretty nearly the ideal man for the occasion in D. A. Scroggie, a former grocer in the Royal City. From a personal conversation with him the writer was easily convinced of the good fortune of the merchants. Mr. Scroggie is in love with his work, as the results which have followed his labors will testify. He follows up every "slow pay" in the city until he gets his money and during the 10 months, ending May 1st, 1909, collected for the men he serves $2,146.38. This, in the estimation of the merchants themselves, only represents a small portion of his services. Many delinquents rather than have the collector call once a week or once every two weeks at their homes, pay the merchants they owe and avoid the gossiping of their neighbors. It is safe to say that double that amount has been received directly due to the fact that the collector was appointed.

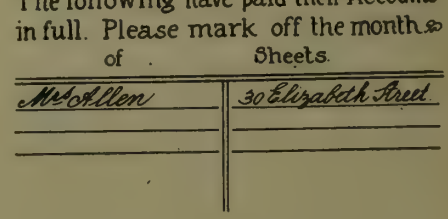
But the main advantage lies in the protection again the "dead-beats" who are continually seeking for goods for which they do not want to pay. Therein lies the secret of the success of the system in Guelph and the reason why the beneficiaries are maintaining it so strongly.

Details of the Work.

As intimated above the collector is practically the whole system. All that the merchants themselves are required to do is to hand to him the accounts they desire collected. These accounts are made out in the ordinary way and are just the same as those the merchants themselves would send to their debtors. They may differ in one particular—they are not itemized. Some merchants, of course, do not itemize their accounts. If the debtor refuses to accept the total as shown on the account as correct, the collector is then obliged to go back to the merchant to secure the detailed account. This, however, seldom occurs.



The first stage is therefore simple. The merchant doesn't even have to mail the various accounts to the collector. He calls in every store regularly and they are simply handed over to him.

What Collector's Books Consist of.

Every month the collector prepares four different sheets for his own and for the merchants' benefit.

When he receives the accounts from the merchants he prepares a list of "New accounts for collection" as shown in the first illustration on this page. Only the name and address are given with this and if any one desires to know whom these people owe and the amount, all he has to do is to 'phone the collector at his office and he has his queries answered. Remember, the names appearing on this list have never appeared on any before as delinquents. Every merchant enjoying the advantages of the system gets a copy of this sheet—which in Guelph, as well as the other towns are typewritten — once a month. It is easily made out by the collector from the names of those sent in who have hitherto been paying cash, who have come from another town or city or who are beginning to be slow pays.

In this way every merchant knows just when anyone begins to get credit. He knows the amount each has gotten and if he does not consider them good pay they don't get an opportunity to deal with him. He uses his own judgment.

This sheet, as well as the others which will be described, are kept in the merchant's store and a glance will show where the would-be honest or dishonest debtor stands financially.

Accounts to be Collected.

Another monthly sheet prepared by the collector and sent to every merchant is the one showing the list of accounts given to him for collection with the amount each debtor has paid on them.

This sheet is headed: "Following have been handed me for collection for the month of——— and the amounts opposite the names have been paid on account." As the accompanying illustration indicates, the names, addresses and the amounts paid on accounts are given.

The merchant can scan this sheet in a few moments and determine who are the slow pays and who are not. He can tell from it whether one of his long-credit customers has been cashing up and therefore whether he is getting his money even before his cheque comes in. The collector usually delays sending a merchant a cheque until an amount worth while has been collected from different debtors.

Paid in Full.

A third sheet prepared by the collector monthly is one headed like this: "The following have paid their accounts in full. Please mark off the month of ———sheets." Beneath is given the name and street address of those who are no longer debtors to their merchants. This provides more information. It shows that some are paying up and that generally speaking these are the parties who can be trusted. Since every merchant has this list he knows what to do when one whose name is on it asks for credit. If he wishes to find out how large the account was and to whom it was owed he gets his information from the secretary.

Small Accounts Handed in for Collection and paid in full for the month of.....

When this list of names has been received the merchant red-inks or blue pencils the same names on the sheet previously explained. The remainder, he knows, are still debtors.

Every month there are a large number of small accounts, ranging from 50c. to say $1.50, and these are kept separate by the collector. Statements showing that these have been paid are also given monthly to the merchants. It reads as follows: "Small accounts handed in for collection and paid in full for the month of———." The name, address and amount is placed below.

Circulated Quarterly.

In order that the merchants may know exactly where they are at, they are provided quarterly with statements showing the total amounts collected for each man in the association and paid over to him by the collector.

These statements are headed: "The following moneys have been collected and paid to the different merchants, members of the association as follows:"

In the list that follows it the merchants are classified, according to their occupation, such as grocers, hardwaremen, dry goods merchants, butchers, druggists, etc.

How Merchants are Paid.

The only other books the collector needs are cheque book, ledger and cash book. The former is used in paying the merchants, as all moneys when collected are placed in the bank. On the back of each cheque are written by the collector the names of the merchant's debtors who have helped to make up total shown on the face of it. The amount each debtor has contributed is placed opposite his or her name. The bank returns to the collector every cheque presented so that if at any time a merchant should dispute the receipt of money from any debtor the disagreement can be easily decided.

The ledger is used by the collector for entering up all accounts as soon as they come in from the merchants.

When cash comes in each merchant is credited in the cash book with his share. The ledger and cash book are kept up to date every night, the collector attending to this after tea.

No "Pro Rata" Used.

A point that naturally arises in the distribution of the cash collected among merchants who have the same people owing them, is the share that each should receive. This is not done by the pro rata plan in Guelph; and it doesn't matter how old an account is—it is always new in the eyes of the collector.

In collecting Mr. Scroggie usually determines how much a debtor will be able to pay each week or every two, three or four weeks, on account.

Supporting a party owes four merchants twenty dollars altogether—one two dollars, the second three, the third five and the fourth ten, and that the party agrees to pay him two dollars each week until the account is cleared away. The merchant who is owed the ten dollars gets but a quarter share of the two dollars each week—that is, fifty cents—the same as the other three. Of course at the end of the fourth week the merchant with the two dollar account has been paid and the collector the fifth week has two dollars to divide evenly among the remaining three. Eventually the three and five dollar accounts are paid and the man with the ten dollar account gets the whole two dollars.

This plan has been found to work satisfactorily and it saves considerable work to the collector.

Only two more explanations are required. The share that each merchant contributes to the expense of maintaining the collection system and the method of paying the collector's salary must be worked out satisfactorily before it is instituted.

In Guelph the merchants paid either $10 or $15 each, according to their location. Those on the main street, generally speaking, were assessed the latter amount while those off the main street paid the smaller sum and many now are willing to expend $25 for the protection. The collector was paid by salary which amounted to $800. This amount came out of the general fund to which all merchants who received the benefits of the system subscribed. In the establishing of this method it is a wise precaution to see that all merchants pay their share in advance so that there will be no difficulty experienced in furnishing the collector's salary.

Some Results Obtained.

lection system in Guelph. A year ago when the system was instituted it was all a gamble as to the success it would be and as to the ultimate results. Today Guelph merchants pronounce it a providential plan. It has unearthed the professional dead-beat and shown him in his true light. It has found out those who purchase beyond their means intending to remunerate and those who are slow-pays. All these facts the merchant has before him and he has only to use his best judgment in dealing with the various cases.

Grocers have been found to be the most charitable class of merchant in Guelph. Out of the $2,146.38 bad debts which Mr. Scroggie collected in 10 months grocers received $484.27. Furniture men came second with $384.41, closely followed by hardware merchants and dry goods men. Foodstuffs are absolutely necessary, which explains why grocers carry the greatest credit accounts.

Sensitiveness in some people in Guelph, lest the collector should suddenly appear at their doors, causes them to send by mail the amounts they promised to the collector. Mr. Scroggie gets on an average of $25 per week in this manner. Others go direct to the merchant and pay their accounts. If for any reason however, they should miss the mail on the day appointed or fail in calling on the merchant they owe at the specified time, the collector bobs up at their doors the following day to discover the reason why.

If a family not accustomed to paying regularly move from one part of the city to another the collector knows it and the merchants there are advised of the fact. To escape is impossible.

Brantford Grocers Organized.

Some time ago the Retail Grocers' and Butchers' Association decided to take up the question, having become acquainted with its success in Guelph. They secured H. Occomore, vice-president of the Merchants' Association at Guelph, and a man who was one of the principal promoters, to address them from the organizing standpoint. Later they invited Mr. Scroggie over to tell them of the work of the collector, and with his assistance secured 112 merchants willing to venture the scheme in Brantford. The assessment is fixed there at $10 each so that the 112 merchants represent already $1,120.

Mr. Scroggie has also been to Chatham where 23 merchants agreed to make the test. The fixed rate of $10 will also prevail there if the scheme goes through.

Mr. Scroggie contends there are at least twenty-five towns and cities in Ontario who could be benefitted by a collection system similar to the one Guelph enjoys.

A Wide-awake Executive.

No doubt a great deal of the success that has attended the efforts of the Guelph merchants has been due to progressive men in the association. The executive meets once a month—and almost invariably eight out of the nine members are present. They have a little supper at one of the hotels and afterwards talk over plans to be presented at the general meeting of the association which is held one week later. In this way they always have something substantial for the monthly meeting and thus they get the members to attend.

Inconsistencies of the Credit System

Cultivation of Bad Habits Cause a Great Deal of Trouble—Merchants Give Credit While Other Business Men Get the Ready Money—What Uncollectable Debts Might do for the Retailer—Grounds of Defence of the Credit System.

By G. B. Van Blaricom.

There is one ideal system in business and that is to buy and sell for cash.

How happy, how pleasant, how satisfactory things would be if every purchaser paid spot cash. What a vast amount of expense would the merchant save—no bookkeeping outlay, no collecting department, no bad debts, no book accounts whatever—in short, no losses. He would know exactly at all times just where he stood and what he could reasonably undertake—or in other words, how far he could launch out. How many disappointments, how much worry and anxiety, how much loss of time he would escape if every person paid as he went. It would enable the grocer to take advantage of all cash discounts, which means that he would be in a position to sell goods cheaper. His best patrons would thus save money as well as himself.

Apparently nothing, whereas he thinks the fellow who pays cash is directly or indirectly handing over a certain amount for Mr. Slow Pay and Mr. No Pay. The buyer on credit generally gets his goods at the same figure as the cash customer and, where that system prevails, some naturally inquire what use, advantage or benefit is it for the cash customer to hand over his good hard coin? What does he gain over the credit buyer? the cheese factory." Do yuo read of that he might as well have had the use of his collateral several months. But this is another phase of the whole matter and the cash system is being dealt with more from the storekeeper's standpoint than that of the consumer.

Uncollectable Book Debts.

Mr. Grocer, you perhaps have done a credit business for years. Why do you not introduce the cash system? How many thousands of dollars have you on your books that is not collectable, the parties having moved away, disaster overtaken them or some other unforeseen cause intervened? Do you not wish you had that money gathered in? But it is useless to express such a desire, as you know it is next to impossible to get bank notes out of some men. Many, who have the money won't pay, and others who would pay have not the wherewithal.

Two grocers from different towns were heard recently in an animated discussion on this point.

"My!" exclaimed one, "I have $9000 book debts, and if I could get this money how many new lines of business I could go into. I would add a large stock of confectionery and would lay in a quantity of crockery. I would also add about twenty feet to my store, as my premises are terribly crowded. I would reduce stock in certain slow-going lines to make room for the rapidly moving ones. If I had that cash * * * * but there is that if—"

"That's it," replied his friend. "I am clear of all your worries. I do not grant credit at all and, as a result, I always have a little spare money in the bank to avail myself of 'snaps' whenever I see a favorable opening."

There may, in certain localities, be cash system should not prevail in the special or sporadic reasons why the grocery trade, the same as there are exceptions to every rule, but generally speaking conditions are the same. It is upon the general state of affairs and not isolated examples that the experiences, results and benefits of the cash system in this article will be based.

Credit System Defended.

Occasionally you hear a man defend the credit system and he talksalong this line: "I lose very little, if any, money through the credit business—in fact, I prefer it to the cash if I know a man is good pay. I hold the trade of a man who buys on credit whereas with the casual cash customer—well!-he is here one day and with some one else the next. You are never sure of his patronage and a cash customer frequently thinks that he should buy at his own price simply because he is paying out money then and there. The cash customer is generally a kicker, and is not willing in many instances to allow a retailer a fair living profit."

The observations may be true to a very limited extent but nine out of every ten merchants who are dong a cash business, will refute these statements as unworthy imputations cast upon honest, square-dealing, careful buying farmers, contractors, tradesmen and citizens.

As pointed out, there may be local or individual reasons applicable in general why you cannot do a strictly cash trade, but with fully ninety per cent. of grocers throughout Ontario, there is no real, valid or substantial reason why they cannot do a cash business—so far at any rate as general groceries are concerned.

Where, then, is the fault? It is with the dealer himself. He is presumably afraid of losing life-long customers, fearful that the other fellow will spirit them away or else he lacks decision and backbone—cannot say "no" firmly and politely; in other words he is kinder to the public than to himself.

The hardest word in the English lexicon to pronounce, paradoxical though it may seem, is that little monosyllabic "NO."

Pay Cash for These.

Did you ever hear of a man who thought that he could get theatre tickets and pay for them just when he pleased? Do you ever ask the railway ticket agent to let you have a ticket on time and remark: "I will pay you as soon as I sell my wheat or receive my money from the cheese factory." Do you read of any individua's getting postage stamps, street car tickets, express parcels, meals at hotels, trips on boats, shaves or shoe shines without paying the price then and there for the privilege and service. Why then should persons, well able to settle for goods, get sugar, bread, tea, fruits, vegetables, fish, etc., on credit? No reason whatever if the dealer makes up his mind that he is not going to allow an ancient, time-worn, obsolete system to go on any longer.

A frequent excuse given by dealers against changing from credit to cash is that farmers cannot pay every time when getting goods. The fact is that they can pay better than any other class. Did any dealer ever know of farmers selling their grain, hay, horses, cattle, chickens or anything else on six months' time? And yet, if you permit it, farmers will ask you to sell them your goods (which represent cash, labor and raw material, just as much as their produce does) on credit, to be paid for when they feel like it. It is not a fair division of burden, and dealers who give credit carry the heavy end.

Presents For Wrong Parties.

An absurd practice quite common among retailers is "carrying" the farmers from spring until fall, and when Mr. Farmer "pays up" make him a present. He has not done the retailers any favor, but rather the retailer should receive the tribute for carrying the account without interest for six months. A "good" collector will impress upon the customer in a nice way so as to cause no offence that the customer is the favored one, and make him so appreciate it that he will continue trading there. If any one is to have gifts it is the cash customers. Some retailers buy good quality of goods for the farmers and their wives, to give out when they "pay up" in the fall, thus paying a premium in the fall for carrying the account without interest to show how carrying the account is appreciated, instead of the farmer showing his appreciation for having the account "carried" and for favors extended.

Credit business or cash business is but a matter of education. If a farmer has been taught he can buy goods on long time he will continue to ask for credit, even with money in the bank or in his pocket. And this same man who has been educated to credit will not pay for his purchases until forced to do so. On the other hand, if a dealer has established a reputation for selling only for cash, no one asks him to extend credit. Men who want goods always manage to have the necessary amount of cash, or are willing to give a bankable note when purchases are made. A credit giving grocer is asked to sell goods as close as competing cash stores and mail-order houses. Customers who want credit in most cases demand cash prices.

Working Gradually.

Referring to the cash system, W. Hanna, of W. Hanna & Co., general merchants, Port Carling, Ont., says: We have been trying to cut out a lot of our credit business and do more cash but it is far from all cash yet. We may say that our plan has worked very well and that our credit sales for the past year have decreased and our cash sales increased in a good ratio. But there is still room for improvement. We are hardly sanguine enough to think that we could do an entirely cash trade in this village. The conditions are different to most villages of the same size. The tourist trade here is the harvest and, like the people in the West, the people here depend on the harvest to pay their debts. However, conditions are improving as the people get more educated to the cash system, and we believe any merchant can greatly improve the condition of his business by being firm and holding out for cash. At any rate he will be better off in the end by doing less business and more of it cash.

Great Hindrance To Trade.

Conversing with a business man the other day on this subject of credit and cash, in the course of his talk he made these remarks: "People who usually pay promptly are not doing so now. This condition hampers trade greatly and causes unnecessary worry. There is a remedy. Hundreds of people have money in the banks or out on interest who are owing tradesmen and merchants. To a man not in business this seems a matter that need not be referred to, but to business men who carry on business at great expense with weekly outlay for wages, stock, horses, freight, and other demands that must be paid, it becomes a very serious problem. The remedy we propose is that every man and woman who owes a business a dollar or more and can pay said account, do so at the very earliest chance.

"Keep money moving. This is the best remedy for dull times. This is how it works. One thousand persons, for some reason unknown to us, have failed to pay a dollar each which they owe a merchant. Let these 1,000 persons this week send in their dollar so that the merchant will have a thousand dollars at the end of the week. Inside of 24 hours he will pay the money—every dollar of it— to his creditors. They in turn will pay it to their creditors, and so the money will keep on circulating, relieving the pressure, giving peace of mind, restoring cheerfulness and confidence and so this old world will have added charm for the business man who is sad and gloomy from the weight of debts he cannot pay because a hundred persons who can pay if they choose do not do it. This world would be much more like heaven if everybody 'owed no man aught but love.'"

MAKE SURE OF IT.

"Smith," said the grocer, severly, "did you charge Mr. Jay for that basket of peaches?"

"Yes, sir," the clerk replied; "I think I did, sir."

"Well, charge him again," said the other. "You can't be too sure of a thing of that kind."

The vital study for the employe is to learn everything touching his position quickly and thoroughly, ro adapt himself as nearly as is in his power to the demands made on him, to catch the pace of the workers about him, be it fast or slow, and to accommodate himself in every thought and action to the standards of the department as he finds it.

A Traveller's Experience in Trade Evolution

Improvements Some Grocers Have Made During the Past Twenty-eight Years—Advance of Early Closing in the Country Districts—How a Better Knowledge of Business Brings Better Profits—Benefits of Present Transportation Facilities.

By C. H. Parsons.

It is quite natural for one to suppose that in the passing of the last 28 years, trade conditions among the retail merchants in Ontario have greatly changed their complexion. During that period of time I came in contact with hundreds of merchants, in view of the vocation I followed, which was—as our friends are pleased to call it—that of a knight of the grip.

For twenty-eight years I traveled for a wholesale grocery firm chiefly in the northern section of Ontario, and when I look back on the time I first took my samples out and consider the intermediate years, I realize how evolution with its imperceptible regularity has improved transportation facilities and the manner in which trade is carried on generally. When I think about the old buckboard in which we travelers used to cross country and contrast it with the fine, soft-seated, rubber-tired vehicles that the liverymen provide us with now, I wonder what time will bring forth in the next twenty-eight years.

The general improvments in the trade throughout the country can only be appreciated by those who have rubbed up against the men who have been and are connected with it. While, I believe, there is yet plenty of room for progress in a great many cases, there have been vast changes towards better conditions.

Advance of Early Closing.

Among the many changes I recall, probably the most noticeable is that which has occurred in the closing of the country store.

A couple of decades ago places of business were open until all hours of the night, and we travelers used to, on some occasions, transact our buisness in rickety old offices by the light of the old oil lamps. But times have changed. The merchant is beginning to realize that a life of continual slavery is not what he is living for. He wants an hour or two of the day for himself or for his wife and family. Hitherto all his waking hours were passed in the store where he was so wrapped up in business that he almost forgot sometimes to go to bed.

Nowadays in many villages and towns, it is just as impossible to get into a grocery store after six o'clock as it is to attempt to walk upon the water.

Not only do the grocers themselves reap the benefit, but all their employes get a few hours of recreation—and they deserve it after a long day's labor, if they do their work faithfully.

Systematic Arrangements.

Years ago it was a common sight on entering a general store to see a jumble of boots and shoes, dry goods, hardware and groceries behind a single counter. Very often the clerk employed had to look after both the buying and selling and it used to puzzle me often to know how his employer made any profits. Store equipment and facilities were never thought of. The merchant simply depended upon the consumer getting hungry occasionally and he knew when such a condition of affairs existed his services would be required to supply some bread, tea and sugar.

I scarcely need to refer to the present conditions in this regard. Merchants now vie with one another to see who can produce the more inviting store front, window and interior. In the general store of to-day the boots and shores are not mixed up with the groceries, nor dry goods with hardware—each has its own department, attended to by its own salesman.

Instead of boxes, barrels and benches used as counters we to-day see handsome oaken structures, some with marble tops. show-cases, glass-front bins, adjustable shelves, refrigerators, coffee grinders and modern weigh scales.

The grocery clerk has his up-to-date methods. He is held responsible for the payment of his department, and everything that comes under his management. Sometimes he is even allowed to share in the profits—an unheard of thing a quarter of a century ago.

Systematic store arrangement and store equipment is, I consider, an essential to a successful business. Changes of this nature attract the attention of the traveler more than anything else. It, of course, means that the merchant is beginning to realize the necessity of keeping apace with the times and that he is prospering.

Tendency Towards Cash.

The retail merchant, and especially those doing business in country districts, have been troubled for years with the long credit terms they were forced to give to farmers.

In olden times when a retailer sold a farmer a parcel of goods he knew right well that he would not see the money until after the next threshing, and, indeed, he was often lucky if he received it within a year. The trend of the times is to the cash system and many are found to be adopting it.

But apart from the change to cash business the merchants are training themselves wonderfully in the art of bookkeeping. The systems are in the main the same, but differing in minor details. They nevertheless have greatly improved their work as well as aided the traveler. Customers now get their accounts monthly instead of half-yearly. and the money circulates more frequently —all of which has been a wonderful aid to business.

Years ago almost every merchant's books were in such a promiscuous state that he scarcely knew where he was at at the end of the year, and he was lucky if he knew just who were his debtors. I believe that hundreds of dollars have been lost through carelessness in having an unsatisfactory bookkeeping system. This has now been eliminated and they all know how much they are owed even if they cannot get it all.

Telephone Convenience.

A great improvement observed in my travels is the telephone convenience. Every up-to-date grocer has his telephone. He takes the orders from his customers, sitting at his desk in the office, and saves time The convenience experienced now is so great that merchants wonder how their predecessors in former years ever got along without it.

The telephone is also used extensively in giving orders to wholesale houses in the large centres. It saves many a long delay and prevents many outbursts of temper from the lack of patience in anxious customers. Nowadays it is also quite a common thing to see a merchant at his desk writing advertisements for the local paper when such a thing a score of years ago was considered unprofitable and wholly unnecessary.

Better Transportation

The trend that trade has taken during the past twenty-eight years can be gauged by the advance in transportation facilities, probably as well as by anything else. The development of these from the merchant's, as well as the traveler's, standpoint has been a great boon to business.

The old-fashioned cadge-teams that used to be so frequently seen about our country roads are being superseded by railway and boat, and merchants are able to provide a much better and quicker service than before. It has meant dollars to them, as well as time and money, to the traveler.

As intimated above, I can recollect the times when we used to ride across the country in the old-fashioned buckboard. That was our chief mode of transportation if we wanted to visit a small town, or village aside from a railway station—and the latter were few in those days. This buckboard was a four-wheeled vehicle with slats reaching from back to front axle and the only springs for providing protection from the stony road were under the seat. Our feet, of course, used to rattle on the slats, and our sample-cases would be shaken so badly that at our destinations the sugar samples would be all rolled up into lumps like marbles and not very inviting to an intending purchaser. The motive power between the shafts of the buckboard was usually an old "plug" of a horse well mated to the conveyance.

Time, however, has brought about changes. Competition has forced not only liverymen to supply us with better transportation, but it has forced merchants to keep better goods and to maintain better equipped stores, all of which has the tendency to produce a greater volume of business for producer, manufacturer, wholesaler, traveler and retailer.

HIS BLACK LIST.

A man entered a grocery store and drew a slip of paper from his pocket. A clerk, with pencil and order pad, stepped up in anticipation. The man adjusted a pair of glasses on his nose and looked over the list.

"Do you keep Bopo Soap Powder?" he asked.

"Bopo? No, sir; we have several other soap powders, but no Bopo," answered the clerk.

Paradise Creamery butter?" inquired the man.

"No, sir, we don't carry Paradise," replied the clerk.

"Well, how about Queen Lill sweet Corn? Do you carry the Queen Lill line of goods?"

"Sorry, sir, but we don't" said the clerk.

"All right, then, I guess I'll trade here, said the man. "Those are the brands on which I've been stung."—Puck.

Traveler's Idea of Why Retail Merchants Fail

In Grabbing After Business They Secure Much That is Undesirable—New Merchants Forget to Figure on Cost of Maintaining Their Stores—Fewer Failures in the Trade Than During Past Years, But Not Many Grocers Retire.

"There is too much of that greedy grab after business," declared a grocery traveler of twenty-two years experience the other day as he mentally recalled a few of the many experiences he has had to substantiate his claim.

His contention was that through idiotic practices merchants have rushed in to give credit to any party who turns the knob of the store door.

This traveler expressed his appreciation of the collecting system in Guelph which was doing excellent work.

"If there were more like them in Canada the retail merchants would today be a great deal better off," he said.

Recently he was told of a case in Guelph which showed that the delinquent was entirely at the mercy of the merchants.

A buyer went into a store to obtain some goods and didn't have the cash to pay for them. He promised faithfully to meet a draft at the end of the month and although he was promptly drawn on he was unable to pay. That, of course, was the last credit he secured there. Believing that he could obtain time if he went elsewhere he tried the other end of the city. The merchant on learning his place of abode became suspicious and called up his friend in that section, who was a member of the Association benefited by the collection scheme. He learned something about his financial condition and refused him credit.

On learning the cause of the refusal, the purchaser was very indignant and expressed his indignation in none too complimentary terms when he next saw his first benefactor. But he was emphatily assured that he had only himself to blame.

Other People's Debts.

"The cash system is the thing; cash buyers pay the same price as others and therefore help to pay other people's debts," was the traveler's way of sizing up the situation.

Grocers, he maintained were not loyal enough to their own interests. If they would form an association and stand by it, each member taking an active interest in it, they would derive many advantages. The giving of credit and failure to get the money was the cause of the most of the trouble. That's why, the traveler declared, that there were some idiotic retail grocers alive—they didn't demand cash or give to the safe credit buyer.

"There are grocers who actually don't know how to run a business; some of them who have been in the harness only three months know more about goods than travelers who have been on the road for twenty-five years."

He claimed that many do not realize that it costs something to do business. They believe that if they can put an article in their store for ten dollars and sell it at $9.99 they are in a cent. Rent, heat light, and store-maintaining are forgotten by the "green" man in business. He neglects to study methods and the first thing he knows his store and stock are turned over to the assignee.

Fewer Failures.

"I have been 22 years on the road and in spite of what statements I have already made, I must say that business methods among the grocers as a whole are improving. I find better methods, better store equipment and a better knowledge of bookkeeping.

"Fewer failures are occurring now, but on the other hand there are very few grocers retiring. That goes to show that generally they are just making enough profit to provide them a living but they haven't laid by any great amounts for the years when they are not able to work."

Merchants needed, he believed, to study their present conditions; to look back upon their mistakes of the past and join together for their own best interests in the future. When this can be brought about they would be on a fair way to success with less obstacles to surmount.

THE ROMANCE OF BUSINESS.

If a young man does not find romance in his business, it is not the fault of the business but the fault of the young man.

Business is not all dollars. These are but the shell—the kernel lies within and is to be enjoyed later, as the higher faculties of the business man, so constantly called into play, develop and mature.—Andrew Carnegie.

Thos. Reynolds, the western traveling representative of the Quaker Oats Co., of Peterborough, was in Winnipeg last week calling on the trade. W. H. Escott, is the Winnipeg representative.

Relation of the Modern Grocery Clerk to Employer

Education of the Clerk the Work of the Grocer—Interests of Both Are Mutual — Should Merchants Tell Their Business Secrets to Their Employes?—Every Clerk Has Capital Invested in Store in Which He Gets His Training—Requisites for Good Employes.

(By Delmere D. Butler.)

Every man who establishes a grocery business of his own is largely dependent upon his employes for his prosperity ; to get the best service from them depends largely upon himself.

The employer strikes the keynote of the establishment. If he is cheerful, courteous, and acts as though he holds his employes as human beings, capable of filling the position in which they are placed, he may expect good service, and he will get it. A hasty, quick-tempered person whose habit is a word and oath, cannot keep good help ; clerks who are worth their wages have too much self-respect to endure such indignity long ; they may have to remain for a time until other employment is secured, but their loyalty is gone, they no longer serve happily or willingly—they lose interest in their work and do their duties perfunctorily.

I believe that the interests of the clerk and employer are mutual and that the success of one helps to make the success of the other ; more and more are employers beginning to realize how much the success of their store depends on their clerks. They sell your goods—or not ; they please and extend your custom—or they turn it away ; they boom your reputation—or cloud it ; they swell your profit sheet—or they become a tax to you.

How to Educate Clerks.

From all parts of Canada you hear the merchants complain because it is so hard to secure competent clerks. They declare that the right kind of material is not any too plentiful, yet none will say—"what can I do to improve my clerks ?" This is the age of technical books and public libraries, most of which contain a number of books that would be instructive and helpful, or if they have not them and the attention of the proper authorities is called to the subject, they will no doubt be glad to give the matter due consideration.

As a rule any library board would rather buy technical books than fiction, and there are also a number of good books that a merchant or clerk could buy at very reasonable prices. Would it not pay better to develop the clerks you have than to be forever scolding, changing, or "firing" them ? This way out of the present difficulty may seem a difficult way for both employer and employe—"Lead your help, don't drive them." I believe the keynote is co-operation throughout the store, and an interest in responsibility extending beyond the pay-envelope expectations.

Tell Clerks the Business Secrets.

I believe that employers would have little difficulty if they would try to create in their clerks a desire to know not only the price, but also the merits and practical value of every article in the store. They would not find it as difficult as they imagine. Results count, and knowledge of this kind is power ; it fits the clerk to sell goods intelligently, easily and profitably. Such intimate knowledge of everything in the store, from cellar to garret, gives him a bearing that makes friends of all your patrons, who naturally will turn to him because, "he knows his business." Such intimate knowledge of your store and its contents makes him a sure business-getter, and business builder, as well as a cheerful worker and he also becomes a strong factor in the prosperity of the business.

DELMERE D. BUTLER.

Clerk in the Cash Bargain Grocery, Brantford, Ont.

Such knowledge makes him conscious of the power it gives him over every purchaser ; it will develop in him the spirit of trust, energy and high purpose, and his services will grow in value daily. But remember this, "there is no short cut to success." It means hours of study outside of the working hours, yet the clerks would be willing if they thought it was for their advancement, the essential quality being that the clerk possesses and cultivates a willingness to work hard all the time. The successful clerk to-day finds that it is a great help to him if he not only knows his goods but also knows the various uses they may be put to and their relation to other lines in the market.

Service, the Clerk's Capital.

A common mistake that many clerks make is concluding that money is the only capital that can be invested ; and if you were to ask one of them how his investment in the store was coming on he would answer, "I haven't any, and I only get about ten or twelve dollars per week, and it takes all I can make to live on."

Every clerk has a capital of his own, and when he goes to work he invests it. His capital is "service," and while it is not handed in to the cashier in coin or bills, it is for all of that possible to be turned into money. That is just what the employer has figured on ; his impression was that the clerk would be worth money to him, or he would not have hired him ; whether he knows it or not, the clerk has invested his capital and the next thing for him to consider is whether his investment is as large as it should be.

Yet how many clerks try to reduce their services to a minimum. They are singularly apt in discovering ways and means for making their services as worthless as possible ; but this is poor financing and after making his investment in the best scheme for enriching himself, he will find he is the loser in the end.

The Wrong Measurement.

There are clerks who measure service by hours. When they spend a certain length of time in the store, listlessly doing as they are told to do, they feel aggrieved when they do not receive the reward of the man who has put in no more time, but who has exerted his faculties to the utmost to make his investment pay.

Neatness of appearance counts ; there is a psychological value in the clerks being dressed in white coats during the summer season. Anything you can do in order to suggest coolness to the customer is going to help sell your goods.

It is better that the cleanliness of your store go unnoticed than that anyone may have occasion to remark upon the presence of dirt and cobwebs.

Matters to Think About.

I will here enumerate a few more things that will tend to make your investment of more value to your employer. Do not sell goods that are not in stock ; do not make a practice of being late every morning ; remember always to be polite, cheerful and loyal to your employer, give correct weight, not over-weight, or short weight but give sixteen ounces to the pound ; be attentive and show earnestness in the goods you are showing ; write the orders plainly and make your figures distinct, always remembering that small sales mean small profits.

A Trade to be Proud of.

All grocers and clerks should take proper pride in their trade, and they may justly encourage that pride. For what trade can possibly be of more ancient date than the trade in the articles of food, the first necessaries of life ? The grocer must continue to be in request in an increasing degree, to supply the want of our ever growing population, and more and more as the years go by will the community clearly see the importance of the grocer and his industry—so intimately associated with the lives and well-being of the people.

Some Original Methods Used in Training Clerks

Montreal Grocer Has a System of His Own—Graduates From His School Become Successful Merchants — Accuracy, Neatness, Promptness and Courtesy Are Qualifications All His Employes Are Taught to Possess.

In reply to an inquiry regarding his methods of handling his employes and otherwise conducting a grocery store, N. Chartrand, corner of St. Antoine St. and Greene Ave., Montreal, said : "When I get a new boy, I ask him to do nothing the first week but watch the others work to familiarize himself with the layout of the store and the places where each variety of stock is kept. The second week he must occupy his time chiefly weighing butter, lard and tea, and other of the more common products kept in a grocery store. In this, I insist on absolute accuracy. At this point in his education, I teach him that accuracy in these things are essential in order to be honest, both with his customer and with his employer. I instil into him the necessity of giving to the customer just what he pays for, no less and no more.

"By this time I will know whether or not his manners require any polishing, and if they do I point out to him the value of politeness, dignity and courtesy. Sometimes a clerk will possess these qualities owing to a careful home training or natural instincts, and will not be prompt. I try then to correct this fault and show him the difficulties which a lack of promptness will lead to. In the first year, the beginner is employed, chiefly following the head clerk, and learning from his example. During this time he is instructed in putting up orders, packing them and in other ways making them ready to go out on the delivery waggon.

"I keep a man who does nothing but attend to the delivery waggon and the horses. He does all the delivery work, so the clerks are not called on to do this variety of work. My delivery man must keep his harnesses in good condition, also the horses and waggons, and he must never take too large a load.

Steps up the Ladder.

"During the second year the clerk begins to enter into some of the more responsible work in the conduct of the store. By this time I start him in on window decoration and interior displays. This work consists of decorating the windows and displaying goods to the best advantage inside. I insist on displaying only one line at a time inside the store, and generally follow this rule with regard to the windows. For instance, if I build a pyramid of pickles at one end of my counter, I use the stock of one firm exclusively to do this. This display is left on the counter until the customers are tolerably familiar with it, then it is replaced by another. I believe that this is the best way to display goods.

"I watch a new man's work very closely and if he shows evidence of ability in this work I encourage him, and in this way I get the best out of him. Once a week I take one of the clerks to market and teach them how to buy stock. When a clerk becomes the head clerk he does most of the buying, subject always to my approval.

"After the second year, I believe a clerk is prepared to go out into the world, and run a store for himself. Not only do I teach my clerks deportment, but they also learn how to lay out a store, and the proper way to take care of food stuffs.

Interior Equipment.

"I keep my bread in a side cupboard on glass shelves with a glass door. In this way it is kept in a partially shaded spot, free from dust and dirt of all kinds. Much of my shelf room is covered with glass doors, and in this way everything retains a wonderful freshness that it would not otherwise have. One silent salesman is kept for chocolates and candies alone, where they always appear fresh and clean. I have one place for a certain line of goods and never under any consideration whatever do I allow it to be put anywhere else. This is an inflexible rule.

"One place near the side door is reserved for orders which have been put to be delivered. My cream, milk and butter, and other things of this nature are kept in a refrigerator room at the back of the store. The greatest care is taken of this room to keep it thoroughly hygienic and sanitary. Downstairs, the cellar is divided like the upper store into departments, and everything is kept in its own special department. The wine cellar is quite divided from the other part of the cellar and no one but the head clerk and myself have keys to this room. Each barrel is plainly labelled with the name of the wine or spirit and the price. I had my little office placed in the centre of the store, so that I can see all over it. The telephone is here so it is convenient for both the customer and the clerks."

Built up a Good Business.

Such was the explanation given to a representative of The Canadian Grocer of the methods which go to make a successful grocer, by Mr. Chartrand, and it may be said that if there is anybody in the city of Montreal who has earned the privilege of giving advice, he is the one. He has conducted a successful grocery business since he was a young man, and is thoroughly familiar with every phase of the work.

People who trade with him are sure of courteous treatment, promptness, cleanliness and honesty. It is a pleasure to enter this man's store, and see the clerks all carefully groomed with their clean, white aprons every morning. It is certainly no wonder that a large number of successful grocers have graduated from this man's school who teaches his pupils that they are handling the things that people eat.

Bettering the Conditions of the Retail Grocer

Is He Getting a Fair Show?—His Standing in Society as Compared With Professional and Other Business Men—Unselfishness, the Principal Quality Necessary to Reform Matters—What an Association Can do.

By M. Moyer.

The farmers get better prices for their produce, the mechanics get higher wages for their skill, the laborers get better pay for their work, the school teachers are well paid, the clerks in offices are all drawing increased pay, the preachers are getting fat salaries, but where is the increase in the profits of the retailer? Is he getting a fair show?

The Government assists the farmers and protects the manufacturers, the general public strongly support the idea that labor should be well paid, but where do you hear that the man who stands behind the counter should have better pay? Is he getting a fair show?

The doctors make healthy charges, lawyers are taxing their clients to the top notch, the politicians are mutually agreeing almost from year to year to increase their stipends, the Government officials are receiving more pay, and all this is taken as a matter of fact without a kick. But let the retailers for their long plodding hours, ask for better profit and their custom will fade away like the melting snow. Is he getting a fair show?

The doctors, lawyers, teachers, preachers, dentists, bankers, etc., are commanding the highest respect from the general public, and are looked upon as ornaments in society, but the man who stands behind the counter and gives his best service, is only a storekeeper and everybody has a perfect right, and a happy privilege to cut down his income as small as possible. Is he getting a fair show?

The Grocer a Necessity.

The doctor might cease to practise and few would suffer; the lawyers might quit their profession without being missed in the least; the banks might close their doors, but let the grocers put up their shutters and in a few days starvation would follow. Why, then, are they not entitled to respect and fair play? Are they getting a fair show?

The laboring people receive the sympathy of the people in their demand for shorter hours; the bankers are to be pitied for having to work from 10 to 3 o'clock; the school teachers are overworked; the lawyers must have their summer vacations, but whoever thinks or cares for the storekeeper who works 16 hours a day? Does he get a fair show?

Mechanics, clerks, etc., who give their services to an employer usually receive now and then some recognition of their good services. But the storekeeper who gives his service to the general public receives no recognition, but on the other hand is expected to make a Christmas present to every one of his customers, because he was allowed to give them his best service for a little less pay than anyone else. Is he getting a fair show?

The people require the convenience of the retail stores and expect them to be kept open all hours of the day and nearly all hours of the night, so that they can get things at a moment's notice, and often on credit. But they never think that it is unfair for them to spend the bulk of their cash in large stores away from home. Is the merchant getting a fair show?

The Pedlar Nuisance.

The pedlars carry their stores along the streets, and rake up a lot of the cash, and for the privilege to do this they pay $10 rent per year, when the storekeepers pay four or five times that per month. Are they getting a fair show?

If he is not getting a fair show, who is responsible, and who can furnish the remedy?

There is no class of people engaged in any profession or industry who enjoy fair privileges which they secured through any other means than through united effort, and as long as retailers will stand behind their counters, without realizing the fact that they belong to a great army of retailers who are all interested in one common cause, and feel it their duty to assist in elevating the general tone of the trade, they can never expect to get a fair show, and to gain the sympathy and respect to which the trade is entitled. Scores of retail grocers never attend a meeting to discuss matters of importance, never contribute a cent and not even read the trade paper in order to familiarize themselves with the work that is being done by others who are endeavoring to improve the conditions common to them all.

Retailers are Too Selfish.

So long as such selfishness exists among themselves they cannot expect to get a fair show. A man in the retail business has opportunities to become better informed, gain a better understanding of what is right and fair between man and man, and consequently be a greater power for good than any one engaged in any other occupation. But while he has this opportunity, the very nature of the business may also lead him to be selfish, mean and small. We have, therefore, two extremes engaged in the same business—the one generous, liberal, active and public-spirited and the other small, narrow, selfish and ignorant. The men who keep the trade healthy are proud of the business, and take sound, healthy satisfaction out of the fact that they can serve the people well and at the same time assist their fellow retailers in improving trade conditions.

The men who are small have never a good word to say of anybody and everybody else is wrong. They are disgusted with the business and do not know what is the matter with themselves. Although they never contribute a cent, they expect others to spend their time and money to make business go better for themselves. They are behind the times. Their trade is falling off and they blame everybody but themselves. They are a hindrance to the trade; they belittle the retailers and impress the people with the idea that only a low class of men are engaged in the retail trade.

These are the men who have to account for the fact that retailers are not commanding the respect they should, and that they are not getting a fair show. Wake up, stop your meanness, be men, and you will get a fair show.

Stop your grumbling about so many being in business who do not understand the grocery trade. Raise your standard through better and more intelligent service, so that it requires qualification to compete with you. Secure legislation that will give you a fair chance to stand on the same level with others and all this can only be done by acting wisely and unitedly and you will get a fair show.

Two Years' Experience in Handling of Flowers

White & Gillespie, Peterboro Grocers, Consider Them a Valuable As Well As An Attractive Adjunct To Their Business—Grocery Store The Natural Place To Catch The Eye Of The Feminine Purchaser.

By Harry Theobald.

The grocery business has many sidelines and the average grocer is generally eager to delve into some extra issue providing it is profitable and does not interfere with his main concern. On looking over the field of additional lines and upon careful consideration of the whole subject, it is not very probable that the handling of pot flowers would present itself without some suggestion in that regard from outside. It is a business that for many years seemed so utterly foreign to a grocery establishment that the oversight may be easily understood. There is however, a connection and it has remained for White & Gillespie, of Peterboro, to practically demonstrate that during the greater part of the year flowers can be handled successfully and, what is of more importance, profitably, and they practically take care of themselves.

This may appear to be a rather broad statement upon casual observation but Porter White has explained to The Grocer the manner in which the firm has been able to satisfactorily handle flowers.

Two Seasons' Experience.

Their first experience was in the Spring of 1908. They made arrangements with A. Blade & Son, florists, to take a certain number of their potted plants and flowers. Blade & Son were at somewhat of a disadvantage from the fact that they had no down town store to compete with those florists who had display shops and windows on the main street. The agreed to give White & Gillespie a fresh supply of flowers every Monday, as many as they could handle, and to replenish the stock during the week if necessary. This would mean that White & Gillespie would always have a fine display of flowers and would provide against any of them becoming unsightly or without bloom. It also meant that the grocery firm would meet with no loss in the carrying of the flowers.

Last Spring the agreement came into effect and White & Gillespie handled flowers until late in the autumn when the florists' supply was practically entirely sold out. About a month ago the same plan was entered upon and as was the experience last year the idea is proving a good one to all parties concerned.

The stock includes ordinary house plants many of which can be transplanted to an outdoor flower bed. At this time of the year plants are in great demand and will continue so until late in the summer. They invariably catch the eye of the customer, and being an article that everybody buys they are easy sellers. As Mr. White stated "they sell themselves with but little effort on our part."

Continuing he said: "When a woman has made nearly all her grocery purchases and is about to leave the store her eye catches the flowers and she asks the price of this geranium or that something else and as there is always room for an other flower in every home and the price being reasonable she will ask to have one or more sent along with her order. As the plants are fresh every week they are always in bloom and therefore most attractive. We have a particular place for them in the store and often display them in the window. The only attention they require is to be watered every morning which can be done in ten minutes. They make a catchy display window and give a bright and cheery appearance to the interior.

Losses Impossible.

"The chief points in the handling of these flowers is the fact that there is a clear and assured profit. They appeal to every woman. The price is within the range of the slenderest or strongest purse. They are easily cared for and no extra trouble is experienced in their delivery as they go out with the rest of orders. Moreover the average woman will go to a florists for plants and flowers about once a year, in the springtime, at least she intends to go. When she finds them in the grocery store at as fair a price as she can get in any florist's she buys them then and there, and they are sent out with her order of groceries.

"There is nothing objectionable to the flowers from the grocer's standpoint. They are not only attractive and clean but they premeate the shop with a delicate fragrance that is appreciated by the customer as soon as he or she enters the store."

In conclusion Mr. White stated that they sold a great many last year and already have disposed of a large number this spring, thereby demonstrating beyond a doubt that they are a profitable adjunct to a grocery business when suitable arrangements can be made with a florist.

THE PEDDLING EVIL.

Retailer Desires Stricter Law Against the "Transient Traveler"— What a Union of Merchants Would Do.

(By a Muskoka Grocer.)

We hear a good deal these days about building up a cash business and inducing the people to spend their money at home. One great difficulty in the way of both these desirable movements is want of a better law governing peddlers and the transient traveler. In this part of the country every spring there are a number of travelers from Toronto tea and spice dealers, who go through the district, calling on every house, taking orders. The people order freely from these outside firms, with the idea of building up other than home industries we suppose, and the orders for each place are all shipped together to a local man. These shipments sometimes amount to a ton or two. These travelers pay neither license fee, taxes or anything else to help that part of the country, and take away a lot of money from people who at the same time are owing the local merchants large accounts, and who will go to these same merchants and ask to buy other goods on credit.

Nor is it only the retailers who send out their travelers in this way ; but we are sorry to say there are wholesalers who do the same. Certain Toronto grocery houses, and other establishments, so called wholesalers, send out their travelers and have them call on all hotels, boarding houses and even on farmers who keep two or three boarders, taking their orders at wholesale rates, and even in some cases, we are told, making them freight allowances that they do not give to the trade.

We contend there should be a strict law making all such travelers pay a good big license fee for selling to other than the retail trade. If this did not stop the practice, the local municipality would at least get some return for the money sent out of the district.

In regard to the so called wholesale houses we believe we retailers have a weapon in our own hands if we would only use it. That is, just put these houses on a list and let every retailer refuse to buy from them. This would soon bring them to time. If the wholesalers desire the support of the retailers they should put a stop to this practice, which tends to strain the relations not only between these two branches of the trade, but between the retailer and the consumer as well.

IMITATION OF BRANDS.

Every year, in fact nearly every month, large publicity and advertising compaigns are started in Canada by manufacturers of foreign countries. This is all right, and so long as the Canadian tariff is sufficiently high to make them manufacture here, that is, if such a course is possible, it is good for Canada. The more business the Canadian market attracts, the better for the Canadian people.

But there is a phase of this foreign invasion which reflects seriously on the enterprise and ingenuity of the Canadian people. Most flagrant examples of this are evident in businesses connected with the sale of food products. A foreign firm comes over here and puts on the market a new breakfast food, candy or something else. This product is sold in a special box with a special design and under a special name. Suddenly their product is for sale everywhere, and immediately hosts of imitators are in the market, thinking that in their case too the field will prove equally profitable.

Now, the regrettable feature of this is the fact that the later arrivals copy as nearly as possible their predecessors, in the style of package and the name of the produce. As an example, a certain manufacturer enters the field with a specially formed chocolate confection, and packs these in boxes of exceptional design and under a cleverly devised name. If this product meets with popular favour, immediately there are hosts of imitators in the field with lines which are as near as the law will permit.

It is ramarkable but nevertheless true, that in only rare cases do these later produces eclipse in all round superiority those whom they have imitated. Some may make good profits but their position is always a false and insecure one, and at any moment they are liable to overstep the line and find themselves the defendants in a suit for infringement.

In view of these facts, the commercial side of the question is the chief aspect to consider. It is impossible to sell even an imitation without a certain amount of advertising and appropriating money in other ways to promote sales. This certainly looks strangely like building one's house on a foundation of sand. Why would it not be better to place on the market something which is of original conception, and which represents initial brain expense rather than a close imitation of someone else's creation? There is nothing in the realm of foodstuffs which is so monumental in its execution that it cannot be equalled and even surpassed.

From this, then, it appears that it would be far better to be a leader rather than a follower. With the wonderful advance in the printing and engraving business, the possibilities of pretty and attractive packages are almost endless.

When one man sees another making a good thing out of something, there is a natural desire to get into the field, and get a little of the money which seems to be coming his way. The surest and easiest means of doing this, seems to be imitation of the other, but it would be much better to exploit something having individuality of its own, and in this way, building up, perhaps slowly at first but surely in any case a prosperous future. Longfellow's words, in the Psalm of Life are strangely applicable here:

"Be not like dumb driven cattle,
Be a hero in the strife."

A SERIOUS SITUATION.

Word has been received this week from the Lower Provinces, that a serious difference exists at the present time between lobster packers and the fishermen. Owing to the drop in the price of the canned article since last year, the packers have been obliged to reduce the price of the fish in order to leave them a profit. On the other hand, the fishermen in many leading districts have formed a combine not to fish under a certain price, which means that at present market prices of canned lobster, the packer must either pack at a loss or else not pack at all.

Needless to say, many of them are not packing, and this is bound to be felt later on, if the demand improves. It is further pointed out that most factories that are running to-day, are simply using up old gear that they had on hand from last year, as they could not afford, at to-day's market prices, to fit out new, and unless the prices improve before another year, the majority, it is declared, will be forced out of the business.

WATCHING THE WRONG COMPETITOR.

Many merchants, and particularly those doing business in country districts not fortunate in having a newspaper as an advertising medium between themselves and their natural consumers, are often greatly worried by the inroads of mail order houses. They find that the very people whose accounts they carry for one, six, and sometimes twelve months, send cash to the mail order houses, and there purchase half their goods. They know that they can sell just as cheaply and often cheaper, under the prices named in the catalogues of the big houses.

This is a problem which has puzzled many of them and they find it difficult to get at the root of the trouble.

In nine cases out of ten the cause lies in the lack of energy and diplomacy on the part of the merchants. They get into a rut and stay there. They do not utilize their faculties to advantage in overcoming this disadvantage and much too frequently do they watch the wrong competitor. They believe if they can sell as cheaply as the opposition across the street or on the next concession line, cut prices when he does, pay the farmers' wives a cent more for eggs than other merchants, they are on the fair road to success and are going to attract a greater share of the trade than their local campetitors.

These wrong ideas have been the cause for many a downfall when success might have been achieved. Instead of booming their own businesses by impressing upon their natural customers the quality of their goods and the values they are getting for their money, they keep their eyes fixed on what the merchant on the next corner is doing.

The outcome of this is that a price on a certain article is cut by one of the number and the rest follow in his footsteps to the detriment of the manufacturer of that article and their own profits. The time soon comes when it is discovered a profit cannot be made; they either purchase a substitute or give up handling it. The manufacturer loses business and the merchant loses profits. The effect is far-reaching.

An essential accompaniment to the success of a country town or village is enterprise among the merchants. They have got to do the booming if they want to secure business and the securing of business means the building up of a place more attractive to the farmers and with greater prestige in the commercial arena. Where merchants judiciously advertise their goods in their home town there will be found few vacant stores and empty houses. They have to be alive to not only their own interests, but to the interests of the whole community. They must see that the money earned in their own district is spent in their home town and to do this there must exist good-fellowship and good-will among them.

Cutting each others' throats at the expense of allowing the money to go to the mail order houses is undoubtedly poor policy, and if carried on to excess spells failure for those who practise it.

A GREAT MENACE.

There is probably not a city, town, or village in Canada into which the T. Eaton Company does not send more merchandise than is sold by any local merchant; and yet it does not pay one cent of local taxes.

Unlike the pedlar it cannot be taxed for invading the local territory and yet it is a competitor of a serious description.

Nothing can be said against the T. Eaton Company for its enterprise. It is rather to be commended. Not only do its catalogues and literature of various kinds go to the towns and villages but even the farmers in back parts of the country are in receipt regularly of its catalogues, while in the newspapers it is a regular and persistent advertiser.

But because the company are enterprising it does not follow that they should receive favored treatment from either federal or provincial governments, and yet attempts have been made by Parliament to put through measures which in the final analysis would be detrimental to the ordinary retailer and advantageous to the big department store. The amendment which the Government a year or two ago proposed to make to the parcel post regulations, and which was only prevented from becoming law by the agitation which was started by The Canadian Grocer was a case in point. The Government did not see "the nigger in the fence" until The Canadian Grocer exposed him.

Nothing, however, has ever been attempted or done by federal or provincial governments which has placed such a powerful weapon in the hands of the T. Eaton Company as the school book contract recently awarded that company by the Ontario Government. The more it is contemplated the more manifest does its dangerous character become.

Every child as soon as it comes of school age will be practically taught to lisp the name of the big Toronto department store, and will become imbued with the idea that it is not only the source of supply for books but for merchandise of all kinds as well.

By the time the contract expires ten years hence it is beyond the comprehension of man to estimate the number of children thorughout Ontario who will have been taught that it is practically the one and only place in which to secure the various kinds of merchandise.

In view of this is it any wonder that the general merchant should stir up his representative in the Ontario Legislature? Some relief must be offered if great injury to the retail trade is to be prevented.

SUCCESS IN DULL TIMES.

There is a great deal of difference between success in good times and success in bad times. In the one case unless the merchant deliberately kills the goose that lays the golden egg, all that he has to do is to look after, and to exact the fullest measure of profit from the demand that the consuming wants of the country have created. To a great extent good times take care of themselves. But when times are dull, and consumers apathetic, it is then that the dealer is in need of all his business acumen and salesmanship. He has to create a demand, and that is a hard task.

It is not the man who sleeps during the dull periods of the year, and only wakes up when trade comes knocking at the door, who makes the most success of his business. It is the man who fights and schemes to turn the bad times into good who gets ahead of the game.

It is in the power of every dealer to create trade, be the times what they may. The appetite of the consumer may be dormant, but it can be tickled into activity. This can only be done by unceasing preseverance, unceasing vigilance, and an intelligent appreciation of what will best attract the consumer. The merchant who continually offers up attractive bait, and induces the consumer to bite when he does not want to, whose windows are always original and smart in design, and whose store seems to be always busy, is the man who converts bad times into good. Undoubtedly there is a great amount of truth in the statement that the trade which naturally comes to a merchant pays the expenses of the business, but the trade that is attracted pays the real profits.

LESSONS LEARNED BY REVERSES

At a recent gathering of grocers in a Western Ontario city a leading member of the trade made the rather startling statement that, in his opinion, a grocer, who had started business and failed, should not be allowed to begin again. No reason was advanced for the strange conclusion but, nevertheless, the remark will bear analysis.

If such a regulation were in force and applied to every line of trade, there would be only about five per cent. of the people in business that there are to-day. Statistics show that, taking into consideration all commercial enterprises, ninety persons out of every hundred have met with a reverse at some time or other in their career. That is they have had to ask for an extension of time, to effect a compromise or make an assignment. A man, who has been in business continuously for a quarter of a century or more and has not at some stage or other, to use a colloquial expression, been "up against it" is as rare as a politician who has not met with a defeat at the polls or a capitalist who has never made an unprofitable speculation or investment. We are all prone to error and yet, because of one mistake or set-back, we would, according to this dogma, have to stay down and out for all time if we did not at first succeed. The greatest school in life is that of experience and insight. The wisest man is not he who has always avoided mistakes but rather the one, who never makes the same mistake a second time.

If a grocer is not too egotistical, conceited or blind to his best interests he may find that he has failed in business through granting too much credit, buying too heavily, paying too large a rent, locating in an unsuitable stand, not having sufficient capital, lacking experience, lacking promptness in his collections, being too independent with patrons, neglecting to anticipate the wants of his customers, indulging in ruinous price cutting, and many other reasons.

He will then, if he is level headed, sit down and calmly review the whole situation, seek to profit by what he has learned—it may have been at considerable cost—and resolve not to make the same blunder or oversight in the future. He will try to create of his misfortune a stepping stone to success in his next venture, which drawback, if he is willing to be taught, should prove one of the strongest supports in the structure that he is seeking to rear anew. It is by such firm resolves, by an honest disposition to do better, by being open to conviction, by refusing to yield when once thrown, by having the requisite pluck, courage and perseverance that such men press often forward to greater achievements.

"Show me the man who states he has never made a mistake or a failure," declared an eminent merchant prince, "and I will show you one who has neglected to make the most of his opportunities and has traveled in one rut all his life."

INCORPORATING A BUSINESS.

Some of the advantages of joint stock companies with limited liability over the individual, the ordinary partnership or the partnership with silent partner, are given below by Fred. C. Lariviere, Montreal, in answer to a question asked at the Retail Hardware convention at Hamilton in February:

Bankers and business men prefer dealing with a joint stock company as the paid-up capital (if all the stock subscribed is fully paid) cannot be withdrawn or decreased, although it may be impaired by loss. They are better secured in case of death, sickness, disability, or even bad conduct of one of the principals, for such a man may be dismissed and cannot force the refund of his shares from the other shareholders.

In an ordinary partnership a member may ask, on giving due notice, the dissolution of the firm, although the withdrawal of this partner may greatly affect the credit standing of the firm, and, in some cases, absolutely ruin it. In a joint stock company a member can only sell his shares to another and the capital stock remains unchanged. The same principles apply in the case of death.

In ordinary partnership the whole of a merchant's wealth is liable, not only for the liabilities of his firm in regular business transactions, but for all accidents which may be caused by the carelessness of one of your employes to himself or your customers such as an elevator accident, touching electric wires or in the handling of cases of goods or the runaway of your horse. He is also unguarded against errors of judgment in agreements or contracts, either through haste, inexperience or inadvertence made by himself or partners or employes.

In joint stock companies a man is only responsible for the amount of the shares he has subscribed for and if, paid up, he has nothing more to lose.

Joint stock companies facilitate the management of a business. If more capital is required, the directors can issue new stock and sell the necessary amount of shares without admitting a new partner or partners as with regular partnership agreements.

If a merchant thinks he has too much interest at stake, with joint stock companies he needs nobody's consent to sell his stock. Ordinary partnership requires mutual consent of partners and a new agreement.

If you wish to interest your son in your business, in a joint stock company, you can transfer a few shares to him without asking permission. In a partnership consent of your partners must be obtained.

In a joint stock company you insure all your property, not invested in your regular business, against all liabilities connected with the company's debts.

If you have shares in a joint stock company and wish to borrow money you transfer your shares as collateral security and effect the loan. In ordinary partnership you cannot use your partnership interest to borrow money.

By incorporation you double your borrowing powers without affecting your individual credit. You can also interest your best employes with the object of keeping them satisfied to remain with you.

In case of death your interest in joint stock companies will be much more valuable to your estate or family than it would be in ordinary partnership, for in these when dissolution occurs you lose all the value of the good-will of the business to which you may have contributed very largely, and the value of good-will is shown by the large prices paid when large corporations amalgamate.

Incorporation is the newest and safest method of doing business.

A TRADE PAPER'S DUTY.

Some one has said that the trade paper holds a brief for its readers and is published in their interests. That as the Paint, Oil and Drug Review points out, is the difference between the trade paper and the house organ—the latter holds a brief for the house that prints it. Publishing a trade paper looks like a simple matter, but it is not as easy as it looks. Anybody with a font of type and a printing press can print a paper, dedicate it to the trade and thus become a publisher, but he will still be a long way from success. Nothing but the work of years will put his publication in a position where he can say of it, this is the representative journal of the trade. It takes more than printer's ink to make a trade paper.

The first duty of a trade paper is to its readers—to the trade which it represents. Why? Because the readers pay all the bills. They pay as subscriptions about the actual cost of the white paper, but they also pay all the cost of the advertisements and more, for no advertiser can continue in business unless he makes a profit on his advertising. The readers of the trade paper, therefore, support not only the paper but, in a sense, its advertisers as well.

The trade paper which best serves its readers is the best medium for advertising, for the very reasons above stated; and, indirectly, the buyer profits also, for through the columns of the trade paper he learns where he can buy the best goods for the least money. The largest manufacturers are the most persistent advertisers. Their goods are the best for the money because they can be produced cheaper in large quantities, and are of the best quality because it does not pay to advertise inferior goods, only the best commanding a steady sale. Thus both advertiser and subscriber profit by the trade paper, which puts them into communication with one another, to their mutual advantage.

JUST A REMINDER.

A gentleman with many years' experience in the advertising field remarked recently that Canadians, when writing to firms in reply to advertisements seldom make reference to the publication in which they had seen them.

We do not know how far this applies to the readers of The Canadian Grocer. Some, at least, do mention this paper when they are answering advertisements; possibly there are some who do not.

There is not a trade newspaper in Canada that has either more readers or more friends than The Canadian Grocer, and the publishers would appreciate it very much if when writing to firms about merchandise advertised in the columns of this paper they would kindly give it credit.

The advertisers would appreciate it, and The Canadian Grocer certainly would, for such things add to its prestige.

One of the main purposes of The Canadian Grocer is the furtherance of the interests of the grocery and general trades in Canada. One good turn deserves another, and our readers will be doing their good turn if, when writing in reply to advertisements, they mention The Canadian Grocer.

Try it with this issue.

A SIGN OF WEAKNESS.

To cut prices in order to get the business is a sign of weakness. He who has to resort to this method is incapable of building up a business on businesslike and up-to-date methods.

It is one thing to reduce the price of an article which has been so long in stock so as to cut off the profits, but it is another thing to take a staple line of goods and deliberately cut the price in order to try and attract customers to the store or warehouse.

Enterprise is at the root of every successful business. To employ methods which disorganize trade can scarcely be termed enterprising. Foolishness is rather a better term.

Knowledge of business, good live, selling methods, courteous treatment of customers, and judicious advertising are much better business-getting factors than cutting prices. The one builds up business, the other undermines it.

Beans and Peas—firm.
Teas—Japans, firm.
Evaporated Apples—decline.

Montreal, May 20, 1909.

The excess of rain which has fallen has checked business in the country. Seeding operations are very backward and the pastures are suffering. A traveler who has been out in the country stated that he believed that the people there were greater victims of weather conditions than in the city. In cities inclement weather does not make a very great difference in the state of trade but in the country it produces its effect immediately. People don't have pavements on which to travel and the muddy roads look too formidable.

Locally wholesale houses report a fair volume of business but retail men are not ordering far ahead. The chief incidents of the week have been the decline in molasses and advance in rolled oats. Beans and peas are firm and Austrian stock has made its appearance in the market. Other lines have not undergone any appreciable change during the week. Collections are reported to be only fair.

SUGAR—The market has been quiet during the week. A few small lots of Scotch sugar have come to hand by the first steamers. Buyers are not taking more than will supply immediate wants.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES—The molasses situation has eased off slightly this week, especially in fancy lines. The Wholesale Grocers' Guild made a reduction of ½ to 2c per gallon according to package and they are now selling in the city. A lot of 100 puncheons of fancy was sold a few days ago at 33c, while sales of 400 puncheons were made at 31c. The import price is nominal at 31c to 32c for fancy and 36c to 37c for choice.

COFFEE—"As steady as clockwork," is the way one large wholesale house here described the coffee trade. "I don't believe our business shows a 100 lbs. difference in any month," he stated. This describes the condition of the market very well indeed. No changes in prices have taken place during the week.

DRIED FRUITS—The stocks of currants are small and a strong feeling prevails in this market. The market in Greece is slightly higher according to cable despatches. Valencia raisins are quiet with prices showing some signs of weakening. Persian dates are meeting with a fair spring demand. The markets is gradually getting bare of figs. ONTARIO MARKETS

POINTERS—

Beans—Advance in Prices.
Sugar—Market stronger.
Evaporated Apples—Stocks getting low.
Maple Syrup—Prices advanced.
Rice—Advance in primary market.
Dried Fruits—Good demand.

Toronto, May 20, 1909.

Dull weather is, according to many wholesales and brokers, responsible for the somewhat quiet business conditions pervailing. Trade is no receding any, but on the other hand, is gradually increasing, but not so rapidly as was anticipated. Warmer weather must soon prevail and we may look for keen, active business in a short time.

"The backward weather seems to worry many when there is really no cause," remarked one optimistic wholesaler, "and trade will come all right. We are expecting an unusually good season and the general outlook looks good to me."

Collections are better than they were a few weeks ago and this is another splendid sign.

The market features during the week were few. Beans are getting scarcer rapidly and prices have advanced. Stocks are vanishing "on the double-quick" and it is believed will soon be out of sight until the new crops are harvested.

Sugar shows a change from last week, the prices being firmer, but the demand is still as disappointing as ever.

Dried fruits remain good sellers and a great deal of them are passing from wholesaler to retailer to consumer just now. Rice in the primary market has advanced, but this has not affected the prices here.

SUGAR—Since last week sugar has been more steady at the prices last quoted. The consumptive demand, however, is poor. There have been large transactions in raws on account of the bad weather reports from Cuba, where the rainy season has set in with a vengeance, interfering with the harvesting of the canes. Forty-four central factories closed during the week ending on the 11th, leaving 75 in partial operation. Raws have taken on a firmer tone and Europe has responded to the better feeling in New York. Refiners in the latter place have made some partial cutting in prices, due to local reasons, while the general list remains unchanged. In Canada there is no change to record, with the demand disappointing, probably due to the dull weather.

SYRUP AND MOLASSES — Corn syrups are moving rather slowly. One reason given is that last year being such a splendid one for fruits, housewives preserved large quantities and these stocks in many cases have not yet run out. Prices for maple syrup, both pure and compound, advanced some time ago and remain the same. Molasses are inclined to decrease in price, the demand not being any too good.

TEA AND COFFEE—Brokers report the tea market as quiet these times, but claim that this is nothing new at this season of the year.

The following telegram from Calcutta to Thompson's Weekly Tea Circular, London, relative to crop prospects, says: "The outturn last month was poor from all districts except Upper Assam, which was normal. In Lower Assam and Sylhet, where rainfall has been deficient, immediate prospects are bad, but elsewhere the outlook is satisfactory. From Darjeeling, however, severe hailstorms are reported and considerable damage has resulted to crops."

Coffee is in the same steady demand as usual.

DRIED FRUITS—These goods are selling well, particularly peaches, apricots and prunes. Figs are getting scarcer, but the demand cannot be said to be of much account. Raisins are quiet just at present and currants are firm, with strengthening primary markets.

BEANS—"What is the bean market like this week?" was asked of one of the brokers yesterday. "Can scarcely tell you," he replied, "for you can't see them." Beans are scarce and prices are pretty high, with an advance announced this week. The cause is attributed to the fact that United States buyers secured considerable of our beans this year. The quality has been good and stocks are practically cleaned up. A lot of them were used in camps this winter."

EVAPORATED APPLES— Stocks of evaporated apples are represented by some as out of first hands just now. There are quite a few Canadian evaporated apples in New York awaiting export to Germany. Demand for them has been good of late on account of the high price and scarcity of apples.

CANNED GOODS

MONTREAL—Vegetables are getting the call these days. Fruits are very much neglected; people claim they are too dear. With the approach of summer canned meats are going into consumption in larger quantities every week. The demand for canned fish is small with the exception of salmon, which is going well. Pork and beans are selling well.

TORONTO—Nearly all the wholesalers and interested brokers report canned goods as good sellers. Vegetables and fruits are perhaps better than fish although the salmon season is almost at hand and large quantities of it are moving.

In the fruit line apples and peaches lead the list, due no doubt to their popularity in the home. Home preserved fruit stocks are decreasing rapidly and canned fruit is being used as a substitute—and a good substitute it is. Grocers should do a good trade just now if they advertise, display and advance sales.

In the vegetable line tomatoes is a huge seller. Corn is moving out rapidly and peas, as has before been stated, are very scarce and high in price.

MANITOBA MARKETS

(Corrected by Telegraph).

Winnipeg, May 20.— Many retailers who have occasion to feel the life of the trade at every point, are feeling that the prolonged cold and disagreeable weather is going to figure very largely in the financial condition of their business when the time comes to make up the books. The trade for a few days has been very dull and one grocer who compared the past ten days with that of one year ago found that the business showed fully 10 p.c. decrease. Hopes ran high for the month of May, but they are running still higher for June, and as a rule the most encouraging features are enlarged upon among the local retailers.

There seems to be a decided upward tendency in the market situation due to various causes. Grains, stock-foods and potatoes are all advanced, and cereals are firmer. The market in potatoes is such that it has permitted the Ontario grown potatoes to come in, and it is reported also that the freight rate on this commodity has been reduced from Ontario. Foreign dried goods are firmer, and canned goods are somewhat duller in the local market.

Wholesalers, perhaps, more than retailers are suffering from the backward season.

SUGAR—The declines of last week have not increased the output very considerably. Retailers realize little profit in this commodity and it is rarely boomed. We quote the prices of last week.

We have everything in woodenware but at present wish you to notice our oval wood dish for butter, lard, jam, honey, pickles, meat and many other things. There is a straight face on the edge of the dish so that a neat, safe parcel is made by using one to hold the contents, another to cover it, then wrapped with paper.

They are without corners or seams to hold dust or dirt and when emptied by the consumer can be scraped entirely clean without any trouble.

The slight curve outward on the edge of the dish makes it strong, and as it is sharp it clears the material from the spade or ladle very easily.

Made of selected Canadian hardwood, they are entirely free from taint and are clean and sweet.

Produce and Provision Situation of the World

Price of Hogs Advances Again —Pork Packing Factories Closing From Lack of Supply and High Prices — Fresh Grass Brings Abundance of Butter.

Almost beyond the expectations, and certainly beyond the hopes of provision dealers, hogs are again about 25c a hundred higher this week, having reached the uncommonly high figure of $7.55 for live hogs at country points, and $10.75 to $11.00 for dressed in the city.

It is not only the high prices of hogs that pinch the packers, but to keep their plants going with full force of workmen and only be able to get one-tenth the quantity of hogs they could handle, brings the cost of manufacturing per lb. so high that they are practically working at a loss. It is certainly a serious matter when already six or seven packing houses have shut down, and those which are still running cannot make any money. If the high price of cured meats will reduce the quantity consumed, and the high price of hogs induce farmers to raise more hogs the situation will soon right itself.

In a very short time the pasture will be at its best, and the largest flow of milk of the year will take place and consequently the largest make of butter will be put on the market which is usually followed by lower prices. Owing to the fresh grass and the effect of the sudden change in the feed will produce a quality of butter which is never desirable, and this also will have a tendency to weaken the market. With the unusually heavy rains good pastures for some time are assured, which means a good yield of both butter and cheese.

Cable reports from England say there is a scarcity at one end and an abundance at the other. The home make is very slow in putting in its appearance. The supplies from Denmark are arriving slowly, but there is no cause for alarm in this fact as other sources of supply are intact. The new Siberian make is coming into the market freely and showing good quality. Increased supplies are arriving from Ireland. It is thought that the Danes are holding back a lot of stock for better prices but this will soon come into the market otherwise they will have the home output to deal with. From all reports the situation is by no means clear and the future is indeed in the lap of the gods, as it all depends on whether the continent falls off in export, whether we have another upward splurge or prices go still lower. At present things are pretty quiet and prices are if anything the turn lower than last week. Provincial markets are more cheerful than London, and there is a firmness about Manchester, Liverpool, and Cardiff which forebodes a rise next week. No Canadian anywhere.

Reports from England state that there is a wonderful quietness over the cheese market there. Old cheese holders are confident, and prices of white are advancing near the figures paid for colored. It is expected that before the new make arrives there will be a further advance in prices. The ideas of shippers do not, however, meet with general approval over there. Buyers are hanging off as they think shippers are asking too much. This fact has somewhat strained business. It is hoped that an adjustment can be arranged so the consumption of cheese will not be curtailed just at the start of the season. It seems however, since this report was despatched a more agreeable basis has been reached and stock is going forward freely from Canada.

MONTREAL.

PROVISIONS—According to cable advices all the leading markets for Canadian bacon have been strong during the week, and prices show a further advance. The local market is without any new feature, trade being quiet and prices steady. Abattoir fresh killed dressed hogs, are selling in a jobbing way at $11.25 to $11.50 per 100 lbs.

PROVISIONS—Still higher and higher with another advance of about 25c per 100 lbs. in hogs. Where will it end? Cured meats are following. Will the people continue to use the quantities or will consumption fall off? This seems to be the question. Some lines of cured meats are listed ¼ cent higher.

BUTTER—The butter market is rather oversupplied and as this is the time when the fresh grass butter begins to come in, all dealers are anxious to keep as little on hand as possible. Fodder fed butter will not be wanted as soon as good grass butter comes in, and as the first grass butter is never good, dealers are willing to accept less than the regular prices in order to get rid of it. On the whole butter is from 1 to 2c lower.

POULTRY—To one who has had his early experience and training on the farm, and had the idea impressed upon his mind, that certain things were in season and others out of season, cannot help but feel a sort of a pity when he sees laying-hens and young chickens weighing only 1 to 1½ lbs. killed for the market. To kill laying hens for food was not only considered wicked, but the meat was not supposed to be in a fit condition to eat, and to kill a delicate little chick was absolutely sinful. Might it not be fair and reasonable and in the interests of the general public if chickens were not allowed to be killed under certain conditions, and during certain seasons of the year.

MAPLE SYRUP—There is very little call for maple syrup. Very few orders have been repeated, and retailers, as a rule, have not sold as much as they expected. This proves the fact, that the quality this year was not up to the standard.

System and Economy Taught in Pork Packing Factory

Arrangement of Details a Powerful Aid in the Manufacture of the Hog Products—The Value of Saving Time and Money Illustrated—Lessons for the Retail Merchant—History of the Hog from Stock-shed to Refrigerator Car — Some Valuable Pointers for the Grocer Who Handles Meats.

Everything made use of but the squeal of the hog—is a phrase commonly heard in reference to a pork-packing establishment ; and it is literally true. In a recent trip through one onc of these establishments a representative of The Grocer saw for himself the wonderful chain of links in the preparation of the famous Canadian cured hams and bacon from the ordinary, stubborn, inoffensive hog that walks about the farmer's barn yard. The various stages of slaughtering, cutting and trimming, curing, smoking, sausage-making, lard rendering, etc., are all carried on under the eyes of two veterinary surgeons appointed as inspectors of that particular factory, by the Dominion Government.

But cured meats, lard and sausage do not constitute the whole hog. The offals including the internal organs, blood, etc., are not burned or thrown away. They are manufactured into a powder which constitutes a valuable fertilizer for land and which retails for some Hanging Room in a Pork Packing Factory Where Carcases are Allowed to Cool Gradually Before Going Into The Chilling Room.

A Lesson on System.

System is the predominating feature in the running of a pork-packing establishment. One would think it were used to excess if such could be possible. In this there are some pointers in economy for the retail merchant who hungers after new ideas. It may sound more like fiction than fact to many merchants to say that nothing is allowed to escape from the factory unused but the squeal of the hog. Hair, hoofs, blood and all other offal play their part in returning to the packer his money invested.

But apart from this, the systematic arrangement of all interior apparatus is a revelation to one unaccustomed to the modern conveniences of such a factory. This characteristic many of our retail stores lack and they certainly could find no more fitting model than the interior of the pork-packing establishment. The manual labor saved is wonderful ; the hog has scarcely to be touched from the time it leaves the pen in the stock-sheds until it is brought into the cutting room to be carved into the various cuts.

How Hogs are Slaughtered.

Let us start at the beginning of the process as it is carried out in the factory.

Stretching between the stock-pens and the fourth storey of the establishment proper is an inclined covered runway—a sort of a tunnel through the air—through which the hogs are driven to the slaughter house. On leaving this runaway and entering the building they are driven into what is called the "shakling pen" where they are caught up by the hind leg by means of a chain shackle attached to a large revolving wooden wheel. An automatic arrangement drops them off the wheel onto an inclined bar known as the "sticking rail," which carries them to the "bleeding pen" where experienced men perform the "sticking" operation.

With such a system in the plant referred to 250 to 300 hogs are killed in an hour making more than 2,500 in a working day of ten hours. After being bled they are dropped into the "scalding vat" to loosen the hair which must come off.

To get the hog from this tank of scalding water might seem a great difficulty but it is not so in this factory. By means of an automatic "throw-out" —somewhat the shape of the inverted teeth of a hay rake—the dead animal is picked up and tossed gently over on a platform in front of the "scraper."

A Time-saver is the Scraper.

Unlike the mode of scraping off the hair with a butcher-knife still in use by the farmer, in the pork packing establishment the hog is run through a funnel-shaped "scraper" with knives fastened on stout springs which adjust themselves according to the size of the animal. These oval-edged knives are so fastened that they form the small end of the funnel and are placed in such a way that they pass over every square inch of the body of the hog as it is drawn through them.

Above the knives is a water-pipe through which water continually pours forced by a pump and plays upon the knives and hog, thus washing the carcass and carrying off all the hair beneath just as soon as it is scraped off.

When the scraping degree has been passed the hog by means of an endless chain carrier is landed out on a clean zinc-bottomed bench where any small patches of hair that might be left by the scraping machine are removed with bell-shaped hand scrapers.

At the end of this bench are men ready with the "gambrel"—a short wooden stick which is passed through the sinews at the back of the hog's hind legs. It is hung up with this on a trolley and run off on a track which conveys it to the men who perform the operation of opening the carcase and removing the entrails.

Singeing of Export Hogs.

This is the finish of the slaughter house work so far as hogs for home consumption are concerned. But hogs intended for export bacon go through a further treatment. The English trade demands that the hog must be singed and this is accomplished by running the animal over a track into the singeing room. From there it is carried by means of an endless chain up through a circular chimney like a great furnace from the sides of which flames shoot out and envelop the hog. After passing through the flame it is carried by the chain to a chute and by means of an automatic trip is dropped into a vat of cold water, while the chain still moves along passing through cold water to cool it off before it again starts on its climb up through the "fiery furnace." The singeing gives the skin of the hog a yellow tinge which the old countryman desires. After passing through the singer the hog is sent on to the "opening" rail.

On the internal organs being removed the hog is railed from the slaughter house out into a nice, clear, airy "hanging" room.

Experience has taught packers that the hog should not be placed in the chill room immediately after it is killed. It must be gradually chilled off—and that is the purpose of the hanging room. After a sojourn there for some hours it is railed into the chill rooms—all of this work requires absolutely no lifting, the system being perfect in every respect.

Duties of Inspectors.

As intimated above two inspectors watch continually the work in the factory. These inspectors are not placed in any pork-packing establishment which does not export its products. Their duty is to see that all pork, beef or mutton sent out from the establishment must be wholesome and free from disease. If there is a suspicion in the mind of the inspector that there is anything wrong with the animal he places a "held" tag on it as it passes through the slaughter house to hanging room. If upon a later inspection his suspicions are corroborated by facts the "condemned" card goes on and it is "tanked" in the fertilizer department.

Room In Which Hams and Bacon are Hung After Emerging From the Smoke Houses.

Principle of Cold Storage.

What the refrigerator is to the grocer who carries perishable goods, the cold storage is to the packer of pork and beef. Cold storage is usually, however, a little more complicated but nevertheless easily understood. The absence of heat in the mechanically cooled rooms is due to the expansion of ammonia liquid pumped into the rooms, into a gas, when it absorbs the heat. The circulation of ammonia is a continuous one. It is compressed from a gas into a liquid by means of powerful machines called compressors and forced through iron pipes to the various cold storage apartments. Its expansion to a gas absorbs the heat and the lower the temperature desired in a room the more iron pipes are used to allow more ammonia to pass through it.

In the top-storey of the building are located huge fans which force chilled air down through pipes into the numerous beef and hog chill rooms. Openings at the ceiling on the opposite side of the chill room exhaust the heated air and cause a continuous circulation, thus making the air always fresh and wholesome. One of these chill rooms will hold as many as eight hundred carcases of hogs.

Trade Terms for Cuts.

From the chill rooms the hog is railed out at the opposite end at which it entered into the "cutting" room where it is cut up into hams, backs, breakfast bacon, rolls and shoulders and sent to the cellars for curing. The principal export cuts are known as Wiltshires, long ribs, Cumberlands, and long cut hams. The cutting room and in fact the slaughter and hanging rooms are particularly well lighted, having 25 foot ceilings with skylights and ventilators in additon to ordinary windows. They are also kept in excellent sanitary condition.

For curing purposes, the cuts are put through a special process in the curing rooms, one of which is in the basement and the other on the first floor.

Smoke-house Economy.

The smoke-houses are one of the interesting features of the plant and here again economy is plainly visible. Altogether there are 16 smoke-houses, erected vertically in 4 rows with 4 houses in each section. This arrangement only necessitates four fires in the basement.

The hams, bacon, etc., to be smoked after being cured in the cellar are hung on what are known as "ham trees" elevated on the elevator to any of the four storeys, railed off the elevator into the smoke-houses with no manual labor whatever.

These houses are cut off from the rest of the building by fire-proof walls and doors. In fact fire-proof walls and doors separate every department and it would be practically impossible for two sections of the building to burn at one time. The elevators are shut off automatically by fire shutters controlled by fusible links.

In the Lard Refinery.

Some of the finest machinery in the plant is to be found in the lard room where the refining takes place. To obtain the lard from the fat it is first placed in the big rendering tanks and from there drawn off into huge kettles and treated by various processes. One of these iron tanks is 14 feet deep, and holds 30,000 lbs. of lard, or a car load. One process of refining is putting the

The Essentials to Success in Carrying Candy

Confectionery Counter a Paying Department in Chatham's Oldest Grocery Because Proper Attention Is Paid To It—One Window Always Given To Candy Display—Daily Advertising Adhered To—Best Quality Of Goods Only Are Handled—How It Was Made To Pay Against Stiff Opposition.

"To make a success of the candy department, a grocer must be prepared to handle it in a thoroughly businesslike way. He must give it the same attention as he would give to any other department of his business, or even more; must be ready to devote time and money to building it up; and, finally, must be willing to wait two or three years for financial returns from his labor. In short, he must treat this department of his business in just the same careful, conscientious and businesslike way as he would any other."

This is the dictum of H. H. Malcolmson, manager of the Hugh Malcolmson grocery at Chatham, a concern which has made the candy department not only a prominent feature but a pronounced success.

Mr. Malcolmson's statement is coupled with the frank avowal that the field for such a department in the average town or small city is limited—an opinion strongly supported by the fact that while there is scarcely a Chatham grocer who does not handle confectionery to a greater or less extent, the Malcolmson store is the only grocery possessing a candy department of such extensive proportions.

Chatham's Oldest Grocery.

Just a word regarding the Malcolmson grocery.

It is the oldest grocery in Chatham, having been carried on continuously under the Malcolmson management since the year 1862—a period of 47 years. The building in which the business is housed, a substantial and handsome four storey structure, was erected in 1842. It was then Chatham's masterpiece of business building; and, truth to confess, from the business standpoint it holds the same rank to-day. The grocery is one of the largest, brightest and cleanest in the city. It occupies a central location, on the main street. The wide front provides not only an excellent and commodious entrance between two large show windows, given ample opportunity for tasty and attractive display. Nor is this opportunity neglected. The windows are always drawing cards for business, and their effect is emphasized by the brightness and cleanness of the spacious interior.

The business, founded by Hugh Malcolmson, who is also president of the Kent Canning Company, Limited, is under the more especial direction of his son, H. H. Malcolmson. Everything about the management smacks essentially of modern business methods. The entire store is departmentized, careful track being kept of the returns from each of the various sections into which the business is divided. The tasty window displays are changed at regular intervals. Mr. Malcolmson is a good advertiser, and knows how to use display space in the newspapers to excellent advantage.

The Candy Counter.

The candy department occupies a section of the store all its own, and it is well to the front, too, being given the space immediately to the left of the entrance. The candy showcase and the candy coounter are attractively arranged.

The show window immediately adjoining the counter is always given to a confectionery display, and these displays, changed at frequent intervals, are invariably carefully and attractively designed and are often very artistic.

The candy department is entirely separate from the various other departments of the business. A lady has complete charge of the counters, the displays and the selling. This is one of the features of the department to which much importance is attached.

"To make the candy counter really worth while," says Mr. Malcolmson, "the grocer must be prepared to put specially in charge of it some person who understand the business. It is not sufficient to fill a show case with candy, and leave the candy to do all the selling. The department must have its own salesman or saleswoman."

Quality is Essential.

High grade candy is featured. From the very outset, Mr. Malcolmson has given particular attention to the quality of the goods. Business has been done only with those firms whose standing gave unbounded assurance of the quality of the goods. Cheap candies are, of course, handled—candies as cheap as 10c a pound can be had—but even at this price, "quality" is the watchword, and the aim has been to give the customer who buys at this price the best 10c candy that can be had.

But, throughout, quality rather than price has been looked to. The steady aim has been to build up in the minds of the public the belief that the purchaser of candy at the Malcolmson candy counter is getting candy whose qualty cannot for one moment be questioned. Candy must be perfectly pure. Even the cheapest grades handled must be made of thoroughly pure and reliable materials.

"I have been asked," remarked Mr. Malcolmson, "what I considered the one essential in such a department, and my reply always is; 'Giving the customer candy that is absolutely pure and which represents the best possible value for his money.' "

As one result, this department secures a large share of the better class of trade—the trade of particular people, who want the best and are in a position to pay for it.

As previously stated, one of the two window displays is always given to candy. This circumstance in itself shows the importance attached by Mr. Malcolmson to giving the department his proper share of publicity. In all displays, price tags are prominently placed.

In addition, the department receives a considerable proportion of the firm's advertising space.

"The reason we do that is a professional secret," adds Mr. Malcolmson, with a quiet smile. "We do it because it pays."

The firm's advertising is essentially scientific and businesslike. A six-inch, single column space is used. The advertising copy is changed every day. Though each day's copy is to a certain extent divergent, nevertheless there are four items in practically every advertisement.

The first is a striking catchline in prominent display type.

The second is a brief and confidential business talk regarding some seasonable product.

The third is the price, followed by a few other appropriate prices.

The fourth is the firm name, again in display type.

The advertisement occupies exactly the same section of the paper every day.

In Operation 15 Years.

Malcolmson's candy counter has ceased to be a novelty in Chatham, and has become a household word. It has been in existence now for between 12 and 15 years. During all that time it has received the same careful, consistent and businesslike attention.

Last year it was put to a test that might fairly be called severe. In the first place, 1908 was generally admitted to be an "off" year for business. In such a year, a candy department would, in view of the prevailing fashion of looking on candy as a luxury, be pretty

Make Our Goodwill Work For You

A MILLION DOLLARS' WORTH OF CONFIDENCE FOR A TWO-CENT STAMP

BY THE WAY, what is your greatest asset? Is it your stock of goods, or that fat bank account, or what is it? It's your good customers, isn't it? Isn't it your customers?

¶ If, somehow, all your trade were annihilated at one fell swoop, your stock of goods, even though all paid for, would not be worth 50c. on the dollar—would it now? For what's the use of anything when nobody wants it.

¶ Your trade—that's what you call "my goodwill." What's it worth to you, this asset of public confidence, your goodwill? A thousand, two, ten, twenty thousands? Don't answer us, answer yourself. If it means so much, what would not a million dollars' worth of confidence accomplish in your business?

¶ That's what we offer you in FIVE ROSES sales—your share of a million. Amongst our realizable assets you would find an item of almost one million, and it reads—"goodwill, trade marks, etc." This is our common asset, yours and ours, for if we make FIVE ROSES flour you sell it.

¶ True goodwill implies a contract between maker and user always to deliver the same flour quality under the same name. We appreciate our debt to you and your trade, viz: Because FIVE ROSES has a wider circulation, because it is better known, a higher standard must be maintained and we must not allow FIVE ROSES to deteriorate in any way. A million dollars' worth of public confidence has been built up on FIVE ROSES excellence, and it must live up to that excellence—and it will!

¶ Remember this: when you sell flour you are also selling reputation, the true basis of confidence. And the only reputation worth while is that of quality based on reliability and "value received." Adopt the FIVE ROSES slogan—"A square deal on both sides of the counter."

¶ What is it that is keeping your flour trade down to peanut proportions? You need FIVE ROSES and we need your trade. Don't you want your share of that million? If FIVE ROSES will make you money to-morrow, it will make you money to-day, right here NOW.

sure to suffer a decline in returns. In the second place, two 5-10-15 cent stores were started in Chatham last spring, each equipped with and giving prominent place to confectionery retailing at prices ranging up to 20c a pound.

In spite of both these circumstances, the Malcolmson candy counter, in place of showing the decline which the casual observer would have doubtless anticipated, increased its receipts. This fact is striking. Neither hard times nor "cheap" competition affected it.

Is Not a Joke.

At the same time, Mr. Malcolmson sounds a note of warning. No grocer, he declares, should think of tackling the candy business with a view to making it "worth while" in a large sense unless he is fully prepared to sink money in it, and devote to it a fair share of his time and attention. The building up of a candy department is no child's play. It takes real work, and a great deal of thought.

Furthermore, the field is limited, and the money and attention required are such that a grocer desiring to go into the candy business on a substantial scale should first assure himself that he will be filling "a long felt want," that, in fact, there is prospective patronage enough to justify him in taking the plunge. It is a business which must be nursed and developed gradually.

"That, at least, seems to be the case in Ontario. I daresay the successful candy departments between Toronto and Windsor could be counted on the fingers of one hand. In Winnipeg and the Northwest," he added, "I understand that things are different. That is due to the large number of newly arrived Britishers in the country. The English are a great candy-eating people, and buy the sweet stuff in large quantities. But Canadians are different. They look upon candy rather as a luxury, and have not been educated yet to take the English view of it."

Nutritive Qualities of Chocolate and Cocoa

A Traveler's Reason Why Grocers Should Handle These Goods—A Hundred Per Cent. Profit On Some Milk Chocolates—Value Of Silent Salesmen in Displaying Confectionery—Many Grocers Becoming Interested.

By E. W. Pyke.

The salesmen should know the value of the goods he sells. I mean by this not so much the money value but the value they will be to the consumer who uses them. When he knows this, he has a strong talking point to use when his customers come to purchase. Grocers, I maintain, should handle chocolate, cocoa, etc., because when their merits are known they become easy sellers.

All foods fall under the head of tissue builders and heat producers. Cocoa contains twenty per cent. of its own weight of nitrogenous or tissue building foods and for this reason its nutritive value is great. A celebrated surgeon has placed himself on record as advocating pure cocoa with the fat removed as a substitute for mother's milk. It is a fact that nine-tenths of the cocoa-bean is composed of matter that is retained and assimilated by digestive organs. Cocoa, too, is one of the cheapest foods we can use.

Manufacturing Methods.

In the selling of milk chocolate, grocers who understand its composition and nutritive qualities should have little difficulty. The manufacture of it is a large and rapidly growing branch of the chocolate business. Milk chocolate is both delicious and nourishing confection and a highly recommended nutritive food. It is made simply from pure chocolate with additional cocoa-butter added and fresh dairy milk that has first been reduced to a solid state by evaporation. In some factories the product is not touched by hand during the whole course of manufacture and the utmost care and precaution is taken everywhere to secure absolute cleanliness and wholesomeness.

The food value of milk chocolate is shown by the fact that it is classed among the regular rations of the English army and that during the late South African war many thousands of pounds were personally sent by the late Queen Victoria to the army in the field. Throughout Europe it is largely used in hospitals and in England wealthy people buy as much as $300 worth for a single social function. It consists approximately of 60 per cent. milk, and 40 per cent. chocolate, the latter having previously been enriched by the addition of about 14 per cent. of cocoa-butter. Its stimulating action upon the body makes it a favorite food with athletes.

The cocoa bean is the raw material from which cocoa and chocolate is made, the process of manufacture being identical until the bean is ground and flows from the mill a thin oily paste. If cocoa is being made most of, the oil is pressed out and becomes the cocoa-butter of commerce. Chocolate whether for confection or beverage purposes is the ground cocoa bean with all the oil left in and sometimes more is added with the thickening sweeting and flavoring materials thoroughly mixed in with the cocoa-mass. The main difference then between the cocoa and chocolate is the extraction or retention of the oil.

Large Profits Made.

During a recent trip through the province, I noticed that the up-to-date grocer has recognized the fact that in order to supply the wants of his customers he has to carry a large stock of cocoa and milk chocolate. He is finding the demand to be continually on the increase and it is not now unusual to find many grocery stores equipped with large and handsome silent salesmen for aiding in the display of high-class confectionery. The wonder is that many more have not taken up the selling of milk chocolate as well as others. It adds considerably to the financial returns as in many lines the profits are 100 per cent. This should induce retailers to stock up in milk chocolates and use their best talking points in order to push the sales. There are few lines which take so little romm for display and which give such good returns for the amount of capital invested.

I may say that to my mind there is nothing that adds so much to the appearance of a well furnished grocery stores as a silent salesman well stocked with a high-class line of confectionery. I believe that to-day the grocers is alive to the fact that in order to hold all the trade he has and capture more he must be right up to the minute both in stock and smart store appearance and he must be able to give customers all that they call for in the line of chocolate and cocoa.

Cereal Products Moving Well and Prices are Firm—Advances in Some Cases—No Changes in Flour Prices.

At the present time the market in cereal goods is firm and in some places advances have been made. The cause is attributed to high prices of wheat and oats and it would not be a surprise to some if cereal products were to go higher. The demand is active and more so than anticipated at this season of the year.

Grocers are handling more cereal goods every year as they are becoming more and more popular at the breakfast table.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR—The flour market is in a more settled condition this week, as the big millers are nearer together in quotations. Owing to the scarcity of Ontario winter wheat a firm feeling prevails in the local situation for these lines. Reports state that large shipments have gone forward to Africa.

FLOUR—Although wheat is being quoted the same as last week, millers are quietly paying 5c a bushel more, and are glad to get it, to enable them to fill their orders. The market is very strong and wheat, especially fall wheat, is very hard to get. As far as can be ascertained there is very little Ontario wheat left in the country. A GOOD BUTTER STORY.

A rather good story is making the rounds of the grocery trade in Peterboro just now.

A well-known farmer's wife, whose butter is celebrated for its excellent quality, came into a certain grocery with 10 pounds of butter and asked the merchant to exchange it for her.

"I want to be honest about this," she said. "A rat ran through the creamery and got into this milk, but it was taken out at once, and I don't think it would do the butter any harm. However, what the eye doesn't see the heart won't grieve over."

The grocer was non-plussed for a moment, but he took the butter and went down cellar with it, and having the material at hand, he quickly did it over into a little different shape and returned it to her.

When she came in again a week later she said, "That was excellent butter you gave me. Who made it?" The grocer hadn't prepared for this predicament, but he was equal to it. "It was yours, Mrs. Blank," he said, "but you know 'what the eye doesn't see the heart won't grieve over.'"

THE CIRCULAR OUTCOME.

Many of the retail grocers of Toronto are putting up a strong fight against the action of the Wholesale Fruit, Produce and Provision Association. At a meeting of the Butchers' and Grocers' sections of the Retail Merchants' Association held on Monday night it was decided to prosecute the wholesalers, alleging that they are a combine contrary to law. Steps are now being taken and it is stated that H. Dewart has been retained as counsel. The wholesalers look upon the matter in another light. For years they have been troubled with the grocer who "was here to-day and gone to-morrow" and they claim that these are the men against whom they want to protect themselves.

VEGETABLES—There are a number of changes in the vegetable market. Prices have on the whole declined owing to better arrivals from the south and the advancing season. French cauliflowers are off the market. Tomatoes are higher by about a $1. Parsley is arriving by the dozen, instead of the box. Radishes are higher and new potaties are worth 5c a pound this week. GREEN FRUITS—The market is well supplied with all kinds of fruit. Apples are scarce, but still very choice qualities are offered, which change hands at prices as high as $7.50 a barrel. California navel oranges, although drawing near the close of the season, are still here in abundance. Pineapples are at their height. Large quantities are arriving; the demand is good; prices are firm, with an advance of 10c a case. A car of Alabama strawberries has arrived which will sell at about 17 to 18c a quart box. California cherries have made their appearance and are sold at $3.00 to $3.50 a box. In spite of the war declared between the city retailers and wholesalers, business seems to be going on as usual.

VEGETABLES—The potato market is easier although the jobbers are still asking the same price for stock they have on hand. At the same time they would not pay the price they paid last week. With no export demand in sight, and a large quantity still in the hands of the farmers, the chances are that potatoes will be cheaper. As hogs are very high and potatoes a good food for them, farmers will certainly feed them rather than sell them below feed value, but as that value is considerably below the present figures, it is altogether likely that prices will be lower.

FISH—Fresh fish of many varieties are coming in, but not sufficient to meet the demand. All fish, owing to the cool weather, arrive in splendid condition and are picked up quickly. "Did I understand you to say that you sell carp at 3c a lb.?" was asked by The Grocer. "Yes, sir," replied a dealer. "Are they not a good fish?" "Well, I tell you, if you clean one carefully, then fill it with hay, and fry it in good butter, you will throw the fish away and eat the dressing," he nnswered.

There is only one class of people who eat them. Sometimes when they are scarce and they are keen to have them, dealers can get as high as 8c a lb. for them. "You know, these people eat no other fish," declared the dealer.

A New Departure.

As will be seen by a reference to their advertisement in this issue, Eby-Blain Limited, have made an addition to the already large number of lines that they specialize in. The "Lion's Head" Brand navel oranges are extra fancy quality, and prices quoted are very low. Grocery terms: Thirty days net or cash less 1 per cent.

W. H. Millman & Sons would call the wholesale trade's attention to their ad. on page 70 of this issue. They have some of the finest goods packed in Canada, to offer at reasonable figures.

PROFITS FROM FLOWERS.

Several months ago C. W. Grantham, a Brantford grocer, began handling flowers and also birds. The store is situated on the corner of Colborne and Alfred Streets and has two large windows in one of which are always displayed flowers and birds. A large number of people pass this corner and Mr. Grantham states that these attractive displays have been a great aid to the business. The flowers which find the most ready sale are the potted plants in bloom, although he also has the cut flowers and palms, which are always steady sellers.

The arrangement made with the florist is that he receives a commission on sales only. This is a fair arrangement to make until the business is established when it might be more profitable to buy them out and out, as the potted plants especially can be bought much cheaper that way.

Whenever the birds are in the window they prove a great attraction, as Mr. Grantham usually has quite a large number both domestic and foreign, the plumage of which is so brilliant one can scarcely pass without failing to take notice. The Australian paraquets sell at ten dollars per pair and the Java sparrows at the same price. German canaries sell at five to ten dollars per pair, and the Norwich canaries at that figure also. The sales of these average from seven to ten pair per week. The profits are good and the birds are easy to keep if kept free from drafts. Only one other grocer in Brantford, Mr. Matthews, on Brant Ave., handles flowers but others there are considering it and will no doubt do so in the near future.

Canada Leads in Value of her Fisheries

Immense Coast Line and Inland Lakes and Rivers Responsible for This Honor—Improvement in Regulations Desirable—Work Requires Employment of an Army of Men—How Sea Fish are Caught off Coast of Nova Scotia—Vast Oyster Beds in the East—Salmon Makes Important the Pacific Coast Province.

"The most important in the world.' is the phrase which now must be used to designate the fisheries of the Dominion of Canada. This is only another evidence of the wonderful resources of the land in which we live and when we come to consider the meaning of it all we are astonished that a country but a little over four hundred years of age should lead the world in the matter of any particular industry. Yet it is an undisputed fact that Canada stands first in her fisheries. Besides extending over an immense sea-coast line they are alike important in the vast areas of fresh water provided by our Great Lakes and rivers. They give employment to an army of men but are yet only in their early development stages. There is plenty of room for extension and the government of Canada has every reason to look after them with an interested eye.

Among the great consumers of Canadian fish is Canada herself. Within the past few years the demand for fish has rapidly increased at home and the figures that represent our exports have also gone up. However during the season of 1907-08—the last for which we have statistics—the catch fell off from what it was the previous year. This evidently demonstrates the need for the special committee by the Dominion Government to look into the fishing industry and to mould its progress.

Markets for Western Fish.

The annual report of the Marine and Fisheries Department which was presented to Parliament a few months ago showed that last year's catch of fish including fish products, seals, etc., was valued at $25,500,000 of which the exports to foreign countries, chiefly to the United States and Great Britain, amounted to $13,906,567. This catch showed a decrease of $750,000 from the return of the preceding year. There were, however, handsome increases in New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Ontario.

The falling off in the inland western provinces was more pronounced than last year, and the question of facilities for reaching profitable markets for fish in the great west is a very important factor to the producer.

Thousands of Men Employed.

During the season of 1907-08 over seventy-one thousand men were engaged in the fisheries of Canada, not including the thousands of persons employed in the lobster canning industry. The aggregate capital employed was nearly fifteen million dollars. The lobster plants alone are valued at over one million five hundred thousand dollars, comprising all the equipment of nearly seven hundred canneries. This industry marketed nearly nine million cans of this preserved crustacean, besides about a million pounds disposed of alive or in a fresh state, mostly in the United States, aggregating together a value exceeding four million dollars.

The salmon-canning industry in British Columbia comprises seventy-five canneries, valued at nearly two million dollars and produced over twenty-five million pounds of the preserved article, besides nearly as many pounds disposed of fresh or salted.

For Better Regulations.

The report observes that substantial progress has marked the exploitation of the fisheries of Canada: "It cannot however, be denied that the protection and development of the great resources of the waters of the Dominion would be facilitated were the present divided authority and overlapping administration, federal and provincial, merged in one central system. The disadvantage to the fisheries arising, at present, from such causes, is intensified by the division of international interests and administrative policies along the border waters of Canada. There are no uniform concurrent regulations of an international character, and no injurious rivalry in the capture of fish, and a prevalent feeling of dissatisfaction at existing lax or unfair fishery regulations in the same waters tend to demoralize the industry and endanger its future prosperity. Were the fisheries of the Dominion under one authority, with one ample and effective staff of officials; still more, were a system of common fishery laws enforced on both sides of the international boundary the beneficial results to all concerned would be rapidly apparent." The report refers to the international commission which has been appointed to secure uniformity in protective, regulative and preservative measure in the waters which Canada shares with the neighboring republic.

A Shortage in Salmon.

In the relative values of the principal kinds of commercial fishes for 1907, the salmon leads with $5,014,446, a decrease of $842,314. Lobsters are a close second with $4,084,122, an increase of $661,195; cod, $3,619,818, an increase of $148,632; herring, $2,073,-756 a decrease of $388,222. The fur seal skins secured by the British Columbia pelagic sealers during 1907 amounted to $108,152, being a decrease of over $200,000.

Nova Scotia in the Lead.

Of all the provinces of the Dominion, Nova Scotia takes first place in the value of the salt fisheries. This is probably due to her peninsular shape and hence her extensive coast line.

For 50 years Nova Scotia has carried on a valuable export trade in fixh with the West Indies and South American countries. The United States, despite the heavy catches of the Gloucester and New England fleets, feel obliged to take about two-fifths of the production of the maritime provinces. Great Britain and France are taking an increased quantity every year, while other foreign countries such as Italy, Germany, Portugal, Norway and Sweden are becoming good customers.

How the Fish are Caught.

The bank fisheries are carried on in schooners of about 105 tons. They are fine able vessels, and the bulk of the codfish is caught by them. The fishermen set trawls by means of a dory some 15 feet long on the bottom, each manned by two men, and a vessel will have from six to ten of these dories for her complement. Each dory will set about 4,000 hooks, so that a schooner with ten dories on board will set about 40,-000 hooks. The inshore fishing is in smaller craft, from 60 to 75 feet over all and manned by from 10 to 20 men. Some of them employ the dory and trawl and the handline. Mackerel and herring are caught in nets moored not very far from shore.

It is said that some of the finest natural oyster beds are to be found on the coast of Nova Scotia. The claim is even set forth that the province has a greater area of oyster beds for cultivation than even the State of Maryland which in the year 1880 produced 10,569,102 bushels. The oyster fisheries of Prince Edward Island are also great. It is claimed that if the industry was given its proper attention there it would produce much larger returns in proportion to capital invested than could be obtained out of any agricultural pursuit.

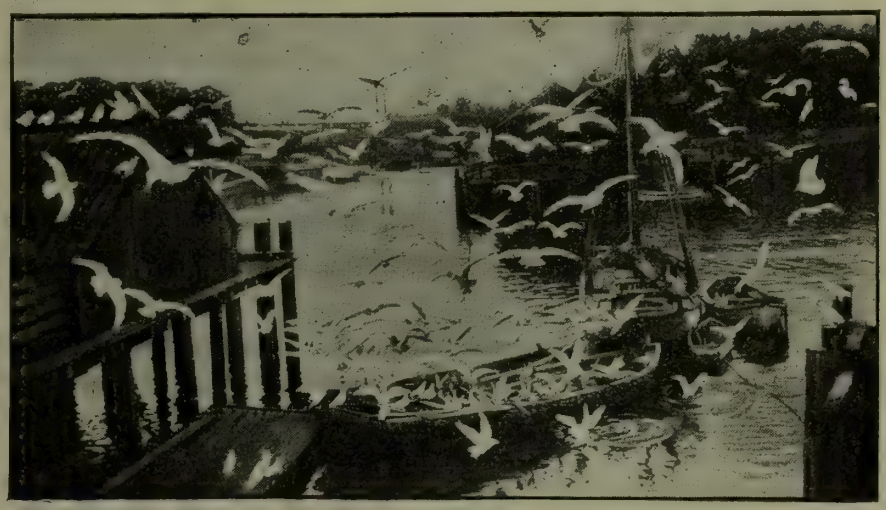
British Columbia on the Pacific Coast is a strong rival of Nova Scotia in the value of its fisheries. There, of course it is the river salmon that contributes chiefly to the grand total which two years ago was estimated at $8,000,000.

It, therefore, does not take a very lengthy perusal of the facts chronicled above to understand that Canada has a valuable asset in her fisheries which have a future before them too vast to forecast.



Development of Herring Industry in Nanaimo, B.C.

This Fish is Used for Bait in the Catching of the Halibut—Good Market in the Orient—Many Japanese Engaged in the Industry—Past Season a Splendid One—Gulls Feeding on the Herring Look Like Snow.

By R. Bruce Bennett.

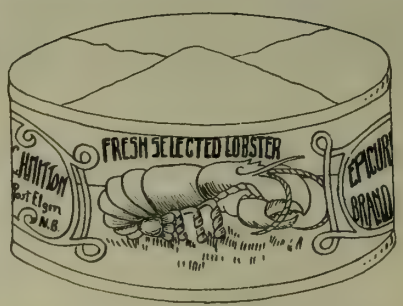
It is doubtful if any other fishing industry in Canadian waters has more unique features than the catching of herring at Nanaimo, B.C., particularly in the days immediately preceding the close of the season on March 1st. Then it is that the herring comes in in large quantities, and it is no unusual thing to see them pile up high on the shore, where thousands of gulls feed upon them. When the close season draws to a close, and the run continues, the last day or two is marked by the incessant operations of the fishermen who catch all they can, and after March 1st devote themselves to packing. While the fishing close season is specified to begin on March 1st, it may start before in the discretion of the inspector. This year it began on February 13th, as it had been noticed that the herring had begun to spawn.

The herring fishing industry has developed rapidly during the past four or five years. It meant very little a few years ago, but last year approximately 19,000,000 pounds were taken off Nanaimo, and it is expected when the figures for this year are to hand that this amount will be nearly doubled. That is a very large amount to be taken in one place, and, moreover, herring is not the only fish product marketed at Nanaimo. The Government report for the year 1907-08 shows the total output to have been 8,494,000 pounds of dried salmon; 42,000 pounds of smoked salmon; 224,000 pounds of fresh salmon; 133,400 pounds of fresh halibut; 233,000 pounds of cod; 48,400 gallons of fish oil; 145,000 pounds of mixed fish, many pounds of trout, oolichans, hair seals, crabs, clams, oysters, etc. The total value is placed at $237,000. During the year mentioned, which is the last for which there are official figures available, 341 men were engaged in the catch, with 112 boats and vessels. An idea of the value of the industry may be secured when it is remembered that apart from the supplies required for this number of men, there is the salt used, the lumber for packing boxes, the transportation and the general business that accrues.

Sea Gulls Feeding on Herring in the Nanaimo Harbor.

The Herring Fisheries at Nanaimo.

Herring As Bait.



The Nanaimo herring is largely used as bait in the halibut fisheries, while considerable quantities are shipped to the Orient, where dry salt herring is a great delicacy. The prices of to-day are not as good as during the war between Japan and Russia, when the business was very profitable, and when business connections were first made. Since such a good market exists in the Orient, the trade there will be developed, and the prospect is that even a larger quantity of herring will be marketed in future years.

Naturally, with the market on the other side of the Pacific, many Japanese are engaged, both in the catching and in the shipping. The season just closed was marked for the agitation carried on by the white fishermen against the encroachment of the Japs, who closely watch any opportunity to enter any industry wherein their labor is of value. The Japs engage mostly in the seine fishing, which is a close-meshed net, and all sizes of fish are taken, whereas the white fishermen use the gill which is not only of a larger mesh, but lies deeper in the water. The white fishermen held several mass meetings, and their affairs are well handled by an organization committee. They have interviewed the fishery officials and the local member of Parliament several times, and have secured concessions which will put them on a more even basis with the Orientals. As a result of the agitation carried on this season, it is likely that several important changes will be made in the regulations, so that the competition with the Japs will not be so much in their favor. This might mean that not as many fish will be taken next year, but the white men declare it will mean that better fish will be caught, and that it will tend for the perpetuation of the herring. The Japs now catch the fish and what is not good for shipping is used for guano, oil, etc., the sole idea being to make money in the present.

On the American side of the line, pursuant with the policy to make as much as possible out of natural resources, there is no close season for herring. As bait is required for the halibut fisheries, a concession has been granted to Vancouver companies that provide bait to fish during the prohibited months. It is not thought that this will seriously diminish the quantity.

Store-room Interior Showing 150 Tons of Herring Belonging to North Pacific Fish Co.

Piled Two Feet Deep.

The catches of herring in the season just closed are represented as the largest on record. Not that there have not been big runs in the past. Two or three years ago, schools came in with such a rush, the presumption being that they were chased by whales and other large sea fish that prey on the smaller ones, that the herring were piled two feet deep along the edge of Departure Bay, and the stench as they decayed tainted the air for miles around. This may seem somewhat of a "fish story" by those unacquainted with the fishing, but photographs are undisputable corroborants.

Gulls Look Like Snow.

It is no uncommon thing when the run is good, to see a boat so filled with herring, in tow of a launch, turn turtle on account of the heavy load. The first thing that a stranger in Nanaimo will notice during the fishing season is the thousands of gulls that are attracted there by the prospect of gorging on the fish. Looking from the Nanaimo waterfront across to Protection and Newcastle Islands, the harbor water is covered with so many sea gulls and the air so filled with them that the sight can be compared to nothing else but a snowstorm. This is absolutely literal. Oftimes during the season has it happened that boats laden with fish left alongside wharves have been robbed of half their cargoes by the voracious birds. Not infrequently has it occurred that the gulls will eat off one side of a cargo and the weight of the fish remaining on the other side has carried the boat over, upsetting all into the water. If the gulls are given the opportunity they will so gorge themselves that they are unable to fly. Many a fisherman who has left his boat for a while has had, on his return, to lift the gulls overboard and set them in the water as they have been unable to get away themselves. The declaration is made that one gull will eat a bucket of herring, though this is perhaps just a trifle too much. On the 11th of February, as the steamer attached to the fisheries office at Nanaimo was proceeding across Departure Bay she had to slow down to mere headway to allow several hundred gulls and ducks that had eaten so many fish that they were unable to take to wing, swim slowly out of the steamer's path. Although there are many fish-curing plants on the water's edge in the neighborhood of Nanaimo, there is no refuse left, thanks to the gulls.

Cod and Salmon Follow.

The industry has its picturesque aspects. It is a pretty sight to see a couple of hundred small fishing boats dotting the harbor, each with its quota of fishermen setting their nets or hauling them in heavily laden. It is a very busy time and the men are going day and night.

Following the herring come the cod and spring salmon, but the fishing for these does not hold the small army of Japs and white men who assemble for the herring. Still numbers remain. Each year is seeing greatly increased development, and in another season the results will be so large that it will be wondered how so important an industry was hardly taken notice of less than six years ago.

LEMONS ON THE INCREASE.

A Los Angeles despatch says that shipments of oranges and lemons from there on Saturday and Sunday, May 8 and 9, were: 294 carloads of oranges, and 40 carloads of lemons. The total to date was 23,545 carloads, of which 2,938 were lemons, as compared with last year's figures of 20,874 carloads, of which 2,354 were lemons.

There is a rumor afloat in Montreal, to the effect that the Lake of Woods Milling Co. have bought the Corn Exchange Building there for $50,000. The company will occupy the upper storey, and will rent the remainder of the building for offices. No confirmation of the deal could be obtained.

What Ontario Tobacco Culture Means to Grocers

Larger Population From Which To Draw Patronage—More Money Left In The Country—Variety Of Crops Assures Success Even If Some Are Failures—Changes In Recent Years Which Tend To Produce These Results.

By Victor Lauriston.

What does the tobacco industry in Kent and Essex mean for the retail grocers in Ontario?

Directly—in the sense of making a profit from the sale of the home grown weed—it means very little. The farmers grow it. The buyers purchase it. The manufacturers convert it into chewing tobacco, and in that shape it comes back to its first direct acquaintance with the retailer. Latterly, too, experiments are being made in the direction of manufacturing cigars from the Canadian weed. These, doubtless, the grocer will also handle, and on these, when manufactured, he will make a profit more or less slender. Furthermore, he may speculate in tobacco as a side line; may buy cheap from the grower with a view to selling to the manufacturer or buyer at a higher price when the market conditions take on a more favorable tone. This, however, is always a side line. It does not come within the scope of his business as a retailer.

Again, a good tobacco crop and good prices mean money in the farmer's pockets; and when the farmer is flush of cash, the grocer is among the first to benefit, just as, when the farmer has to sell his tobacco at three cents a pound, the grocer is among the first to be hit by the financial stringency which ensues. Further, in so far as the home grown weed displaces the foreign weed, it means the keeping of money in Canada which would, in the other event, be sent to the States or Cuba in payment for raw material.

This, practically, is one meaning of the tobacco industry in southwestern Ontario. It means something to the grocer, as to other merchants, but that something comes to him more or less indirectly. In proportion as the Government experiments now being conducted teach the farmers and growers to produce better and more salable tobacco and to cure the product more effectively, thereby enhancing the price, the grocer will also benefit.

A Tobacco Field Near Chatham, Ont., Owned by O'Brien Bros.

There is a Deeper Aspect.

There is, however, a deeper and more important aspect still to the tobacco question. Not as a source of immediate profit, so much as an indication of the modern trend in farming, is the extension of this comparatively new agricultural industry important.

In the beginning the one great crop of Canada is wheat. What the prairie provinces are to-day, Ontario once was. The time is still within the memory of men now living when wheat, oats, and cereals were practically the sole farm products of this province. But, gradually, coincident with the growth of cities and helped largely by Government experiment, assistance and legislation, new industries sprang up, to some extent displacing the old farming, which confined its attention to wheat, oats, barley, etc. In one section dairying came into vogue with its products of high grade cheese and butter; in another the orchard displaced the wheat field, and instead of grain the agriculturist harvested apples or peaches.

Then there is the fruit growing industry of Essex, famous for its early peaches; the tobacco industry, already referred to; the sugar beet industry, which, however, gives promise of far wider extension; the growing of broom corn, still largely in an experimental stage; and, especially in the vicinity of Leamington, the growing of garden truck. The peninsula, especially Essex, is fairly punctuated by canning factories, thanks to the exceptional facilities for providing raw materials. The recent location in Leamington of the Heinz Pickling Co. is an indication of the general recognition of this fact. Essex grows early vegetables for Detroit tables; Essex and Kent grow sugar beets for Michigan sugar factories. And, from time to time, the list of industries peculiar to this section is being added to. And all this benefits the merchant.

It has been a difficult matter to divorce the farmer from his wheat and oats. The introduction of sugar beets, one of our most profitable crops, was attended with difficulties which only those who fought the good fight can know and appreciate. Nevertheless, the undercurrent is steadily sweeping the farmer toward a day that will be indeed momentous for this section especially, and, in all likelihood, for all Canada. It is the day when a farmer, instead of making a bare living from 100 or 150 acres, will make a good living from 50, 25, 15, 10 or even 5 acres and be able to lay aside money for a rainy day.

Intensive vs. Extensive Farming

way—the acquiring of more land. To the 50 acres with which he started, he gradually added 50 more, 100, even 150, Often the burden proved one under which he staggered, and reeled, and sometimes fell. He became a drudge; his wife became a drudge; the hired man became a drudge; the children were valued chiefly for the assistance they could give. The farmer amassed wealth, and went on working, because he had learned the habit of drudgery and could not let go. Or—the proposition proved too big for him, and the land was sold under the hammer. The scarcity of hired help, caused largely by the exodus of the young men to the Northwest, proving the last straw, is giving a great though usually unnoticed impetus to the movement in the direction of the new farming.

Farmer of the Future.

The farmer of the past with 50 acres looked forward to the day when he could buy 50 acres more, and thereby double his profits.

The farmer of the future, when he wishes to double his profits, instead of buying 50 acres more of land, will aim to make his first 50 acres doubly productive.

One way is by scientific care of the land, rotation of crops, fertilizing, and all the means which have in Enrope been brought to so high a state of perfection. The other way is by raising crops which will give as large returns from one acre as the old-time cereals gave from three or four. When this has been fully accomplished the merchant is bound to be benefitted.

A Few Contrasts.

Just a few contrasts. A good average yield of wheat is 25 bushels to the acre. At 90c a bushel—a good average price—this would yield a gross return of $22.50 an acre. against which must be set the farmer's labor, interest on investment in land and implements, depreciation, and similar incidentals. Sugar beets in Kent yield on an average over 10 tons to the acre, with an average sugar per cent of 15, yielding a gross return of approximately $50. In fact, farmers testified before the Dominion Tariff Commission that their net returns, after allowing for labor, interest, etc., in many cases were $50 an acre.

The tobacco yield in Kent and Essex per acre, according to Government statistics, averages 1,200 pounds, which, even at the low average price of 7 cts. a pound, gives a gross return of $84 an acre. Last year the marshlands in the vicinity of Leamington grew onions yielding, it is stated. 400 bushels an acre. At 75c a bushel, quoted as a good average price, this would give a gross return of $300 an acre. Higher returns have been realized than this.

Yet this is not scientifically intensive farming; it is mere experiment, carried on more or less blindly. The Government is now encouraging the tobacco industry by the establishment of an experimental curing station at Harrow—and curing has been hitherto one of the great difficulties. Scientific curing stands to enhtnce the price. Similarly, Government assistance along the experimental line, and Government assistance to cold storage projects, would enhance the quality, and consequently the returns, from many products now grown; and Government experiment could and should lead to the introduction of new farm products from foreign lands, capable of being raised in Canada, but hitherto deemed unsuited only because no one has ever thought of experimenting with them.

What it Means to the Grocer.

What does all this mean to the grocer?

Directly, it may mean very little. Indirectly, it certainly means a great deal.

First, it means a larger population from which to draw patronage. Towns and cities cannot have a healthy growth unless there is a good, substantial, prosperous farming community surrounding them. Only a limited number of 100-acre and 200-acre farms can be had in the southwestern counties. The young men, as they grow up, can do one of two things: seek new homes in the Northwest, till the land there is itself exhausted, or drift into the cities to fill them with poverty and unemployment. A prosperous farmer on his own farm ten miles away is worth more to the city merchant than half a dozen unemployed men crowded with their families into a tenement on the next street, running accounts with him which they can never pay; men who will drift to the next city which offers an opening and leave their bills behind them. With intensive farming, four, eight or ten men will be able to make a living on the 100-acre farm that once sufficed for only one. With the growth of the country, the city will experience a sound, healthy growth, and the merchant will share in this prosperity.

Second, the growing of a wide variety of crops lessens the danger of hard times following a failure of the harvest. In 1902 Kent county was deluged with incessant rains. The cereal crops, once the sole reliance of most farmers, were almost completely ruined. The newly introduced sugar beets, yielding in many cases $50 an acre, saved the day for many a farmer. With a wide variety of products being raised, the danger of a complete failure of crops, and the consequent paralysis of business, becomes practically nil.

Third, the grocer will share not only in the money which the farmers receive for their products, but he will share also in the profits from the handling of new commodities, grown on the farm.

Fourth, it will mean more money in the country. Money now sent abroad for agricultural products will remain at home, will go from the consumer to the farmer, from the farmer to the merchant; or on the other hand, from the consumer to the merchant, and from the merchant to the farmer.

SYSTEM IN PORK PACKING FACTORY.

lard through the filter press for removing all impurities that may have been left in it.

Following the filter press the next stage is the "chilling roll." The lard is pumped through pipes from the tanks onto a pan from which it is picked up by a revolving cylinder filled with brine at zero temperature and carried around to the opposite side where it is cut off by a long knife, a whiter and better lard. The final process is agitation in a large tank in which the lard is moved about by paddles attached to a central rod. From there it is forced down through a pipe which passes it on to the lard room where it is drawn off into tubs, pails and tins ready for shipment.

The sausage and cook-room which is situated on the top floor is a clean, bright, sanitary apartment containing the chopping, grinding and mixing machines for sausage-manufacture and large iron kettles for cooking hams and other prepared meats. Everything there comes under the eye of the inspectors and must be kept according to the regulations.

Use of the Remnants.

As before stated, nothing tangible is wasted in a pork-packing establishment. The remnants are used for the manufacture of a valuable fertilizer which finds a ready sale particularly in the United States. The residue that remains after the lard and grease is run off in the refinery is called tankage and is subjected to hydraulic presses to extract all remaining grease. The tankage is then dried in the "dryer" into a powder which is bagged ready for shipment as a fertilizer. The blood is caught, cooked, pressed and converted into a fertilizer and put up in bags also.

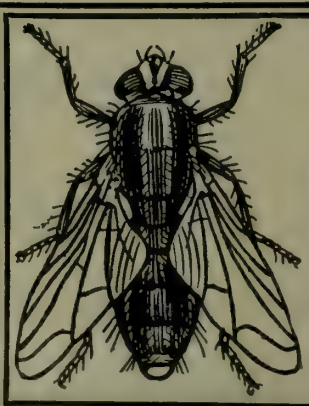
Cattle hoofs, horns, skin, bones, etc., are valuable for manufactures of various bone articles, and find a ready market in France.

The cellar of the slaughter-house section, which is separated from the main building from top to bottom by thick fire-proof walls, is used for the storage of hides.

The various compartments already referred to, together with the office and local and export shipping rooms, form the links in the chain of procedure from slaughter-house to refrigerator car.

Candling of Eggs.

In addition to the manufacture of hog products there are the beef and mutton products which are also prepared in the factory and in addition to this a large produce business is conducted. The egg candling was a very interesting feature of the trip. An expert at this work can candle as many as 1,500 to 2,000 dozen eggs in a day.



Proper fire equipment is a necessary adjunct to a pork-packing factory and during its career is at one time or another worth its weight in gold.

In addition to the care taken in the erection of fire-walls and fire-doors the whole factory is protected by an automatic sprinkler system supplemented by standpipes, hose, etc., and tanks containing fire buckets always filled with water are conveniently placed throughout the plant. These are available at all times to quench a fire before it has made any headway.

The whole establishment is one illustrating the benefits of systematic arrangement and the value of economy, and it certainly has the qualifications for providing a lasting lesson for all retail merchants who desire to conduct a business on a systematic and economical basis.

The establishment referred to in the foregoing paragraphs is that of Gunns, Limited, West Toronto, the cuts shown being from photographs of the various departments.—Editor.

A STEADY TRADE SYSTEM.

One Device That Brings Customers On First Three Days Of The Week—Strictly Cash Business.

If a grocer can evenly distribute his trade over the entire week it naturally follows that he can conduct his business at considerably less expense than if he has to keep a large staff to meet the demand on certain days and has not enough for his clerks to do at other times. An ideal store is one that is busy all the time, not rushed to the limit on certain days and then quiet the rest of the week. Many a grocer has tried to hit upon a plan so that trade would be more uniformly despensed, by offering bargains on certain days, pushing special lines at other times, etc.

Chas. M. Elmes, a grocer of College street, Toronto, has inaugurated a system of his own which works admirably and keeps him and his clerks on the move every day. It is known as the rebate system. With every cash purchase, no matter how small, Mr. Elmes gives a customer a check from the cash register, telling the amount of the sale. When a patron has $25 worth of these tickets or coupons they are good for one dollar's worth of anything in the store. This allows every customer about four per cent. interest on his or her purchase. Many grocers allow this rebate but here is where the advantage comes in in Mr. Elmes' case. These tickets are good only when presented on a Monday, Tuesday or Wednesday and will not be honored on the three last days of the week. As a consequence this brings purchasers and holders of the coupons in during the first part of the week and distributes trade equally.

"I have found in the grocery business," remarked Mr. Elmes, "that the largest portion of the week's sales are made during Thursday, Friday and Saturday as the majority of mechanics and working people are paid on these days. By the new rebate system and its conditions, which I started recently, a large number of persons do their shopping early in the week and we find that we are on the move all the while now. It makes every day a busy one with us."

Mr. Elmes also has a special sale of certain lines of goods every Saturday. He has dodgers printed and distributed in his district. These contain the announcement of several snaps which people are eager to take advantage of and save on their grocery bill. These prices embrace one kind of goods one Saturday and an altogether different line the next Saturday and, by this means, the interest is kept up. Mr. Elmes does a strictly cash business and calls his establishment the "Elmes Cash Grocery."

THE FRUIT OUTLOOK.

Shortage Expected in Pears—Good Prospects for Other Fruits.

White & Co., Toronto, have received the following information from the California Fruit Distributors regarding the prospects for the California fruit crops dated May 11th :

CHERRIES—The first carload of cherries was shipped from California on Saturday the 8th instant and was followed by the second car yesterday. Cherries are improving in quality and the last car was of good average quality. We expect a material improvement in this fruit from this time on. The movement of cherries will be about normal. The crop is not a heavy one in the earlier districts but it promises to be much better in the later districts. The weather has been warm and pleasant and should it continue the same we expect that the season will be as early on other fruits as last year.

APRICOTS—There has been no change in the condition of this fruit since our last letter. The fruit is going to be of very good size and will be clean and of good shipping quality.

PLUMS AND PRUNES—The plum crop will not be as heavy as last year but as the fruit promises to be of very good size we expect shipments will approximate perhaps 75 per cent. of those of last year. This will be true of nearly all kinds. While there will be a scarcity of some special varieties the general average of the most desirable shipping sorts will closely approximate the figures given. Some small shipments of plums will probably be made during the next two weeks.

PEACHES—There is a very good crop of all shipping varieties from the earliest up to Salways, which variety will probably be considerably shorter than last year. It is expected that peaches will begin moving out in a limited way in about ten days. The condition of the crop is very good and we expect to ship as fine fruit of this variety as has ever gone out of the State. There will be no difficulty in supplying the demands of all markets for this popular fruit.

BARTLETT PEARS—Of this fruit the crop will not be nearly as large as last season when it was unusually heavy. The fruit will be large and clean, there being no developmeot of fungus or scab up to the present time.

GRAPES—The grape crop continues in the same promising condition as at our last writing. The vines are now beginning to bloom and there is every promise of an abundant crop. This is true of all shipping varieties. In the Vacaville section the crop will undoubtedly be considerably larger than last year and we expect that this condition will be duplicated in the later districts.

Mixed carloads of peaches, plums and apricots will go forward toward the last of the month and beginning with the first of June we expect to have a free movement of these varieties ample to supply the market as in previous years.

The season is so far advanced that we do not believe it possible that any material change will be made in the outlook. We, therefore, feel that we are justified in looking forward to a very prosperous season which should prove profitable alike to the California grower and the eastern dealer as well.

THE LAW OF OBEDIENCE.

By Elbert Hubbard.

The first item in the common-sense creed is Obedience.

Do your work with a whole heart! Revolt is sometimes necessary, but the man who mixes revolt and obedience is doomed to disappoint himself and everybody with whom he has any dealing. To flavor work with protest is to fail absolutely.

When you revolt, why, revolt—climb, get out, hike, defy—tell everybody and everything to go to limbo! That disposes of the case. You thus separate yourself entirely from those you have served—no one misunderstands you—you have declared yourself.

But to pretend to obey, and yet carry in your heart the spirit of revolt, is to do half-hearted and slip-shod work.

If revolt and obedience are equal your engine will stop on the centre and you benefit nobody, not even yourself.

The spirit of Obedience is the controlling impulse of the receptive mind and the hospitable heart.

There are boats that mind the helm and boats that don't. Those that don't, get holes knocked in them sooner or later.

To keep off the rocks obey the rudder.

Obedience is not to lavishly obey this man, nor that, but it is that cheerful mental condition which responds to the necessity of the case, and does the thing.

Obedience to the institution—loyalty! The man who has not learned to obey has trouble ahead of him every step of the way—the world has it in for him because he has it in for the world.

The man who does not know how to receive orders is not fit to issue them. but he who knows how to execute orders is preparing the way to give them, and better still—to have them obeyed.

Jos. Lebarge and Tyne Bros., general merchants, Chelmsford, Ont., were burnt out recently.

Saving the Grocers' Perishable Goods

What Refrigeration is and What the Refrigerator Has Done For Merchants—Its Development From the Hole in the Cellar to a Handsome and Modern Piece of Store Furniture—The Effect of Refrigeration and Cold Storage on the Exports of Canada.

What is refrigeration?

Refrigeration is the operation of cooling substances by artificial means. Natural ice forms the greatest source of refrigeration and with the present mode of life existing ice and the refrigerator have become domestic and commercial necessities.

Yet the extended use of ice in various fields is of comparatively recent origin. Nero had constructed ice houses in ancient Rome, and ice houses for storing the natural ice have been used for ages past, but the refrigerator, and particularly as it now is presented from the factory, is a construction of modern minds. Refrigerator cars that speed across the continent bearing foodstuffs for man from foreign climes are even of more recent origin. But the work is ever progressing along the lines of art and science and evolution brings about the inevitable changes.

Not many years ago the refrigerator was unknown to the grocer. To-day it is indispensable to the merchant who professes to deal in perishable goods. The evolution of the modern refrigerator is intresting. We often read of the merchants of olden times keeping goods in a hole dug in the darkest corner of the cellar. Wines and liquors, butter and meats, were stored there to protect them from the destroying influence of the summer heat.

The Old-Fashioned Bucket.

In later years came the pail or tub of water replenished every little while, and this evolved itself into the ice water. Next we saw the box roughly molded by the inexperienced hand of the grocery man, which held a block of ice an hour or two. It was, however, the foundation for the present handsomely-finished modern refrigerator, with its up-to-date apparatus employed to reduce the temperature of perishable goods.

Even at the present time the mistake is made by grocers in having their carpenter fashion them a refrigerator. When they decide to secure one, it is always desirable to get what they consider the best, taking, of course, the cost into consideration.

A Lesson Learned.

"I made the mistake in having my local carpenter build me a refrigerator, thinking that by doing so I was saving money, but soon found my mistake," were the remarks made the other day by a grocer. He was disgusted with the sweating of the sides and the tainting of the goods he wanted to preserve.

Refrigerators are now so constructed that they form handsome pieces of furniture in the stores. While it might be better to have them hidden from view—which is not always possible—they do not detract from the appearance of the store interior. They have come to stay in the grocery store and now are used by the majority of up-to-date members of the trade, who aim at supplying the various wants of their customers in the best possible manner.

The refrigerator is to the grocer what the secluded ivy-covered milk-house is to the farmer's wife. The latter presents to her the best means of keeping tasty and fresh the fruit, cream and pastry of which the farmer is so fond during the warm weather.

Brought Home to the Butchers.

Frequently butchers console themselves with the idea that a home-made ice box or refrigerator saves them money, but this apparent saving is really a loss. In a refrigerator that is not properly and scientifically constructed the meat soon becomes clammy and spoiled and there is a direct loss. There is an even greater loss from the fact that meat so kept does not please the customers, and they naturally go elsewhere for their supplies.

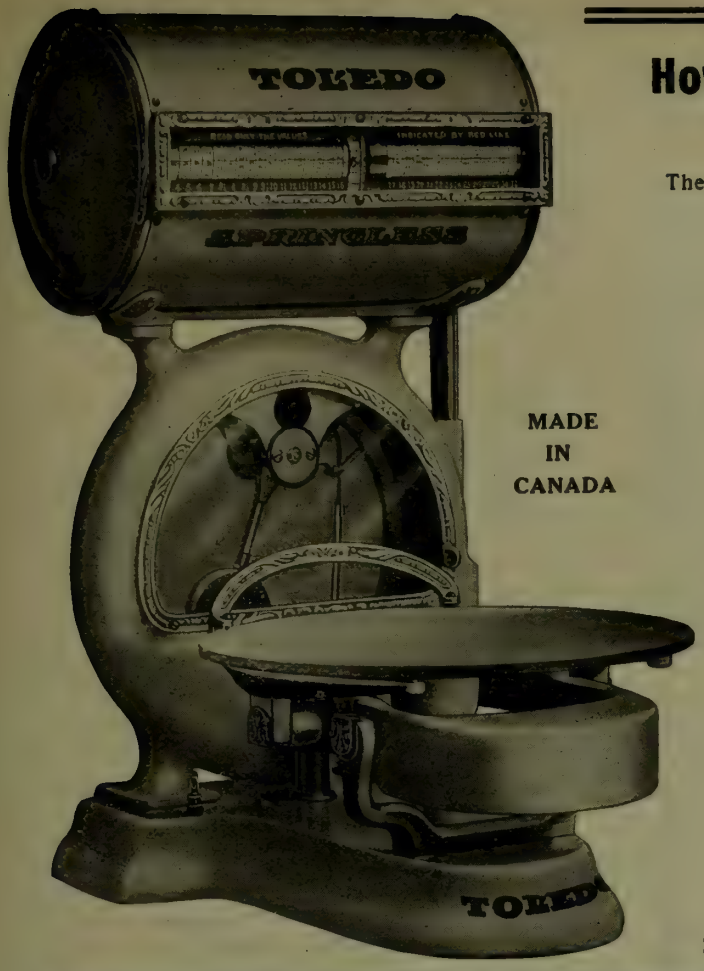
The importance of the store refrigerator to the merchant is just as great as is the cold storage and car refrigerating systems to the exporters of perishable goods from any country. The introduction of the latter has been an untold benefit to trade.

Becomes a World Problem.

The transportation and preservation of perishable produce has become one of the most serious problems which can engage the attention of engineers and others interested in the efficacious and rapid dispatch of foodstuffs from one part of the world to the other. Statistics and statements from high authorities go to show that the transport and preservation of perishable produce is an enormous and growing business, and likely in the future to be one of the most important in the world.

In the annual report of the British Board of Agriculture the following reference to the dead meat imports into the United Kingdom is made: "To the development of this trade the resources of science and the ingenuity of inventors have greatly contributed, and the capital employed in it is now very great. It appears highly probable that the dead meat trade will continue in the future to increase year by year with the ever-growing requirements of our population, while the oversea transit of live animals may be expected to diminish and eventually to disappear as a relic of an age of imperfect economic development."

In spite of the careful fostering of home industries intended to provide the food supply of the United Kingdom, the imports of provisions are regularly increasing. Instead of drawing on near-by countries, the English people are looking more and more to their colonies in distant parts of the world for these supplies. This is made possible by the present methods of refrigeration.



Benefit to British Colonies.

There are 358 ships engaged in the trade of the United Kingdom that are fitted in part or throughout with a total refrigerating capacity of 36,266,000 cubic feet. Of this number, 71 ships, with a capacity of 3,341,000 cubic feet for perishable produce, bring supplies from the United States; from Australia and New Zealand, 92 ships, with 15,514,000 cubic feet cold storage capacity, bring chiefly beef, mutton, and butter; from Canada come 47 ships, with 1,829,000 cubic feet capacity, chiefly with meats and dairy products. The ships coming from South America carrying refrigerated cargoes have a capacity for this class of goods of 7,611,000 cubic feet.

The port of London is at the head of the list in the number of vessels and their carrying capacity. and takes most of the Australian and New Zealand cargoes, while Liverpool is second and takes most of the North and South American cargoes. However, the shorter trips of the Liverpool steamers bring the yearly sailing and capacity as high or higher than those of London.

Cold Storage in Seaports.

As the large quantities of foodstuffs arriving in England cannot be distributed direct to consumers. cold storage warehouses have increased at the various seaports, in large centres of population

How a Well-Known Encyclopedia Roasts Spring Scales

The New International Encyclopedia, Vol. 16, Page 109, says:

"THE FORCE OF THE SPRING VARIES WITH THE TEMPERATURE, WHICH ALTERS THE LENGTH AND ELASTICITY OF THE WIRE AND RENDERS IMPOSSIBLE PRECISE MEASUREMENTS."

Thus one of the world's greatest authorities has investigated and found unreliable all spring scales. Can you afford, therefore, to use a spring scale which is generally known as an unreliable weighing machine, a scale so unreliable as to make the weighing of your goods (your money) guesswork?

The Toledo "Springless" Automatic Scale

is always exact and accurate. It has no springs. The Toledo is the only Automatic Springless Cylinder Computing Scale in the world, and the most durable and reliable weighing machine.

NOTE:—We invite comparative demonstrations, in your store with any other scale on the market.

ANOTHER GUARANTEE OF FAIR DEALING and at the principal distributing markets.

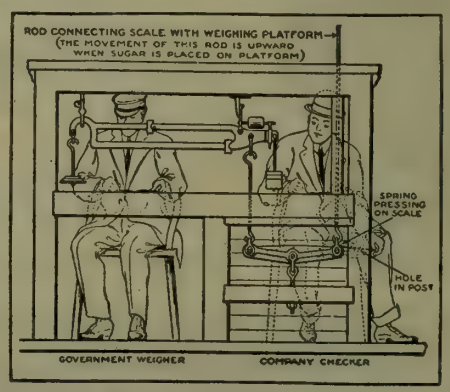
A few fact and figures analagous to and resulting from refrigeration will not here be amiss.

The value of butter imports into the United Kingdom increased from $38,920,417 in 1887 to $108,951,120 in 1907. In meats the value increased from $188,160,046 in 1903 to $202,651,818 in 1907. The average annual value of imported fruits, apples, apricots, peaches, oranges, pears, plums, lemons and bananas for five years into Great Britain from 1900 to 1904, was $38,086,016, while for the imports of 1907 the value was $45,257,228,

There is and has been for the past few years a great activity displayed by the British colonies to encourage the export of dairy products. In Canada, factories are encouraged and assisted to instal small refrigerating plants so that the manufacture of the article may be carried out under the best conditions, and such produce can be delivered to the railways in a cool and firm condition. The railroad companies are paid a small subsidy under an agreement to provide an adequate number of properly iced cars, and to run these on scheduled time.

Used on the Steamboats.

Steamship companies are encouraged to provide cold storage and air-cooled space, and inspectors are employed to see that the produce is properly attended to, and that the transit arrangements receive the necessary attention. It is contended that by virtue of this complete cold storage chain and the elimination of all factors likely to injure the quality of the marketed article that the Canadians have secured a large portion of the dairy produce trade. The New Zealand Government, too, has taken charge of the dairy produce exports and is insisting on everything from the cattle to the ship being in proper order. While the Australian States are not so far advanced. they are moving on the same lines.



Thus it will be seen that the principle of the refrigerator is being worked out to wonderful success, not only in the retail store, but in the store house and in the rapidly-moving ocean steamships and railway cars.

DEFRAUDING THE GOVERNMENT.

Method By Which American Sugar Refining Co. Made Millions By Unlawful Practices.

A few weeks ago the case against the American Sugar Refining Company of New York, ended with the huge fine of $2,269,897 imposed upon that company. This amount goes to the Government authorities in lieu of the fraudulent practices in weighing by which the sugar company made large profits. The state is likely to prosecute the individuals who have been responsible for the perpetration of these frauds.

Writing in the Outlook of May 1st, Harold Howland explains how these remarkable frauds were achieved. He says in part: "As the sugar comes over the side of the ship it is weighed by the customs officers, and to that end there are seventeen big Fairbanks scales placed at intervals along the docks. Each scale has a platform eight or ten feet square, its surface flush with the surface of the dock, like the scales that you have seen so often outside a coal-dealer's or a feed-store. The brass bar of the scale, where the weight is read, is within a little house fronted with glass, so that the weigher can see the platform and what is on it as he adjusts the poise.

Drawing Showing How The U.S. Government Was Defrauded Out Of Millions By Incorrect Sugar Weights.

These scales, it should be remembered, belong to the company, and its representatives keep the keys of the scale-houses, and are supposed to lock them every night.

"A few weeks ago I stood upon the platform of one of these scales, looking through the glass side of the scale-house. Behind the registering-bar, facing me, two men sat, each with a small blank-book on the ledge before him. The man on my left pushed the poise along the beam till it balanced, and read off my weight, '170 pounds.' Both men recorded the figures in their books. Then the other man leaned over to the left and dropt his hand into the dark corner under the ledge. Once more the weigher adjusted the poise—but now the beam balanced at 162 pounds. In two minutes I had, without knowing how, been robbed of 8 pounds of weight. . . .

"Stepping from the scale platform, I went around into the scale house. Taking the seat in the corner, I ran my hand down where my companion's had been a moment before. As I sat where a company checker had sat every day for years, just by my left knee was a thick post supporting one end of the shelf beneath the scale bar. Under the shelf was a system of levers and joints which formed the connection between the registering-beam and the rod leading to the platform outside. Between the post and the end wall of the scale-house was a space perhaps a foot wide, as dark as a pocket. Running my hand down the post, I touched a thin strip of iron protruding from the post, its outer end bent into a ring. The strip worked loosely in a hole in the post, and as I pushed it through, its inner end ran over a joint of the scale mechanism. It was easy to see how the spring of the steel would exert force upon the levers and make the registering-beam drop.

"'We've found,' said my companion, 'that a pressure of one ounce just at that point is good for a loss of forty-eight ounces on the platform outside. You see now where those eight pounds went that you lost so miraculously,'."

This little masquerade, in which Mr. Howland represented a truck bearing bags of raw sugar, tells the whole story. The man on his left impersonated the Government weigher, while the man on his. right represented the company's checker. The other sixteen scales on the docks were similarly equipped with pierced posts, the holes in some cases being more worn than in others."

A Great Educational Force in Business

BY A. B. LEVER

EDUCATION is necessary before anything can be accomplished. The only difference is one of degree.

Even the hog has to undergo a little education before he can accomplish what nature has designed him to accomplish.

Most of this he gets by example, but it is education, just the same.

Education is necessary in business, and the most important kind is not that which is obtained at universities.

A man might attend a university till doomsday and still not be a master of business affairs.

Factories may make, or a certain warehouse may have in stock, the best kind of goods in its class in the world and yet the business men to whom they desire to sell may be in total ignorance of the fact.

If they have travelers some educational work can be done through them, but, necessary as travelers are, they can only do the work of a traveler.

The greatest educational force in business is publicity, and the greatest factor which manufacturers or wholesalers can employ in giving publicity to their wares or to the character of their house is the trade newspaper.

A good advertisement in a good trade newspaper touches the right spot because the trade newspaper goes direct to the spot the wholesaler or manufacturer desires to touch, and where it touches it educates.

Every reader of the specialized trade newspaper is a possible buyer. Consequently the advertisements which it carries educate the reader and thus prepare his mind for the advent of the traveler with his samples.

The trade newspaper sows the seed and the traveler comes along and reaps the crop.

It is always made up to the same high standard, maintained for forty years and it is always just right. That's why we have the thousands upon thousands of grocers pushing it everywhere.

Grocers don't wish to run the risk of losing a good customer by passing out an inferior stove polish, which is wrong more often than it is right.

The Standard of Purity

Laboratory of Provincial Government Analyst.

Montreal, 22nd February, 1909.

I Hereby Certify that I have drawn by my own hand ten samples of The St. Lawrence Sugar Refining Co.'s EXTRA STANDARD GRANULATED SUGAR, indiscriminately taken from four lots of about 150 barrels each, and six lots of about 450 bags each. I have analyzed same and find them uniformly to contain 99-99/100 to 100 per cent. of pure cane sugar, with no impurities whatever.

The Packers of the "Thistle" Brand of Fish aim only to produce the best there is in Canned Fish.

Canned Where Caught

The "Thistle" Brand of Canned Haddies, Kippered Herring, and Herring and Tomato Sauce, are canned right where they are caught at the water side. How better could you preserve the natural richness and delicate flavor of the fish? IMPOSSIBLE?

The Silent Partner

In most concerns the silent partner takes no active part in the conduct of the business, simply allows his money to be used and at the end of the year takes part of the profits.

The McCaskey Account Register System is the Best Silent Partner any merchant can get. It's a Wonder Worker.

It takes care of the accounts.
It compels your clerks to be CAREFUL and ACCURATE.
It stops all forgetting to charge goods.
It eliminates disputes.
It pleases your customers.
It draws NEW TRADE to your store.
It brings in the CASH faster than any two-legged collector.
It gives you complete information about your business.
It gives you complete proof of loss in case of fire.
It is always ready for work, is never late.
It is never cross or tired.
It doesn't draw any salary or take any share of the profits.

Mr. Merchant, don't you want to get rid of some of the hard work you have been doing. If so, Get a McCaskey.

The history of "SALADA," the figures of our increases published in this paper from time to time, contain sufficient tangible proof of our claims. "SALADA" has stood the test of time, the test of the severest competition and, above all, the SALES TEST, tests which have won for thousands of grocers a large and profitable tea trade, to the detriment of the tea peddler, a fact which says more for "SALADA" quality than anything we can say.

Manufacturers' Contract Selling Plan Reinforced

The Declaration That Wholesale Distributors Are Required to Take to Provide Against Secret Rebates and Other Similar Considerations—This Must be Taken Under Oath—What a Refusal and Violation Means—Something for the Retail Trade to Study.

Arising out of the same conditions as called for the passing of The Secret Commissions Act which was explained in The Grocer of May 14th, the agreement between the manufacturer who sells his products at a stipulated price and the wholesale distributor, has been supplemented by a clause requiring a declaration under oath that the prices so stipulated should be adhered to. This declaration just now is causing considerable interest among retailers as well as manufacturers and wholesalers.

The agreement has always prohibited any salesman either principal, traveler or agent from selling the goods at less than the manufacturers' fixed prices. It has also provided against the giving of rebates, cash or any other consideration whatever to assist in the sale of goods.

But these conditions have not been rigidly adhered to and hence it became necessary to do something to secure their proper observance. This declaration has therefore been introduced into the agreement under the Contract Selling Plan with the hope that the demoralization of the market should be restored to healthy conditions.

The following is a model agreement containing the supplemented clause referring to the declaration.

Wholesaler's Agreement.

1. In consideration of ..... (manufacturer) placing me (or us) on his Jobbers' List for the purchase of his products I (or we) agree with the said manufacturer not to sell or allow any one in my (or our) employ to sell, directly or indirectly, to any one, either wholesaler or retailer, by agent or otherwise, any of the products of the said manufacturer, whether now in stock and owned by me (or us) or to be acquired after the date hereof, wheresoever or howsoever obtained, at less than the stipulated prices and terms in force, from time to time. This clause also means that I (or we) shall not have given cash or credit notes, discounts, rebates or other benefits upon sales, made or to be made of such products or shall not have given or sold at a reduction or bought at an advance other goods in consideration of sales of such products which would in any way violate or reduce their selling prices.

2. The price list now in force, it is understood and agreed that the said Company may, from time to time, during the continuation of this Agreement, change or establish other price lists by mailing them or otherwise notifying them to me (or us) and I (or we) further there agree not to sell or otherwise supply the said products of the said manufacturer to any person or company who have violated their agreement with the said manufacturer, after having received notice from the said manufacturer that said violation has taken place.

3. I (or we) further agree that when called on I (or we) shall give said manufacturer a declaration sworn to by any member of the firm or by any one in my (or our) employ designated by the manufacturer, covering the details of any sale of goods, in such terms as may be required by them where an actual or supposed violation has occurred.

4. Failure to comply with this condition will be considered a breach of this agreement.

5. I (or we) further agree that the manufacturer may withhold any sum or as a bonus rebate held subject to the observance of this agreement.

(Distributor).

Manufacturers' Agreement.

1. In consideration of the signing of above agreement, I (or we) agree with the signer thereof that all sales made by me (or us) to the retail trade will be at the same price and on the same terms as set forth in above contract, or in accordance with any subsequent price list.

2. I (or we) also agree that I (or we) will invoice goods to said signer at such prices and terms as may be arranged between us and if satisfied that the terms of said agreement have been faithfully observed and performed, I (or we) may grant to the said signer a special rebate as a bonus in accordance with the said arrangement.

(Manufacturer).

Dated :

The Real Meaning.

The principal point in the the above agreement is as already intimated the making of the declaration referred to in section 3 above. The party called upon to give the declration is placed in a serious position. If he fails to make the declaration it will be taken for granted that he has violated the arrangement and in such a case the wholesale distributor whose agent he is will be refused the goods of the manufacturer until he has made ample reparation to the manufactuter and to his fellow distributors.

If he makes the declaration it will be taken for granted that he has not violated the agreement but should he later be found guilty he and the party privy to the transaction with him will be liable to punishment under the criminal code. and subject to a fine of $2,500 or two years imprisonment, or both according to the recent act to prevent secret commissions, besides being liable to be prosecuted for perjury.

A violation of the agreement therefore means either a refusal to give the declaration and consequently the inability to get the manufacturer's goods, or a false declaration and the serious consequences that follow under the criminal code both as to secret commissions and perjury. These positions, it would appear, will scarcely be sought by any business man on either his own account or the account of his employer, and will doubtless tend to elevate the business morals of the grocery trade.

THE HUNDRED-POINT MAN.

A hundred-point man is one who is true to every trust; who keeps his word; who is loyal to the firm that employs him; who does not listen for insults nor look for slights; who carries a civil tongue in his head; who is polite to strangers without being fresh; who is considerate towards servants; who is moderate in his eating and drinking; who is willing to learn; who is cautious and yet courageous.

Hundred-point men may vary much in ability, but this is always true—they are safe men to deal with, whether drivers of drays, motormen, clerks, cashiers, engineers or presidents of railroads.

The hundred-point man may not look just like all other men, or dress like them, or talk like them, but what he does is true to his own nature. He is himself.

He is more interested in doing his work than in what people will say about it. He does not consider the gallery. He acts his thought and thinks little of the act.

The hundred-point man looks after just one individual, and that is the man under his own hat; he is one who does not spend money until he earns it; who pays his way; who knows that nothing is ever given for nothing; who keeps his digits off other people's property. When he does not know what to say, why, he says nothing, and when he does not know what to do, does not do it.—Philistine.

Grocers' Buying Principles Score Success

St. Catharines Young Men Have Built up a Fine Business in Eight Years—They Specialize in Best Lines to be Had—Carry Confectionery and Are Consistent Window-Dressers.

Store equipment is one of the big questions to the present-day grocer. Most merchants have come to realize that in order to secure the best trade in a village, town or city they must look after the exterior and interior of their stores.

McLean Bros., St. Catharines, Ont., stand in the front rank as high-class and up-to-the-minute grocers so far as a bright clean and well-equipped store is concerned. This assertion is borne out by the accompanying cut, which shows a handsome interior to their store.

The show case for displaying confectionery on the left lends an attraction which easily justifies its instalation.

The store of McLean Bros. opened its doors to the public about eight years ago under the present management of George and John McLean.

Beginning in a small way, each succeeding year has testified to the ability of these young men as practical business men by showing a handsome increase in business. The firm to-day enjoys one of the largest and best trades in St. Catharines.

How They Succeeded.

The secret of the success of these enterprising men lies in the fact that they are close buyers, quality always considered and by adhering to the rule of specializing the best lines to be had.

A walk through the cellar, storehouse and driving sheds easily bears out the first impression one gets when entering the front door of the store, cleanliness and order being in evidence throughout.

The McLean Bros. pay a great deal of attention to window displays and only recently they had a biscuit window which was considered a sensation.

WHOLESALERS' CONVENTION.

Meeting of Wholesale Grocers' Exchange to be Held in Victoria June 24.

Announcement was made this week by President L. E. Geoffrion, that the annual convention of the Canada Wholesale Grocers' Exchange would take place in Victoria, June 24, and on as many succeeding days as were found necessary.

Undoubtedly the decision of the president to hold the convention in Victoria will be favorably received by the majority of the members of the Exchange, as it will give many who have not yet been through it, an opportunity of seeing the west at its best.

Having the convention in Winnipeg according to some of the members, would have been a good idea in many respects, but the holding of it in Victoria is just as satisfactory in every way and is better for several reasons.

Winnipeg, and the west to that point, is familiar to most of the wholesalers, but further than that city few of the members of the Exchange have had an opportunity of journeying in a leisurely and observant fashion. This occasion will permit of them becoming familiar with this far west and its people in excellent fashion.

Every member of the Exchange who can possibly get away should be in attendance.

Suitable transportation arrangements will be made to comfortably convey the party to and from Victoria, while the programme for the convention will be mapped out in due course.

Members of the Exchange will be able to secure all necessary information from the president, L. E. Geoffrion, or the secretary, J. Stanley Cook, both in Montreal.

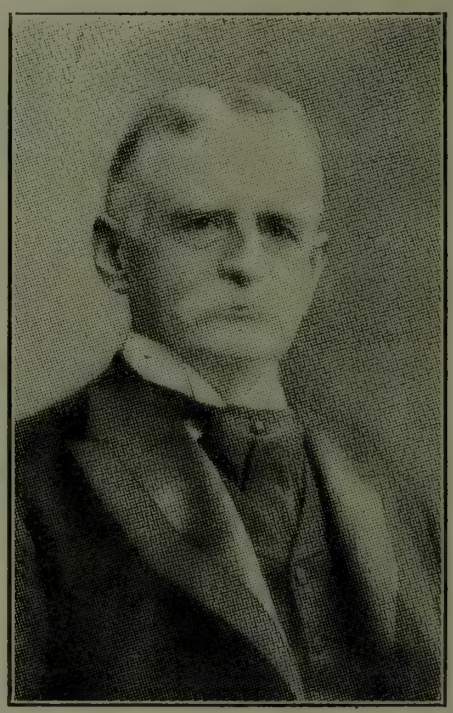
From Grocery Clerk to an Eminent Financier

Death of Henry H. Rogers Brings to the Limelight a Sensationally Successful Career—Evolution from Newsboy, Driver of a Delivery Wagon and Clerk to Vice-President of the Standard Oil Company.

New York, May 25.—After having served youthful apprenticeship successively as a newsboy, driver of a delivery wagon, clerk in a grocery store and baggagemaster on a small railway, Henry H. Rogers, whose career was ended by death from apoplexy last Wednesday, became one of the mighty powers in the world of finance in the United States, and one of the most sensationally successful accumulators of millions of a generation in which colossal fortunes have been common. He had become elevated to the position of vice-president and one of the directors in the Standard Oil Company, and therefore leaves behind the knowledge of a successful career essentially self-made and one that stands among the few as an object lesson to the young men of the day aspiring to heights in the financial arena.

To say that he was a many-sided man would be a trite and inadequate summary of a personality that was fairly kaleidoscopic in its versatility and in the varied and contradictory phrases it often presented.

To the world at large he was known as one of the two most conspicuous figures in that vast corporate aggregation of wealth, power and enterprise designated in the street as "the Standard Oil clique." But to those whose knowledge of the man was something more than superficial, Mr. Rogers might have appeared according to the viewpoint of the observer either the generous philantropist or the sordid money-getter; either the genial comrade entertaining lavishly on his yacht or the crabbed, sarcastic misanthrope, keen and cold, as sharpened steel in a business transaction, unyielding and heartless as flint when prosecuting a pet enterprise.



Behind His Father's Counter.

Henry Huddleston Rogers was born in Fairhaven, Mass., the little New England town which he has since beautified with the lavish bestowal of his philanthropies, on January 29, 1840. His ancestors were of the sturdy old New England stock, running back to the founding of the Plymouth colony and of his four great grandfathers three had fought in the revolutionary war. Young Rogers was graduated from the Fairhaven school in 1856 and that was the end of his formal education. It is recalled how he once complained to a teacher how uncomfortable were his long legs under the cramped school benches.

"If ever I get rich," he added, "I'm going to build a school house in which the boys can be comfortable."

Mr. Rogers redeemed that promise years afterward, when Fairhaven saw a great brick structure, one of his many beneficences to the village, rise in place of the little wooden one from which he had gone out as a member of its first graduating class.

The boy was versatile even then. After leaving school he tried his hand at selling newspapers, driving a grocery wagon, working as a clerk in his father's grocery store, and then he absorbed his first experience in the capacity of a railroad man while acting as brakeman and baggage master in the little branch railroad that ran through Fairhaven. That job paid him $1.16 a day for the twenty-one days he held it. The payroll of the road, showing his receipt for the money, is now kept as one of the town souvenirs, as are many grocery bills bearing his signature.

Did the Family Washing.

At twenty-one years, hearing of the marvels of the growing petroleum business of the Pennsylvania oil fields, he started westward to try his fortunes, but before he left he married Miss Abbie T. Gilford, of Fairhaven, and thereafter she accompanied him wherever he went until her death in 1895. Commenting on the struggles of those early days of comparative poverty in the oil fields, Mr. Rogers used to tell gleefully in later years how he used to do the family washing beside a brook that flowed near their cabin. But it happened that Bartholomew Taber, an old Frairhaven friend and a paint shop proprietor, was a customer of Charles Pratt, of the Pratt oil works, in Brooklyn. When Mr. Pratt told Taber he wanted to take into his employ a keen New England boy the paint dealer recommended young Rogers, who was summoned from Pennsylvania, having learned in the meantime the producing side of the petroleum trade.

Rogers soon became an important factor in the growing business of Charles Pratt & Co., and he prospered from that time forward. The Pratt firm bought for $500,000 from Benjamin Greenough an invention for refining crude petroleum. A suit instituted in 1904 by the widow of Greenough to recover $50,000,000 in back royalties claimed to be due indicated that Pratt and Rogers had owed much of their success to this purchase.

Upon the organization of the Standard Oil Company, in 1874, both Mr. Rogers and Mr. Pratt allied their interests with that combination, which had been effected with no blowing of trumpets, but by the quiet association of the leading refineries of the country. Henry H. Rogers by that time had mastered the refining process so completely that he was naturally chosen as the chairman of the manufacturing committee of the new corporation. In a way, it has been said, he was more responsible for the success of the merger than were the Rockefellers themselves, because he had the genius of organization, as well as consummate knowledge of the intricacies of the business and the imagination to perceive clearly its great future. Early in the company's career he became a trustee and later its vice-president. Since the retirement of John D. Rockefeller from active control a decade ago Mr. Rogers had been the master spirit of the tremendous organization until failing health compelled him gradually to lighten his business burdens.

How He Succeeded.

He had many other interests than oil. Mr. Rogers was a heavy investor in gas companies and copper mines, and it was in connection with the former that he became involved in the struggle with J. Edward Addicks, which was probably the most spectacular fight of his often troubled career.

One of his heaviest and most costly personal undertakings was the financing and building of the Virginia Tidewater Railroad, completed in March of this year. Mr. Rogers had hoped to build the entire road out of his personal fortune, but this proved impracticable after reverses sustained in the panic of 1907, soon after which he suffered his first apoplectic stroke. The road cost practically $40,000,000, of which he furnished one-half. The remainder was secured by the sale of notes in May, 1908. Since that date the only financing the road has done has been to sell $3,750,000 in equipment trust notes.

"How did you manage to succeed so well in the world?" Mr. Rogers was once asked.

"By working as hard as anybody I ever saw or read about" was his reply.

A Many-sided Man.

As has been well said, "Rogers could be genial, approachable, talkative anad altogether attractive; then sarcastic, bitter and jeering; cordial in one breath, chilly as ice in the next; kindly and almost lovable, then cold and harsh. His manner could change as fast as the clock could tick. His voice could travel through the scale of vindictiveness, cruelty, indifference, politeness, affability and friendliness in a single sentence."

By many of his business associates he was ever regarded as hard and distant, but in the character of the pater familias and the doting grandfather in the privacy of his home he was adored. It was the same man of adamant who loved Mark Twain with a rare warmth of manly friendship, mended the humorist's shattered fortunes, helped him back to prosperity in the days of Mr. Clemen's pecuniary disasters, and in these latter days cherished for the writer an affection which both men, seemingly so unlike, regarded as one of the most delightful associations of their lives.

APPROVES OF CANNED GOODS.

Dr. Wiley Would Restore Them to the Confidence of the Consumers.

Dr. Wiley, chief of the bureau of chemistry at Washington, D.C. has given canned goods a clean bill of health in a letter to W. A. Frost, of W. A. Frost & Co., Chicago. The letter, which appears in The Canner and Dried Fruit Packer, is as follows, and should be interesting reading to retailers anxious to increase their sale of canned goods:

Washington, D.C., May 1, 1909.
Mr. Walter A. Frost
5 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Dear Mr. Frost,—I have often regretted the inadvertent injury which is done to the canned goods trade by enthusiastic, well-intentioned, and yet not fully informed writers, implying that canned goods, as such, are adulterated. I think I can safely say that taking the whole matter of canned goods together, including fish, canned meats, canned vegetables, and canned fruits, only an extremely small percentage of them ever contain any added substances whatever, except food and perhaps a little salt or sugar. I think this fact ought to be well advertised and published.

Of course I do not include in canned goods, articles which have not been sterilized, for in such articles preservatives are often employed. I do not think the great canning trade should suffer because such an insignificant few persist in either using artificial color, artificial sweetener, or a chemical preservative.

Under the rules of the Department of Agriculture certain substances may be used in foods legally, provided their presence is plainly stated upon the label. Buyers of canned goods therefore have a certain method of protecting themselves in this matter, and that is to look at the label. When we consider the immense benefit of the canning industry to the consuming public, it appears to me that we ought to use every honorable endeavor to set the minds of the community right in regard to the composition of such article. Of course some canned goods are of better quality than others, that is a natural and necessary consequence; but the impression that some people obtain that all canned goods contain artificial colors, artificial sweeteners, and preservatives, is a most erroneous one and is harmful to the trade. I am, as you know, a believer in canned goods and in the canning process. I think it is a blessing, and a blessing which is not in disguise. I realize as well a anyone that public prejudice is difficult to control and to rectify, but I should like to do as much as I can to help this good trade along by appealing to the public not to condemn the whole trade because occasionally a sample may be found which is not in that state of purity which the public demand. Let the people give their confidence to the trade and let them eliminate those goods which they do not want to purchase, by inspection of the label.

If you think this letter will be of benefit to the trade, I shall be very glad to have you publish it.

Respectfully,
H. W. WILEY.

DOES WEALTH GIVE HAPPINESS?

It is a generally accepted fact that every man, young and old, enters business with the idea and ambition of scoring success. The term "success" is broad in its interpretation and meaning and includes many things, as honesty, a good name, fair values, an efficient service, commodious premises—and the daily receipts or profits. The world is, however, too inclined to spell success as an abundance of cash. Accepting, only for the sake of argument, the popular verdict it is equally interesting to hear someone say that affluence does not bring happiness or enjoyment. If that is true then there are a great many people in this wide world laboring under a strange delusion and a fatal fascination.

Discussing this attitude on the part of the public, an authority offers some interesting observations. "If riches," he adds, "do not mean a certain amount of pleasure, if they give the possessor nothing but turmoil, trouble, anxiety and uneasiness of mind, spirit and disposition, do you suppose there would be such a general desire to cling to wealth or to add to its store year by year? If a man of means has nothing but fear, mental anguish and untold misery as his daily portion—which many allege—there is not a millionaire in the land who would not unload all his holdings and rid himself of every bit of his capital to-morrow, for the sake of securing that sublime peace and contentment which are supposed to be, in a particular degree, the lot of less favored individuals. Every man goes into business with the desire of making more than a bare living or finding employment.

"Some will come along and tell you that, if you have enough to drink and eat and clothe yourself and a warm, comfortable house to live in, you are just as well off as the man who has his thousands, as he, like you, has only one mouth to fill and one body to clothe and keep warm; and that, if you are in what is called fairly well-to-do circumstances, you are as much favored as your rich brother. He can array his form in the finest raiment and satisfy his gastronomic longings with whatever delicacies fancy dictates or imagination paints; you cannot, as your pleasure is spoiled or interfered with by having to stop and consider the cost. He can buy a home of whatever style and architecture and in whatever locality he pleases; you cannot, as the price is too great. He can stay wherever he desires, travel when and how he likes; you cannot, as there is the barrier of expense. Every luxury, every convenience, every material aid to comfort and cheerfulness are possible with the man who does not have to stop and wonder whether he can afford it and weigh everything in a dollar and cents scale.

"Herein lie a few differences which no system of philosophy can shatter or sophistry destroy. This is why all men seek opulence, and by opulence is not meant idleness, aimlessness, meanness, tyranny, profligacy or dissipation.

"Riches honestly acquired and properly used do confer upon the possessor particular privileges and special powers which contribute to happiness and other things which go to make existence joyful and the one who declares otherwise is generally willing to be converted if he or she meets fortune while straying along life's highway."

FOR SHORTER HOURS.

Merchants are realizing now-a-days more than ever before that an afternoon off once a week or an occasional rest from business does not make them much farther behind at the end of the year. Summer is now in sight and wholesalers as well as retailers should think about early closing, giving themselves and their clerks an extra hour, on some days at least, during the week.

In many towns and cities the merchants arrange among themselves to close an hour earlier during the summer months and few regret it. The time is past when the store is kept open every night till every late straggler has passed the door—usually neglecting to do any purchasing. As years went by an hour was occasionally cut off the day's work until now six o'clock has become practically the universal closing time.

Shorter hours means better service from clerks and more promptness from customers and few merchants can honestly claim a loss by any slight consideration in this respect.

SCARCITY OF WHEAT.

At the present time the scarcity of Ontario wheat is causing considerable unrest among the millers and cereal manufacturers. Some Ontario millers have been paying as high as $1.40 for wheat and even at this record price they have difficulty in obtaining it. This, to a large extent, has caused the high prices of flour and the advances in cereal goods, which are announced in this week's market reports.

The past winter has seen a considerable quantity of wheat shipped to Mexico, and this, together with a large home consumption of wheat products, has produced the scarcity. Ordinarily the duty on wheat entering Mexico is sixty cents a bushel, but that was reduced to twenty cents when the southern country found itself face to face with a wheat famine.

There was, therefore, much wheat shipped to Mexico during the past few months, and this apparently has left little in the hands of Ontario farmers and millers. The former may, of course, be holding back, awaiting higher prices or delaying the marketing of their grain until their seeding is completed.

RAILWAY EXPANSION.

The vast amount of construction work contemplated or in progress by Canada's railway companies is another evidence of the rapid development of the Dominion. It is estimated that $85,000,000 is to be spent during the current year in railway extensions, this sum being divided among the Canadian Pacific, the Great Northern, the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk Pacific.

This enterprise indicates the healthy condition of the country, and if it were not for its wonderful resources the fact that so much money should be spent in a single year might be somewhat alarming. There is probably no greater evidence of the growth of a country and the expansion of its resources than railway development. There can, therefore, be little foundation for business men entertaining pessimistic forebodings that the present year will be different from earlier predictions. New railways stretching out into new districts mean increase of population, better times and better conditions among the retail merchants, and hence an increase in manufacturing establishments and a more wealthy country.

SHORTAGE IN BEANS.

The general public are beginning to realize that beans are a nutritive and useful food. This season almost all the beans grown in Canada have been consumed and this condition was principally due to the good demand not only at home, but from the United States as well.

That beans can scarcely be bought now at any price is the claim of some wholesalers. They are practically out of the farmers' hands and prices are firm. Some manufacturers of canned pork and beans have advanced their prices as much as twenty-five per cent., having found that there is no money in them at the recent ruling figures.

The chief producing section for beans in Canada is western Ontario, where farmers find that crop profitable and where the area for bean cultivation will be increased.

DON'TS FOR TRAVELERS.

A good deal has been written about how traveling salesmen are treated by merchants who do not realize that it pays to be courteous not only to the people they sell goods to but also to those they buy goods from.

Some merchants have much to learn in this regard and even some officials in large manufacturing concerns can to advantage change their policy and treat salesmen in a manner more in keeping with the Golden Rule.

The story is told of how one of the most gentlemanly and considerate salesmen on the road called on the buyer for a large manufacturing concern which closed its doors in an Ontario town during the past year. The salesman presented his card and the buyer in a churlish manner tore it up and threw it in the waste paper basket. A second and a third card met the same fate with the result that the affronted salesman spoke his mind freely to the buyer, comparing his actions with what a true gentleman's would have been.

There are always two sides to a story, however, and while we can give no additional information regarding the case referred to, the side of the manufacturers, and the manner in which they are treated by some self-conscious salesmen is given in the following letter received from the secretary of a large manufacturing concern. His letter follows:

> Having often noticed in your valuable journal, the many "Dont's" that buyers should not do to travelers, I write to inform you that for every don't that the buyer should not do to the traveler, I can name you two dont's which the traveler should not do to the buyer.
> It might surprise many travelers to know that one half of them do not know how to approach a buyer. They may have called on him perhaps three or four times during the year and he has the impression that he is the only man who calls on that firm.
> The traveler walks in and says, "How do you do, Mr. So-and-So, how is business to-day?" You immediately start to wonder who he is but he does not tell you. You might know his face but cannot recollect his name nor the name of the firm he represents. He will ask you how business is and if there is any chance for an order in his line but of course we always say no, because we do not know who he is. We do not ask him who he is; if he does not know enough to tell us.
> The writer had a case the other day where a traveler came in and asked if we needed anything in his line. We know his face but could not place him. He said that we had sent an inquiry to his house but did not mention the name of the house he represented and I immediately told him that no doubt his price was too high and the order went past him; but while he sat here the order was made out for two car loads of lumber, to his firm, and was mailed on the same train he was on. His house called him down the next day, asking him why he had not called on "Jones & Smith." He said he had but that there was nothing they required and that the quotation was too high.
> Many travelers come in who do not know enough to take the cigar out of their mouth, while others who might know the buyer salute him in a very familiar and loud tone with, "Hello, Jack, old boy, how are you?"
> Still others who come in feel it their privilege to walk around the office and chat with other members of the office staff if the buyer happens to be busy.
> I could go on giving you many more "Dont's" which the traveler should take note of but space and time are too limited to allow me to do so.
> As an old traveler myself I would say that the first thing a traveler should do when approaching a buyer is to mention the wares he handles and the name of his firm. There is not one buyer in a thousand who care a snap for the traveler's name or his beautifully embossed cards.
> "SUNSHINE."

The editor would like to hear from other readers on this subject. Experienced travelers know how to approach a customer and make it worth the customer's while to give him a hearing. There are many young salesmen on the road to-day, however, who have their careers to make or mar, and instances where buyers or salesmen have been discourteous are worth repeating if a lesson can be learned from their telling.

MARKING PRICES ON GOODS.

Some merchants lose money because of failure to properly mark goods, thinking they can remember the cost price, and in this way they many times do not get actual cost for the goods.

Other merchants, either from carelessness or force of habit, mark the selling price on all goods a certain percentage above cost, regardless of real values. Still others do not see the goods at all, but tell a clerk to open them up and what selling price to mark on them.

When goods come into the store they should be carefully inspected, for if there is one place where the best judgment of a merchant is brought into action, it is in marking or pricing goods. Only the very best judgment should be used to put a good, strong profit where it will fit, and make up for the short profit, or possible loss, on something which has been purchased to sell at a bargain.

Marking goods in plain figures can very often be made the basis for further sales. A customer while waiting to purchase some special article is often prompted to buy other things by being able to know the price. But, above all, don't have mixed or cut prices. Remember that one man can't do all the business.

Make it a law to have one price to all, and that price in plain figures, and "money back if you want it" should be the rule in every wide-awake retail grocery store. Let it be recognized in the community that a child may be able to buy goods in your store as cheap and with the same satisfaction as could an expert of values.

Such a policy can not do other than command the confidence and respect of the public and bring the greatest possible benefit to the retailer.

ST. JOHN, N.B.

May 25.—Up to the present the harbor fishing for this season has not been up to the mark; very few shad are being caught and they are retailing at 35c to 50c each. Lobsters are coming in quite freely from bay ports in St. John and Charlotte counties, and range in price from 10c to 40c each.

The farmers in Upper New Brunswick and Aroostook County, Maine, are now putting in seed potatoes. The greater part of last season's crop has been disposed of and last week the price quoted was $2.40 a barrel. In St. John prices remain about the same as last reported.

T. Edwin Robinson, James N. Riley, M. Wellington Cox and J. Donald McKenzie, all of this city, have formed a partnership under the name of the Standard Creamery Co., and will engage in a general creamery business.

J. J. McGaffigan, the Dock Street tea merchant, has returned to the city, after more than four months spent in traveling in the United States and Mexico.

Killam Bros., who for several years occupied a stall in the county market, where they carried on a commission business, have removed to the South Wharf and will carry on a wholesale business in groceries, fish and country produce.

Johnston & Boulter, of O'Leary Station, P.E.I., have opened a new grocery and provision store.

Murdock Kennedy and Parnell McMahon, of Emerald, P.E.I., have opened a general store.

MONTREAL.

May 25.—Grocers report a good volume of business. Some, especially those in the west end, state that they are beginning to notice the exodus to the country, but this has not reached any appreciable size yet. Weather conditions have been decidedly unfavorable. During the latter end of the week however, there was a decided change for the better . Weather conditions affect the small grocer in the less fashionable quarters of the city more than his influential brother whose customers do most of their ordering by telephone. One grocer stated that he thought people ate more when the weather was good.

Considerable interest has been manifested in the warm discussion which has been going on at the Board of Trade with reference to Free Trade within the Empire, and the continuance of the preferential arrangement. In discussing the situation with some of the leading grocers in the city some amusing comments were made. While the most of these observations were made in a more or less jocular way, they contained more than a casual amount of common sense, and shrewdness. One gentleman whose name cannot be divulged said : "I believe too much prominence is given to such discussions as these since the participants are private citizens and do not represent, as our Parliament does, the will of the great mass of the people. Whilst I do not doubt the sincerity of these men and that they are acting from purely patriotic motives, their proximity to the wheat pit and other opertions of a like sort is more than apt to make people think that their views would be warped." Continuing he stated a discussion of free trade and protection always made him think of what Abe Lincoln said about the merits of protection. Lincoln when asked his opinion of protection said : "If protection means that when we want steel rails, we go to England and get them, and the Englishmen get our money, and we get their ralls, well then I'm not for protection, but if it means, when we want rails we go somewhere in the U. S. and get them, and an American gets our money, and the United States gets the rails, well, then I'm for protection.' This I believe is what Canada should aim at—to produce everything possible within her own borders, and be satisfied."

J. A. Jenkins, representing the Gwaltney, Bunkley Peanut Co., Smithfield, Va., was in Montreal for a few days this week, and called upon the trade, with W. C. Christmas, the local agent of the firm.

Howard Cane of The William Cane & Sons Co., Newmarket, Ont., was in Montreal last week.

F. W. Rowley, of Underdown & Crichton, London, Eng., is making a tour of Canada, visiting the firm's agents throughout the Dominion.

W. R. Webster, of W. R. Webster & Co., Sherbrooke, cigar manufacturers, spent a few days in town last week.

Henri Jonas has returned from a trip to Europe.

W. C. Rowe, late of Dean, Rowe & Lacy, Sherbrooke, has gone into the lumber business. Mr. Rowe, who is associated with several other gentlemen in this new venture, has purchased extensive limits in the Province of Quebec.

John Robertson, St. Catherine St. W., has a fine window display of a breakfast food this week. This grocer's window has long been famous for the beauty of his window displays. The boxes are arranged in three arches, the middle one reaching three quarters of the way to the top of the window. On the floor of the window are two neat little mounds of the food, and numerous cards bearing the price of the product are distributed throughout the exhibit. Altogether the window is a very attractive one.

Couvrette & Sauriol, paper merchants and wholesale grocers, have removed from Bonsecours Street to larger premises at 253 to 255 St. Paul Street, corner of St. Vincent Street.

Murphy Bros., St. Catherine St. W., showed a fine display window last week consisting of small bags of flour. The window is very tastily gotten up and certainly does not fail to attract attention.

L. W. Chaput another West St. Catherine St. grocer, displayed a unique flour window also. It possesses decided originality and good taste.

The Ogilvie Flour Mills Co. showed a very fine team of heavy draft horses and waggon in the recent Horse Show held here. Unfortunately one of the horses went lame in the ring which ruined their chances of a ribbon. Otherwise it would be safe to say that they would have been close to the top.

The Brodie Manufacturing Co. are opening a booth at Dominion Park May 24 for the summer. They intend to cook doughnuts and other foods with their brand of baking powder which they will advertise in this way.

Ocean Mills, 101 Mount Royal Avenue, have the plans prepared for a new five storey building 26x94, corner of LaSalle and Mt. Royal Aves. Work on this building will commence immediately. This plant will be absolutely up-to-date in every respect. New manufacturing and packing machinery will be installed. The equipment for making the starch which is this firm's special brand will be improved and will enable them to produce one car per day. The new structure will be of brick. The proprietor O. Lefebvre, has been in the manufacturing business for 15 years, during which time his efforts have been rewarded with success. The new factory will produce many lines among which are starch, extracts, blanc mange and cough mixtures.

John R. Henderson, of Sancta Maria, Mexico, has been paying a visit to Montreal recently, revisiting the scenes of his childhood and early manhood. He has been away from Montreal for nearly thirty years, during which time he has been engaged in the grocery business in various parts of the United States and for the last nineteen years in Mexico. When in Albuquerque, N.M., he became aware of the possibilities of the business in Old Mexico and decided to go there and he states that he has never regretted the change. He is very enthusiastic regarding the possibilities of the country. Speaking with respect to the grocery business he states that it required some courage to depart from their old antiquated methods, but he has done so and met with great success. His store is regarded as one of the finest equipped grocery stores in Mexico. He has introduced novel methods and Canadian ideas into his enterprise and this fact has been chiefly responsible for the business which he has built up there.

Buyers in Montreal during the week were : J. B. Lefebvre, Ste. Therese, Que.; M. Sauve, St. Scholastique ; X. Desautels, Ste. Angele de Monnoir ; F. Mathieu, Lachenaie, H. Pare, Granby ; G. Daoust, St. Anne de Bellevue; M. Huet, St. Julie Verchere; A. Lemieux, Henryville, Que.; L. Barbeau, Laprairie, Que.; J. A. Lanctot, St. Isadore, Que.; Aug. Beausoliel, Terrebonne, Que.; J. F. HALIFAX.

May 25.—Large cargoes of sugar continue to arive. The steamer Dagfrid that arrived here recently brought 12,000 bags, and another steamer from the West Indies also brought a large shipment. Shipments of molasses are falling off some.

Some Nova Scotians interested in the fruit industry are urging the apple growers and shippers of this province to pack their fruit in more attractive style. They say that the west leads Nova Scotia in this respect, and that it is time our shippers packed their fruit in boxes when shipping to the Old Country. The box has many advantages over the barrel, as it is much more conveniently handled and just about suits the average family. They claim that it is practically impossible for a grower to build up a reputation among consumers if he uses only the barrel package, for it is too large for all but a comparatively few of the consuming public. If the barrel is used it is opened by the grocer and the consumer seldom knows from what source the fruit comes. The box package also gives the consumer a much better opportunity to examine the fruit before purchasing, in case that he does buy in the original packages, since by removing the cover or sides, one-fourth of the apples are exposed to view. Finally, the box is a much neater and more attractive package than the barrel, and permits a peep at the contents even before it is opened. It will, no doubt, be some time before the average grower in Nova Scotia will adopt the box, but with the rapid inroads made in all the markets, by the western-grown fruit shipped in boxes, this style of packing must claim the attention of Nova Scotia growers. It is claimed that if the western growers can make money by this care of the apples and pay the extra expense of shipping to the east, there ought to be money in it for the local growers. With few exceptions the London apple receivers prefer the barrel, instead of the box. For instance, the barrel can be rolled, and the box has to be carried, and the porters in Convent Garden like to roll things. Then again the box as a Nova Scotian market production is a new thing in the English market.

The grocery trade is in a prosperous condition and the volume of business passing is quite satisfactory. There is quite an improvement in the condition of the country roads, and as a result business has benefitted considerably. Collections are very good in most districts, being fully up to the average of the year.

Butter is coming in quite freely and the market is well supplied. The quality of a large proportion of it, however, is very poor, and in consequence the sales are slow. The reason for some of this butter coming to the market in poor condition is due to the country storekeepers. Many of them take butter in exchange for other goods, and they hold it too long before placing it on the market. The butter referred to is principally in small rolls.

The first cargo of bananas for the Fruit Dispatch Company arrived here last week on the steamer Boston. The steamer landed about 14,000 bunches. Heretofore it had been the custom of many of the Halifax commission men to import their bananas direct, and they supplied a large portion of the trade, not only in the city, but throughout the province.

The grocers of Halifax are handling more green truck than ever before, and they report that their sales continue to show a steady increase. Lettuce, radishes and tomatoes are now raised in large quantities in Nova Scotia.

F. J. Holman & Co., successors to W. S. Brown, of Charlottetown, are having their store painted and the interior thoroughly renovated. They intend stocking up with a complete line of first-class groceries, fruit and confectionery.

Recognizing the economic value of the Y.M.C.A. to the employer of labor, Wentzells Limited, wholesale grocers, have given one thousand dollars towards the construction of a new Y.M.C.A. building in Halifax.

Chatham Merchants Discuss Ticket Selling and Program Advertising—Expensive Eggs for Packing Predicted by London Authority—Annual Meeting of Berlin R.M.A.—Excursions Arranged by Toronto, London, Brantford and Hamilton Grocers.

CHATHAM.

Chatham, May 17.—The question of program advertising and ticket selling was discussed at the last meeting of the Retail Merchants' Association, the subject being brought up by Wm. Anderson, who urged that the association seize the opportunity to reiterate its stand, taken some two years ago, to the effect that members of the association would not advertise on programs, hotel registers or similar "illegitimate" advertising devices, and would not purchase tickets of any kind in their places of business. He quoted a few instances where he had noticed the rule was being disregarded. Most of those present, however, reported that the rule was working well, and that the program advertising and ticket-selling nuisance had been practically reduced to a minimum. It was decided to have notices respecting the association's rule printed and distributed among members, to be posted in their places of business with a view to facilitating the turning down of advertising and ticket soliciters. Mr. Anderson also voiced some emphatic views with respect to calendars, adding that he thought the rule should be extended to include them and that he would bring up the matter at the next meeting.

An interesting point respecting calendar "advertising" was elucidated by a merchant the other day. He said: "In most houses the best and prettiest calendars find a place in the dining-room, or sometimes the parlor. The cheaper calendars are relegated to the kitchen. Now, the average family—that variety of family from which we draw our trade—lives the best share of its time in the kitchen, has most of the meals there, and rests and studies there in the evening, so that the cheap calendar as a result of its very cheapness is a more effective advertising agent than the pretty and expensive product. Just take a look in the average house, and see if I'm not right, and if the poor calendar isn't hung where it will be seen ten times to the good calendar's once. Of course," he added, "I don't think the calendar is any good anyway."

W. E. Parrott has evolved an interesting advertising innovation. His delivery rig is ornamented with a few handmade pasteboard advertising cards. "We have good butter at 25c" is a sample. This sort of advertising has the advantage that it can be changed as often as the advertiser wishes.

E. H. Ruttan, of Wallaceburg, has put a new delivery wagon on the road.

J. G. Rose, general merchant and postmaster, of Duthill, has sold his store to Chas. Howson, and will leave for Montreal.

P. Y. Anderson, grocer, of Wyoming, has fitted up a handsome ice cream parlor in the premises adjoining his store.

Early-closing during June, July and August is being considered by Wallaceburg merchants.

Waseif David fruit dealer, of Kingsville, has leased the Prideaux Fox store for five years and will move there shortly.

The Lambton Creamery Co. has arranged to operate and finance the Glencoe Creamery for the coming season, retaining Mr. Smith as buttermaker.

The W. L. Clark Seed Co., of Leamington, will in a few weeks give up their present store, opening an office in rooms over the store. A large warehouse will be erected near the station.

BRANTFORD.

May 26.—The committee who have in charge the arrangements for the annual excursion of the Grocers' and Butchers' Association are P. Truss, F. C. Harp, A. Coulbeck. They went down to Hamilton yesterday and completed arrangements whereby the Brantford and Hamilton grocers will run a joint excursion as they have in the past.

The Liberty Oil and Drug Co. cases have not become a dead issue yet. All the alleged local debtors of the company have received letters from C. S. Walters, a Hamilton accountant to pay up. BRACEBRIDGE.

May 26.—Saturday last the main street of the town was thronged with people, mostly buyers from the country and from up the lakes and the stores were doing a brisk trade. On Monday the town seemed deserted, nearly all of the merchants taking the day off .

It's a cool proposition the ice man has to make this year. The prices here are $2.50 a ton in single lots delivered; 15c cwt. for over 500 lbs.; 20c cwt. for less than 500 lbs.; which means that the grocers will have to pay practically 20c per 100 lbs. For private houses they

"Do your shopping at home," is a good motto and it will pay. Some days ago your representative received a grocery catalogue from one of the large departmental stores and found, on making a study of it, that the merchants here not only held their own, but in some cases sold below the prices quoted. Then why do people send away from the town they live in for their goods? One of the best items on mail order business was a lengthy article in the Simcoe Reformer of the issue of May 20. It ends up with this motto: "Buy at home. It will save many disappointments and will make you a more valuable citizen of the town you live in."

The high price of potatoes struck us fair and square last Saturday when the price soared to one dollar and ten cents a bag. Other prices ruled about the same as last week, with the exception of flour, which is rapidly advancing.

One good thing noticed recently in one of the leading grocery stores here was a large card with a sample of biscuits on it, thus doing away with so many half-filled boxes kicking around the store. The clerks make sales from the samples.

The Grocer is certainly becoming a valuable book, not only for the proprietor, but for the clerks as well. When asking one clerk on the pretty window he had decorated a few days ago with brooms, brushes and housecleaning goods, he said the idea came from The Canadian Grocer. Nearly every week new ideas on window-dressing can be picked up out of that book.

Work on the new wholesale warehouse for John Garvey on King St., to which reference has already been made in The Grocer, is being pushed forward vigorously, and when completed it will be the largest in the city. It is to be five stories in heigh, including basement.

The executive of the Retail Grocers' Association met last week and completed arrangements for the annual picnic to Detroit on June 23. President E. J. Ryan presided and the following committees were appointed: R. A. Ross, chairman; F. Travers, E. F. Reid. F. Paull and Thomas Shaw.

Advertising committee—H. Ranahan, chairman, and E. J. Ryan.

Railroad committee—Harry Ranahan, chairman, N. Mcleod, James Haskett and Thomas Shaw.

Charles Maker was appointed to act in the capacity of master of ceremonies on the train en route. Those present were President Ryan; N. McLeod, Jas. Haskett, H. Ranahan, Thos. Shaw, E. F. Reid, F. Travers, J. Henderson, R. J. Donahy. Frank Paull, Cyril Hayes, M. A. Young, R. A. Ross and Thos. Vincent. Struck by a rapidly approaching yard engine, which demolished the wagon, while he and the horse were dragged for a distance of twenty feet and both emerged unscathed, was miraculous escape of Wm. Knapp, grocer, 885 Adelaide St., experienced at the Adelaide St. crossing of the C.P.R. one morning last week. With his horse he was dragged till the engine was brought to a standstill. Mr. Knapp and the horse were not injured in the least. About ten dozen eggs were in the wagon at the time of the accident, and of course they are a total loss

A. E. Silverward, manager for Flavelles, Limited, is authority for the statement that there will be no cheap eggs in Canada this year. "The present prices of 17 and 18c a dozen in the country are the highest on record," he says. "These prices are two cents higher than the prices at this time last year. Seven years ago when we first opened out in London we could get any amount of eggs at 10c a dozen. At that time nearly all Canadian eggs were sent to England. Now there is hardly an egg goes to England from this district. The production is not enough to supply the home demand notwithstanding that nearly every farmer is keeping more chickens now than he did then. The demand from the western markets this year will surpass all records, and we have already sent several million eggs there. Prices may come down a very little in the summer, but there will be no cheap eggs at all. Canada is now the consumer of the eggs produced in this country, and in consequence is more independent in establishing the prices.

"The butter market is just opening, and the prospects are for lower prices. Prices in the country are at present from 20 to 22c a pound as against 25 and 26c at this time last year. In March of last year prices reached the highest point in several years, and butter sold for 32c a pound. It dropped gradually though. The grass is not good enough yet to establish a market, and we will get very little good butter before June 1. In the summer it is likely to go down a couple of cents lower than it is now, but even then the farmers will be getting good prices."

The most important matter before the last meeting of the Retail Grocers' Association was the report of the executive on provincial organization, which has already appeared in full in The Grocer. The report was discussed at considerable length, and finally unanimously adopted.

BERLIN.

May 26.—The seventh annual meeting of the Berlin Retail Merchants' Association was held on the 12th inst., and brought out the largest attendance in the history of the organization. The retiring president, C. B. Dunke, gave an interesting resume of the year's business, dwelling on the legislation put through the town council in the interests of retailers at the instance of the association's officers. He referred also to the successful operation of the Credit Reporting Department. The list of delinquents furnished to the members periodically had been a considerable source of protection and the letters sent out in connection with this department had been very effectual in spurring on deliquent debtors.

The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows:

President—John Hessenauer.
1st Vice-President— Geo. J. Schell.
2nd Vice-President—R. D. Lang.
Treasurer—W. A. Clarke.
Secretary—F. I. Weaver.
Auditors—A. Weseloh and W. L. Leeson.

A hearty vote of thanks was tendered the retiring president and also the retiring secretary Mr. Brubacher who had acted in that capacity for the past six years. It was decided to have a new supply of cards printed setting forth that the association members were prohibited from making donations to subscription solicitors except in cases where they had received the approval of the association.

The association has now a membership of over 80.

OWEN SOUND.

May 26.—There is much interest displayed here among merchants in regard to a police court case in which a number of grocers were charged with displaying goods on more of the sidewalks than was permitted by law. An information was laid by J. T. McInnis and H. G. Tucker represented him. In reply to the Police Magistrate's query as to what was to be done, counsel for the prosecution said that his client had observed that the sidewalks were clear on the morning of the trial and that as his object was attained he did not wish to push the prosecutions, provided the defendants paid the costs. His Worship expressed his satisfaction at this statement, and said he would dismiss the charges without costs, as it had been explained to him that the council of a later day than the date of the by-law had granted the privilege to merchants of occupying a space on the walks eighteen inches wide and high for display of goods, and gradually this space had been enlarged until the walks had been too much encroached upon, he believed in some cases. His Worship's statement that there would be no costs did not satisfy the solicitor, who questioned his right to dismiss the charges except on the wish of the prosecutor to withdraw, as there was a direct penalty attached. To this His Worship replied that when a man is brought up for drunkenness he has broken a town by-law, yet he may in his discretion say to the man, "Go, but don't do it again," and so he could do in this case. Finally the solicitor gave the court to understand that it was the costs for his own services which was in his mind, and which he did not consider should be saddled on his client who was acting as a public benefactor. Pro bono publico, replied His Worship, who then informed the solicitor that he had nothing to do with his costs, but there would be no court costs. Mr. Tucker conferred with his client after which the case was withdrawn without any question as to costs.

The by-law in question is No. 380 which was passed in 1885 when J. Rutherford was mayor. It is a general by-law for the regulation of affairs on the streets of Owen Sound and many of its clauses are as dead letters as was the one under which the present action was taken and should be enforced as well as this one.

The clause of By-law 380, under which the action was taken, and which is now being enforced, is as follows:

"No person shall place any goods, wares, merchandise or other article of any kind upon any street or sidewalk or hang or expose any goods, wares, merchandise or other article outside of any shop, house, warehouse, or other building so as to project over or encroach upon any portion of a street or sidewalk in the Town of Owen Sound; but this section shall not be construed so as to interfere with the use of a portion of a street or sidewalk for a reasonable time during the reception or delivery of merchandise or other articles and so as not to obstruct public travel."

May 26.—Benson Bros. have just received a line of Crown Derby ware, which, placed amongst the cut glass, as they have done, makes a charming effect.

English Stilton cheese has arrived in the city, but it lacks the flavor for which Stilton cheese is noted, probably owing to it not having sufficient age.

It is not always the largest store which does the most business. Metcalf's store, although small, is quite a suburban "Beehive." One department of this store is used for confectionery, the candy turnover being large, considering the district.

It is marvellous what a smart, trim look a few stacks of canned goods give to a store. "Joe" Hadden seems to have the happy knack of just placing everything to the best advantage. His store, always nice, looks distinctly inviting with the piles of these goods.

We are pleased to hear that R. Weber, who recently came from Berlin, is receiving his share of the Wyndham Street patronage.

TORONTO.

May 26.—Excursion matters were talked over at the regular meeting of the Retail Grocers' Association last week. David Bell reported that the executive had decided to accept the terms of the Niagara Navigation Co. but the exact destination was left over until a special committee went across to see the various propective points. When a report is made by this committee to the executive the destination will be decided upon. The date of the excursion was fixed for Wednesday, July 14th. On motion of J. S. Bond and J. H. Johnston it was decided to have printed a new set of by-laws containing the old code with necessary revisions. The committee to look after this is composed of D. Clark, chairman, C. F. Thorne, A. J. Coniam, J. S. Bond, J. H. Johnston and Thos. Clarke.

B. S. McMurty, 1146 Yonge St., is reaching out in more ways than one to gain the best knowledge to conduct his business, and he is rapidly swinging to the front.

A. A. Martin, 202 Lippincott St., has bought out A. Dumond, and is putting new life into the business. He has been one of Gunn's, Limited, waggon hustlers and is favorably known. He will soon gain his full share of the trade in that part of the city.

F. Leonard, 199 Lippincott St. is doing a nice clean business on a small, economical scale.

J. Thain, 183 Lippincott St., is a hard worker and has the reputation of selling reliable goods. He deserves success, which naturally follows good methods.

P. R. Morrison, 127 Lippincott St., is doing a good business, and through his courteous manner and straight dealing has won the confidence and respect of his rapidly increasing army of customers.

R. E. Dunsheath, 246 College St., has bought out Mr. Chester and feels that he has the right location, and will do a big trade. He is filling up the store with new goods and is wonderfully improving its appearance. He used to be with White & Co. and therefore comes with a valuable experience which will enable him to give splendid service to his customers.

John Waddell, 860 Bloor St., comes from the town of Harrison, where he has been in business for 30 years, and has taken The Canadian Grocer since it was in existence. He has the able assistance of his own family.

The grocery store of Mrs. Brown, 97 Cumberland St. was visited by thieves on Sunday night and although they gained an entrance they were frightened away by a barking bulldog across the street.

OTTAWA.

May 26.—The outlook for the fruit this summer is very bright. Canadian strawberries have come through the season without suffering damage from frost, and should be offered in quantities within the next two months, and at a price which will satisfy the careful housewife. The apple crop also looks good and such apples as the McIntosh Reds which were scarce last year will be abundant.

Lemons will probably be higher in price as the annual auction sale in Montreal shows. Only 12,000 cases were offered for sale, compared with 30,000 cases the year previous.

Because the early selling by-law is not observed members of the Ontario Vegetable Growers' Association, declare that they will not make use of one of the markets unless the law is inforced. This will mean that a large quantity of early vegetables will be sold only to regular customers and produce merchants. At their recent meeting it was maintained that hucksters on the market sell their loads before the bell rings and leave them in their waggons. After the market bell rings it is taken away. The semi-monthly meeting of the Ottawa Retail Grocers held on May 12 discussed this action on the part of the Vegetable Growers, and greatly approved of their stand taken in same. The grocers themselves were of the opinion that they should boycott the market altogether since the council refused to make it an open one, and have their supplies brought in by the farmers direct to their shops. It was decided, however, that such action should not be taken until it had been more thoroughly considered. The firecracker nuisance was brought up, and all grocers present decided to discontinue the sale of those dangerous explosives. Authorities do not seem to interfere, although the letting off of fire crackers before May 24th is contrary to law.

A euchre contest and smoker was held n Court Royal Albert Hall by the Grocers' Association, on May 26th.

WANT PROFITS IN SUGAR.

English Retailers Take Steps to Have Prices Advanced.

London, England, May 12.—The decision of the Committee of the Retailers' Sugar Association to take steps to advance the price of sugar by ½d. per pound in those cases where the present retail price leaves no margin of profit will bring to an end a cutting competition that has been waged for the past six or seven months.

Many retail shops will advance the price this week, and it is expected that by Tuesday next the retailers in the provinces will have followed suit. The cost price of granulated sugar to-day works out at 1¾d. a pound and is sold at that sum, and in some cases at 1d. The rise will not affect those better class districts where granulated sugar is retailed at 2d. a pound.

In days when modern advertising methods were unknown, the grocer was in the habit of using a low price for sugar to attract customers to his other wares, and the method is still retained. Hitherto the obstacle to a rise in price has been due to the multiple traders, but they now see the necessity of an increase.

The above is a facsimile of a post-card received recently by H. W. Nelson & Co., Toronto. This is one illustration of what persistent advertising in The Canadian Grocer does.

John Hewitt, representative in Toronto of the Shredded Wheat Co., was in Fort William recently on a two weeks' business trip.

WINNIPEG.

May 25.—Bert Cowan, head of the Cowan Manufacturing Company, was in the city last week. The competition in the cocoa and chocolate lines has been quite keen in the western territory this spring.

Harold F. Ritchie, a Toronto commission merchant, spent a few days among retailers during a short time ago. He returned from a trip to the coast, and reports business conditions as very promising.

Joseph Irwin, representing the Borden Condensed Milk Co., of New York, left Winnipeg for that city recently, having covered the western territory in the interests of his firm.

The representative of the Eby-Blain wholesale grocery house, of Toronto, Mr. Williamson, was in the city recently.

The Foley, Lock wholesale house, has secured the services of A. Badenock as city traveler. Mr. Badenock has been traveling for A. M. Smith & Co., of London, Ont., for the past nine years.

Mrs. Badenock accompanied her husband on his trip west, arriving in the city on May 14.

Mr. McLaurin, a local farmer, was in the city recently and purchased a carload of seed potatoes of an early variety. Fifty acres of land has been reserved for potatoes alone and Mr. McLaurin intends making a specialty of that branch of farming. He has his farm equipped with planting and digging machines.

SASKATOON.

May 25.—J. F. Cairns has returned from a business trip to Winnipeg.

L. S. Bishop has taken charge of the new grocery department for W. H. MacBeth. Mr. Bishop is a young fellow particularly well fitted for such a position. His experience has been picked up, among other places with N. K. Fairbank Co. of Chicago, and Pearson Bros. of Bilouxi, Miss.

A neatly trimmed window display is to be seen at MacBeth's store this week. Tinned fruits are piled high on each side, while pickles, teas and other similar goods are laid out between. The background is taken up with brooms nailed to the casing.

Jones Bros. have put a new front on their store on First avenue. The windows are now much larger allowing a bigger and better display of goods.

REGINA.

May 25.—Among the outside merchants noticed in the city recently were Mr. Wright of Kendal, D. Anderson of the Moose Jaw Trading Co., Moose Jaw, Mr. Cuddie, of Dixon & Cuddue, Belle Plaine.

Grocery jobbers report a fair number of orders being received, but the country merchants are buying light. Since Regina has had two wholesale grocery houses a great deal of the business which formerly went elsewhere has been diverted here.

There has been a noticeable improvement in the movement of canned goods, but there are no other special features to note in the movement of groceries.

Waddell Bros. lately purchased the store adjoining their restaurant, which was lately occupied by Messrs. Carroll & Coyle, milliners, and have opened up a fine tea room at the back and confectionery and fruit stand at the front. This is certainly appreciated by the ladies of Regina, as previously they had no place to go for a stimulating cup of tea while out shopping. These enterprising young fellows have also extended their lunch counter another three or four feet and they have one of the best stands in the city.

Tom Murray opened his new store on Scarth Street recently and with his fine stock of confectionery, cigars and tobaccos, fruits, etc., should do a good business.

The friends of H. S. Stockton, of Stockton & Mallinson, have recently been apprised of his marriage in Winnipeg.

Bert Cowan, manager of the Cowan Co., Toronto, spent a few days in the city with the company's representative Mr. Ennis.

M. A. Muldrew, representing the G. F. & J. Galt Co., of Winnipeg, was in town last week.

A. E. Thomas of the St. Thomas Match Co., was also in town a couple of days last week.

EDMONTON.

May 25.—Now that the fine warm weather is with us again business has taken a spurt in all lines. The farmers are hard at work now making up for the lateness of the spring in getting their seeding done.

Owing to the high price and great scarcity of wheat in this section one of our local mills has been forced to raise the price of their flour another ten cents per cwt. This grade is now selling at $3.10 per sack of 98 lbs., formerly sold at $2.85.

Henry Wilson has just leased the premises recently vacated by Johnson Bros., south of his store on Queen's Ave. He is going into a new venture in connection with his grocery business. The new store is to be devoted exclusively to flour and feed.

A. L. Vandrick has opened a grocery store with a side-line of hardware on Namayo Ave. out near Alberta in the northerly limits of the town

Oats are getting scarcer and in consequence higher every day. In fact there is hardly any coming into the city and what little is to be had is selling at forty cents per bushel. The conditions on potatoes has not improved any, they being extremely scarce still, the price quoted generally in the city to-day is $1.25 per bushel.

VANCOUVER.

May 25.—In face of the recent advance in sugar and the prospect of another increase in price, the representatives of the Glebe Sugar Refining Company, of Glasgow, Scotland, is taking orders for June delivery at $5.25 a hundred. Local sugar sells now at $5.60.

In consonance with the general advance on wheat products the Brackman-Ker Milling Company has put up its prices on Graham flour from $3.35 to $3.55 per gunny, which is an advance of 35c per barrel, bringing the price of that to $6.10. The company's whole wheat flour has also been advanced 20c, making it $3.75 a gunny, or $6.35 per barrel. Standard flour has gone up 50c per barrel since the corner on wheat took place, the price being now $7.50.

Potatoes are scarce and will remain so until the new crop comes in. The price is firm at from $40 to $42 for locals and from $47 to $50 for the best.

The death took place on the 13th instant of W. S. McGregor, sales manager for Kelly, Douglas & Company. He was cleaning his gun in the morning, and did not notice that an extra cartridge was in it. This went off, the charge hitting him in the head, killing him instantly. He was a member of the U.C.T.

The Wholesale Grocers' Association has issued a notice that all the city and coast travelers will be given seven days' holidays from June 6 to 12 inclusive. This will give all who wish to avail themselves of it an opportunit it to take in the U.C.T. excursion to the Seattle exposition in the Makura.

J. R. Crawford, who has been a member of the firm of Brown & Crawford, Kamloops, has accepted a position as traveler for Stirton & Dyer, cigar manufacturers, of London, and will cover the territory between Vancouver and Winnipeg.

All the business men in Chilliwack have agreed to close on Wednesday afternoons during the summer months. Even the professional men are falling into line. In New Westminster the hardware men are the only ones yet who have decided, but the others are expected to come along too.

K. G. Ripley, who represents the Swift Company in their soap lines in the west, has been making a trip through Canada. He states that in all probability the company would establish a soap manufacturing plant in connection with its packing plant at Edmonton.

Strawberries and cherries are finding a place on the market, the demand being good for this time of year. Strawberries are still rather pale, retailing for as low as two boxes for 35c. Cherries bring 30c pound.

To convince the customer in these days of non-adulteration, the maple syrup is being advertised on show cards as "pure sap syrup." It is a good phrase, and instinctively one asks one's self what "sap syrup" is, and the point is gained by the storekeeper. If one has come from the sap regions of the east, the whole fact is brought home with the one word. Sap syrup is retailing at 50c per quart, or $1.75 in bulk, and $1.90 or $2 in tins.

Three carloads of eastern eggs arriver recently, and as is usual when a large quantity comes in it is offered at half a cent lower than the regular price to entice the retailer to stock it. It is offered at 24½c, the general price being 25c. Eastern butter is quoted at 26½c, wholesale, while cheese is firm at from 16c to 16½c.

The grocery clerks of the stores in Mount Pleasant, one of the sections of this city, have asked for a summer half-holiday on Wednesday afternoons. The following have signed to close on that half-day during May, June, July and August: Andrews & Nunn, H. O. Lee, H. D. Thompson, Efford Bros., H. J. Parry, A. Murray, J. Thompson, J. W. Thompson. It is expected that the others who have not already signed will be prevailed upon to do so.

Dr. K. C. McDonald, of Vernon, B.C., is in the city this week and reports that irrigated fruit lands in the Okanagan are in great demand. He thinks the crop outlook for the valley this year is excellent. The influx of newcomers is not confined to the upper portions of the valley, but also obtains farther south, toward Penticton.

J. A. Simington, of Moose Jaw, Sask., is on the coast, having made a special trip to arrange for the purchase of strawberries during the coming season. He contracted in Victoria for upwards of 3,600 cases. In speaking of the British Columbia berries, he said that there were none grown anywhere else within his knowledge that could compete with those of the southern end of Vancouver Island.

F. Fraser, of the canning company of Fraser & Whitehead, Kelowna, makes the statement that his company has already sold $20 000 worth of the coming season's product of canned goods.

McRae Bros. have closed their store in Greenwood and will remove the stock to Prince Rupert.

The big meat packing companies are establishing themselves more firmly in British Columbia. There has been newspaper talk of a war to be waged by the Swift interests to get some of the trade that has been practically monopolized by P. Burns & Company, but whether or not this is so, the fact remains that both firms are active. One of the largest recent moves was the purchase of the business of Porter Bros. by Burns & Co., reference to which has already been made. Last week, R. B. Hunter, of the J. Y. Griffin Company, of Edmonton, was in Revelstoke and announced that J. H. Smith, of Edmonton, will be located in Revelstoke as district salesman, and H. Ebert, of St. Paul, was to take up his residence there also as wholesale manager for British Columbia. The local Government cold storage building has been leased from C. B. Hume & Company for the purpose. Although the J. Y. Griffin Company is supposed to be the Swift interests in Canada, R. K. Ripley, of the latter company, was also in Revelstoke looking over the situation.

Winnipeg Needs Retail Grocers' Association

Trade Becoming Demoralized For Lack of Organization—Visiting Grocers From St. Louis May Have Poor Reception—Price Cutting Depreciating Extent of Profits.

Winnipeg, May 24.—A number of features have become evident in the retrail grocery trade recently which tend to reveal the demoralized condition into which the trade has relapsed since the Retail Merchants Association has been abandoned. The lamentable failure of the organization due perhaps to no cause except the mistakes of one man, has left an ill-effect upon the trade which will be difficult to efface. The one great effect of that failure was to establish a feeling of untrustworthiness among the individual retailers, making it extremely difficult for them to come together mutually as fellow-citizens and fellow-tradesmen.

The feeling seems to be inculated in the minds of many that some retail grocers were involved in the affairs of the association which has recently passed into the hands of the receiver. This feeling is quite unnecessary however, and perhaps they only way to eradicate it would be to have a general meeting of the grocers at which it would be possible to arrive at a definite understanding. But to have a meeting which would be adequately representative is the great problem of to-day.

Affairs Not Yet Unravelled.

Not much time has elapsed since the retail merchants relinquished their organization, and indeed the affairs have not yet been completed by the receiver, and it is not known definitely what the last move of the retailers will be. It is expected however, that each member of the organization will be levied a uniform sum in order to raise the required amount to pay off the standing debts.

The grocers are only a section of that general organization and the present circumstances need not interfere with the development of a new organization on part. This organization must sooner or later be affected, as every grocer undoubtedly believes, if the standard of excellence which the trade demands is to be maintained.

Visit of St. Louis Grocers.

It is very regretable that at the present time there is no organization of local grocers in order that preparations might be made for the entertainment of the retail grocers of St. Louis, who pass through this city on May 26, enroute for the Seattle Exposition.

The secretary of the Board of Trade notified the ex-president of the Retail Merchants' Association that the visitors were coming and asked that they be entertained by the city grocers. Accordingly a few down town grocers met to deal with the matter and they felt compelled to refer the responsibility back to the Board of Trade, the industrial bureau and the wholesalers' guild, on the grounds that they were not organized, and thus co-operatively they could do nothing. The fact was, however, that among grocers initiative was lacking in order that even a temporary organization might be effected for the special obligation that came upon them. It is hoped that among them all, our visitors from the south will be royally entertained during the few hours they stop in our city.

Price Cutting Prevalent.

Another condition which prevails at present and which could not prevail should the grocers heartily organize, is that old-time, disgraceful and foolhardy custom of price-cutting. Many of our grocers are competing with their neighbors by selling goods below cost, their object being apparently, to force others to close their doors.

The time should have come when retailers find it to their advantage, because it is advantageous to the trade generally, not to compete in prices, but in quality and excellence in their business generally.

Those engaged in this struggle at the present time are personally opposed to the scheme, simply because they are robbed of an honest profit, but it is an infection of haphazard business methods coupled with individual selfishness, which has carried those infected quite away from the methods of sound, practical business men.

It is regretted in this case, also, that there is no organization to bind up these running sores of the trade's life.

MANITOBA MARKETS

(Corrected by Telegraph).

Winnipeg, May 27.—Travelers returning from all parts of the country are all delighted with future prospects, but they have booked small orders for early shipments. No complaint is made on the part of the wholesalers for the present quiet condition since they are confident that as soon as the extensive seeding operation is completed, the revival of trade will more than compensate for the present situation. Payments are made quite promptly by merchants throughout the entire West. Most of the papers falling due in February and March last, and upon which credit was extended have been cleared off to date. A local wholesaler stated a few days ago that the prospects for the trade from the wholesaler's point of view was never better.

The blossoming out of summer weather has meant much to the local retailers during the past week. Everywhere we hear and see evidences that the trade is good. The chief items of discussion this week are the advances on cereals and the weakness in the sugar market. The potato market is very firm, the general retail price being $1.20 per bushel. There are some transitional changes in the green fruit and vegetable market. Local trade on the whole is very encouraging.

SUGAR—The reduced price of a few days ago remains general, but certain brands are being wholesaled in a few quarters at a slightly lower price than those quoted. Certain refiners seem determined to enter the field at all cost.

Romantic Beginning of the Famous Finnan Haddie

Widow Bereft of Her Breadwinner Receives Gift of Haddies From a Former Suitor—Too Many to Use She Cures the Remainder—Evolution of the Industry Within a Century—Enormous Quantity Taken from Waters of United Kingdom During a Year.

By an Aberdeen Writer.

The little village of Findon, or, as it is locally pronounced, Finnan, lies a mile or so on the Aberdeen side of Stonehaven, and seventy or eighty years ago was the chief fishing town on the east coast of Scotland. There the regular mail coach between Aberdeen and Edinburgh at that time stopped for breakfast, and the guard, himself fond of fish, found a very toothsome morsel in the "reekit haddies," which were then beginning to establish a market for themselves at Stonehaven and Aberdeen. By way of giving a treat to his brother, who lived in Edinburgh, he brought him up a parcel of finnan haddocks, and they were so much thought of that the treat was looked forward to with considerable interest when the coach was due in the capital of Scotland. The guard's brother ran a store in the Grass Market, and was a victual dealer in a very considerable way.

Demand Quickly Arises.

The "good thing" being sometimes shared with friends and business connections, the excellence of the cured fish in time became known, and a demand arose for them, so much so that the weekly consignment now regularly ordered on from the north was as eagerly picked up on its arrival by a steadily increasing run of customers.

A well known lord of session was one of the first to introduce the finnan at his famous breakfasts. He had them regularly when on circuit at Aberdeen, and, hearing they were to be had at the Grass Market direct from Findon, had them served up by way of a specialty, and thus gained renown, not only for his well remembered and well attended breakfasts, but for the "reekit haddie" as well. Dates are wanting by which to fix the start and progress of the trade, but the "haddies" soon became known in the markets of both Edinburgh and Glasgow, and, with the easier transit of steam, every village between Aberdeen and Stonehaven made a specialty of the "Finnans" to supply the constantly increasing demand. That was sixty years ago, at least.

A Romantic Beginning.

But, to begin at the beginning. A very old fisherman told me some years ago that he could remember the time when a few dozen haddocks were now and again home smoked by fishermen's wives in the peat reek of their own firesides. They did this when there was an extra good catch, and when there was not the same facility for getting rid of them as there is now. With them it became a necessity to "cure" the haddocks, so that they might be kept for a few days longer than in the fresh state, and until a sale could be effected. Thus, like many other branches of industry, the origin of the "finnan haddock" was more a matter of force than choice.

Remembers His Former Love.

There is a glamor of romance attached to the discovery of the "cure" no less interesting than the fact that it was accidentally hit upon by the party interested. A widow residing in the village of Findon, who had been left with a large family of young children when bereft of her breadwinner in a wintry gale, was occasionally presented with a basket of haddocks and coddlings by a former but rejected sweetheart, who, although married and with a family of his own, had still a soft spot for his love of former days, and in her hour of distress lent her a helping hand. But, as she was not able to consume all she received fresh, and not wishing to be wasteful, she opened them, gutted them, and then stretching them flat, hung them up in her chimney to dry and season in the peat reek (smoke) till she could place them on her frugal table, or exchange them, as she frequently did, for some other household commodity of which she was in more immediate want. It was by these exchanges that "Meggie's" (Margaret) fish became famous, and the housewives round about were not slow in picking up the process, especially so when they came to be asked for by Aberdeen and other merchants.

Such was the discovery of the "Finnan haddies," otherwise known in the trade as "yellow haddocks," "Aberdeen haddocks," "north-country haddocks," and so on; and which are now cured much after the same original fashion from John O' Groat's to Maiden Kirk, whenever the haddock can be landed, but more generally on the east coast and at Aberdeen and the Moray Firth villages in particular.

Development of the Industry.

When the fame of the "reekit haddie" began to spread, orders for supplies came from far and near. The introduction of the "iron horse" made the commerce in finnans an important business, and it soon became organized as a regular branch of the fish trade. When a ready and constantly extending market was opened up by railways and steamboats, the smoking of haddocks and young cod in quantity was found to pay almost as well as if sold "fresh," so that in the progress of time the fireside smoking was transferred to the smokehouse or kiln, where the business could be, and is, carried on more systematically than in the fisherman's cottage.

There are no fireside smoked haddocks on the market nowadays, but if you breakfast in any of the marine hotels in Cove, Portlethen, Mouchalls, or Stonehaven, on a holiday, and ask for a home cured haddock, mine host can easily furnish it, and may charge a penny or so extra for the trouble, but it is well worth the extra coin.

Product of the Peat Reek.

The original finnan was a product of the peak reek. So is the fish of the present day, but with this difference: In the early part of the nineteenth century, and well on through the first half of it, the finnans were "reekit" (smoked) at the fireside, and received more attention than is now bestowed on them in the factories. The women and old men, who did the "reeking" took particular care to shift the fish as necessity arose from the top to the bottom, so that each fish had its modicum of heat, as well as smoke. But now such individual attention cannot be paid to the tons and tons of cured haddies that must be turned out of a morning for dispatch by the next mail. In short, the "cure" has become deteriorated, the work is hurried, and the peats are not up to the mark of former days while hardwood chips and sawdust are so often substituted for the more acceptable peat.

Yet, for all these drawbacks, the finnan haddock is by a long way the best in the market. Whether they are got off Shetland, Orkney or Caithness, whether they are the product of the steam liners from the Firth of the Forth, or the fruits of the Dogger Bank brought into Fraserburgh, Peterhead, or Aberdeen by the magnificent fleet of trawlers working from these ports, if they are cured fresh, i.e., brought for the purpose of making yellow haddocks, then they may pass muster as "real finnans," and be confidently accepted as such. When fish are not put fresh into the smokehouse, they cannot come fresh out of it, and it is a decided drawback to this method of curing when the fish are not brought into the market specially for the purpose. Coddlings and whitings are often cured and sold as "finnans," but the haddock is the best fish for smoking, colors nicely, and has a better look than either the whiting or the cod on the breakfast table, and is much more toothsome to boot.

Under the Solder Seal.

In 1900 the haddock taken in the waters of the United Kingdom amounted to 600,000 tons, ranging in weight from four ounces to four pounds. Within the last eight years this quantity has been just about doubled. In Aberdeen alone the haddock represents one-half the trade in white fish, and of the half million quintals landed there last year two-thirds were converted into finnans.

The haddie is likewise canned for export, and keeps sweet and wholesome for two or three years under the solder seal.

ADVANCED RATE ON RICE.

Transcontinental freight rates have recently been revised, advancing the rates on certain commodities and revising the general situation. Among the items changed is the through rate on rice from Japan to Winnipeg, which shows an advance of ten cents per hundred pounds, or from eigthy-five cents to ninety-five cents.

In the past the rate to Winnipeg has been less than to intermediate wholesale centres such as Regina and Moose Jaw. These centres have been agitating more or less for as liberal a rate as that to Winnipeg. The advance, therefore, to Winnipeg puts all points on a par as to freight rates from Japan.

This advance, which took effect on May 15th, is not merely to off-set the agitation from the intermediate points, however Winnipeg, in transcontinental tariffs, is considered in a group called "Missouri River" points, and rates from the Orient on rice have been advanced to all points lying within this scheduled territory.

INTERESTING LEGAL POINT.

A point in law not generally understood is that a cheque marked "paid in full of account" can be accepted anl used without prejudice even though the amount of the cheque does not cover the full account. A merchant having, for instance, an account for $200 against a delinquent could accept a cheque marked "paid in full of account" and then sue for the balance due.

What Grocers Can Do in the Month of June

A Good Time to Sell Kitchen Utensils to Young People Who are Founding New Homes—Confectionery and Biscuits are Seasonable and Should be Carefully Displayed—Protect Goods From Insect Pests.

June is the month of brides and bridegrooms and of flowers. The new wife and lady of the manor will have manifold wants. All sorts of things will be necessary to make the home suited to her taste. The grocer should bear these facts in mind, and seeing June is par excellence the marital month. cater to the wants of his new patrons.

He should pay especial attention to this fact as it is the time to make new customers. Most women will stick with greater tenacity to the people whom they like than the opposite sex. Men will trade where it is most convenient, and will not go out of their way for the sake of friendship. Not so however with women. This is due to the overruling natural conventionality of the woman and her dislike for investigating new enterprises. If a man who has been married for a couple of years is asked about the expenses of house keeping, he will tell you that there is no end to the number of things which have to be bought for the kitchen. Most of them will declare that they never imagined so many things could be crowded into a little kitchen.

Now, the grocer must be alive to these requirements, and be ready to meet them. In June window displays of the usual utensils that a newly married couple require in their kitchen should be made. A variety of articles have been displayed by grocers in the windows with a card stating that the entire outfit could be purchased for a certain price. This saves the housewife considerable thought and she appreciates the attention.

Schools Close in June.

When the kitchen is pretty fairly stocked with utensils then the larder needs attention. Many useful and timely suggestions can be made by the grocer. Practically all the schools close in June, and it is then that the real exodus to the country takes place. This means that the grocer will lose some of his trade if he does not seek pastures new. This is a good time to inspire clerks to bring in new customers, and make it worth their while for their effort. A little friendly rivalty stirred up among them will accomplish wonders, in this direction. Many of the grocers' families will be leaving the city for the country, and they should be well supplied with provisions before they leave.

In some cases grocers keep in touch with their customers all summer if they do not go too far away. In cities which have summer resorts close at hand, it is practicable to run deliveries especially designed to serve these customers. This opens an opportunity for the enterprising grocer. Someone may find it convenient to patronize him, and if that person is well treated, the probability is that the trade can be held when the family returns to town in the autumn. In this way a new customer is made.

The people who remain in town give themselves up largely to frequent excursions into the country for picnicking purposes, and their requirements should not be forgotten. Picnic hampers could be made a specialty. The summer is well commenced by this time, and the beverages incidental to this This branch of the business pays good season should be given prominence. returns when well attended to. Candies, confectionery, biscuits are now in good demand. During the warm months people's appetites have got to be coaxed a little, so the wise grocer puts out his most tempting products.

The fact is a little slackness is almost inevitable during the summer, commencing in this month, and the grocer should take advantage of it, to make any changes in the interior of the store which may be deemed necessary. If there is any painting to be done inside or outside, June is a good month to do it, as good weather generally prevails. The muddy season is over, and the heavy dust of midsummer is not so noticeable.

Watch the Flies.

There is a necessity in this month for a precaution to be observed which will have great weight with the lady patrons of the store, and this is protection of the goods from flies. These little domestic insects seem to be the chief worry of good housekeepers in the summer, and they quickly observe any preventative means which their trades people adopt to dispose of this pest. This can be largely effected by proper screen doors and windows, and hanging netting over the goods on the shelf.

The arrangements for showing goods outside the store can be made more perfect. A grocer with ordinary mechanical skill can construct long boxes with wooden frames fitted in with glass. Some arrangement should be made to permit a free circulation of air through the box, otherwise the unnatural heat which is generated will very largely assist the process of decay. This inlet and outlet should, however, be made as impervious to dust as is practicable. The old custom of decorating the front door steps and sidewalk with food products is yearly becoming less in use. People passing a store who see the goods in a glass box, kept free from dust and other things, will be predisposed favorably toward that grocery store.

Brighten the Delivery Wagon

June is also a good month in which to fix up the delivery waggon. A new coat of paint will improve its appearance wonderfully. The harness will look no worse for a good cleaning, with soap and a little harness oil. There are numberless little jobs like this around a grocery store which will require doing in the slack time.

A search in the cellar may disclose some potatoes in a rotten condition behind the bin or an old bag. Some out of the way corner of the cellar may contain some form of putrefying vegetable matter. A still hunt generally brings these things to light

QUEBEC MARKETS

Montreal, May 27, 1909.

There is an old saying that "a cool, wet May makes a barnful of hay," and certainly the country looks as if this saying would come true. While the weather has been unfavorable to the immediate trade of the country, it is thought, nevertheless, it will result beneficially to the crops. At the latter end of the week a much better feeling was noticeable in all lines. Most houses think a few days of sunshine will restore a healthy tone to the market. Grocery lines have presented very few changes during the week. Sugar, flour, teas and the other chief products have remained steady. Collections for the week have been fairly good.

DRIED FRUITS—A despatch from California states that the prospects of the 1909 prune crop are much better than for 1908. "At that time the carry-over of 1907 crop on the coast was heavier than to-day's carry-over of 1908 fruit, and, furthermore, large holdings of 1906 and 1907 prunes were held in every important city of the United States and Canada in cold storage. That is not the case this year, according to investigations we have just completed. About four weeks ago it was estimated that there would be a much larger crop of Santa Clara Valley prunes than last season. Since then the situation has changed, and our belief is that the entire crop of prunes for the state will not exceed the tonnage of last year." Other lines are unchanged.

CANNED GOODS

MONTREAL.—Canned fruits continue dull, owing to prices being high. Canned meats are selling well, also baked beans. Canned fish is moving only slowly. Vegetables are in good demand.

TORONTO. — Wholesale distributors report business fair. A representative of a large Canadian canning concern, when asked what this season's pack would be like, stated that it is yet impossible to tell. In some places the peas are only being planted, and the new prices for the year will not be known for a couple of months yet.

Corn and peas are pretty well cleaned up, he said, and by the way things were looking he thought tomatoes would also disappear before the new pack arrives.

Canned apples are getting scarce, the demand being splendid. Peaches and apples are also good sellers.

ONTARIO MARKETS

POINTERS—

Sugar—Firmer tone to market.
Figs—Stocks very low.
Beans—Scarcity.
Evaporated Apples—Splendid sellers.
Dried Peaches—Low stocks.

Toronto, May 27, 1909.

Business is brightening up rapidly in many lines with warmer weather. The farmers are now able to get onto their land and although the season is late there is no reason to believe that crops will be light. This is lending additional strength to business. The only drawback that might occur will be a premature ripening of the grains by hot August weather. Good orders are coming in from the travelers in the country, but city trade is comparatively small. Collections are fair and few complaints along this line are ventilated.

There is a firmer tone to the sugar market this week. Raws in some cases have advanced, sugar beets in the Old Country have firmed up and local brokers and wholesalers, as well as Willett & Gray, anticipate an advance in refined. Sugar is about 30 points below what it was this time last year.

The fact that figs are practically all cleaned off the market is one of the interesting features. Importations have been small, the extent of the demand not being forecasted correctly.

The past month has seen a large sale for evaporated apples, which somewhat surprised wholesalers, in view of the poor demand during the fore part of the year. They are a good substitute for apples, and the prices have been tempting.

The splendid home demand this year for beans as well as a demand from the United States, has left the stocks of beans in farmers' granaries rather low. The people are beginning to appreciate beans as a food and are buying more extensively than usual.

SUGAR—Although no changes have occurred in the sugar prices, they are very firm and an advance would not be a surprise to brokers and wholesalers. Barbadoes raws have advanced an eighth. The fact that strawberries are coming on the United States market very freely has caused a big consumption of sugar there, which will soon be followed by a better demand here. Owing to unfavorable weather on the European continent sugar beets have advanced somewhat.

TEA AND COFFEE—Indications are that high grade flavory teas are in good demand in England just now. Otis A. Poole & Co., of Yokohama, Japan, in their first review of the tea market in Japan, dated April 24, say: "So far the weather conditions in the tea growing districts have been most propitious. There have been no frosts and in general the season is from a few days earlier in some sections to about the same in others, as last year. It was decided to begin picking the 22nd inst., as against April 26 of last year, not because the season is that much earlier, but in order to avoid the mistake of last year, when the crop was allowed to get too far ahead to yield the required proportion of fancy young leaf teas.

"In sections where silk and tea culture are concurrent industrnes, it is reported that the return on silk last year was not so satisfactory as on tea, in consequence of which more attention is devoted to tea this year, and an improvement can be looked for in quality and quantity.

"The usual first complimentary samples have already been shown and appear better in the cup and with leaf that will work up better in refining than corresponding samples of last year. Prices for the immediate future have only been muttered under the breath by the native growers. They intimate that if they must take lower prices for the common and late crop teas, they must have a corresponding increase on choice first-class teas, and their claim is not without justice."

The coffee market is quiet, but steady.

DRIED FRUITS—A favorable market still exists in many of the dried fruits. Prunes are selling well and the same may be said of apricots and peaches. Peaches, however, are getting scarce, and figs, as one wholesaler stated, "are absolutely cleaned up." One wholesale house even sold figs two years old at a good price, which they had intended throwing away. The cause of the shortage is attributed to small importations and not to a shortage in the crops, small importations being due to the fact that almost every year several dealers lose by getting too many. Figs used in Canada come from Smyrna, in Turkey, principally.

AUCTION SALE OF FRUIT.

The first auction sale of fruit in Montreal, from the Mediterranean for the season of 1909 took place recently at the Montreal Auction Company's rooms on Mountain St. This sale consisted of the cargo of the steamship Francesco Ciampa, which consisted of 36,000 packages of Palermo, Maiori, Catania and Sorrento oranges and lemons consigned to Hart & Tuckwell, wholesale fruit merchants of this city. The vessel had a very fine system of ventilation and owing to the northerly course taken by her on her voyage out and the quantity of ice encountered the fruit arrived in splendid condition. A large percentage of the fruit consisted of the famous November cut of lemons from Messina. J. J. Callaghan, the auctioneer, commenced the sale at 1 o'clock and as the attendance of buyers was large from all over Canada, the bidding for the different lots throughout the entire sale was spirited and the prices realized were considered satisfactory to all concerned. The buyers present included, Hart & Tuckwell, John Barry & Son, Bell, King & McLaren, G. Vipond & Co., and John T. McBride of Montreal, P. Gallagher of Ottawa; Dixon Bros., of Hamilton; McWilliam & Everist of Toronto; T. E. Eaton, Toronto; The Quebec Fruit Exchange Quebec; Carley & Faulkes, Ottawa; Dominion Fruit Exchange, Ottawa, and many other smaller buyers.

On the Giving of Advice

YOU will remember the old conundrum about what is it that everybody gives and nobody takes. Of course, it's advice.

When a newspaper advises a merchant or a manufacturer to put a brand on his goods and to keep that brand or trade name constantly before the eye of the newspaper reader, the person to whom the advice is given naturally asks what right have you to advise me? You're a prejudiced witness, you are talking from your own self-interest. Perhaps there is something in that, too.

But here is the advice of a gentleman far removed from any position wherein he might be accused of having selfish ends to serve. First, the advice, then the author:—

> "Experience has shown that even in the case of firms having an established reputation and world-wide connections attempts to discontinue advertising have usually been followed by a diminution in the sales effected, and it is not unreasonable to assume that the neglect by Great Britain of the most important forms of national advertisement would be equally detrimental to her interests as a manufacturing country."

That reads much like the language of the newspaper, but the words are the words of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, addressed to the manufacturers of Great Britain and reported in "The Times" of April 6, 1909.

Such are the views of a gentleman occupying so impartial a position as does His Royal Highness in reference to the old-established houses of Britain. How much more important is it to the Canadian business man, who, to a large extent, has his connections yet to make, that he should advertise before the field is pre-empted by his competitor, either domestic or foreign.

Was there ever a more opportune time to advertise in the history of this country? The commercial world is just emerging from the cloudy skies of the past twelve months, and new avenues of trade are being sought out by every wide-awake business man. Amidst it all the one road which the history of thousands of successes demonstrates as safe and sure to travel, is that of newspaper publicity, properly done.

Produce and Provision Situation of the World

Suggestion to Packers to Buy Less Female Hogs in Order to Save Situation Not Considered Practicable — Imports From United States Not Large—New Cheese on Scotch Market.

The hog problem attracts attention from various sources. Some undertake to explain the cause of the difficulty, and others have a sure remedy. The farmers have an idea that they must get some new pointers from Denmark, and the government has voted $10,000 to let them make the experiment. Some youthful genius suggests that packers should agree among themselves only to buy a certain percentage of female hogs and in that way force the farmers to keep them for breeding. This would be a sure success if the packers would all line up to this idea and be faithful to the agreement, and also if the farmers would all do what they are told by others. Experience, however, leads older men to shake their heads and find just two difficulties. The one is, that packers would not agree to carry this out, and the farmers would not submit to such arbitrary measures.

Some find the source of all the trouble in the fact that the duty on live hogs from the States is not giving the farmers sufficient protection. On making inquiries, it is found that very few live hogs are imported, and comparatively a small quantity of any kind of hog products. With all the fuss about the "deplorable" condition of our hog situation it is remarkable that according to the government statistics we exported $11,250,723 worth of pork and bacon last year, besides supplying our wonderfully increased home consumption, and in all for the whole Dominion, we imported from the States only $1,-671,140. This is certainly not a bad showing, and we have no reason to complain.

Cables from England state that the new home make of cheese is beginning to make its appearance on the market especially in Scotland; this makes the demand for foreign a little quieter. The total amount available is still very small, and the price of Canadian has gone ahead this week to the extent of one shilling per cwt. There is almost sure to be a squeeze for the last of the autumn goods which are worth to-day 68s. for colored and 66s. for white, while April cheese is selling at 57s. 6d.

Reports from England state that copious rains have fallen and that the home outlook for butter has greatly improved. The weather has been very summery both in England and in Ireland. The supply has taken a wonderful turn for the better, and dealers are looking for an easing in prices.

There are, however, other factors in the market which make for greater firmness. The continental spring is very backward and Germany is buying in Denmark instead of shipping to England. The Danish output is also very small for this time of the year. In view of these facts, it does not after all, look as if prices would decline much. Colonial butter is in small compass, and Siberian stock is also in small supply.

MONTREAL.

PROVISIONS—The demand for hogs is good, and supplies are small, which has resulted in a firm feeling. Sales of abattoir fresh killed were made at $12 per 100 lbs. The trade in hams and bacon is quiet, but with warmer weather a more active trade is expected.

COLLECTOR APPOINTED.

Chatham Merchants Make Good Progress With the Debt Collection System.

Chatham, May 26.—The new debt collecting system, now in process of formation, is the all absorbing subject among merchants at present.

The scheme was inaugurated at the meeting of the Retail Merchants a short time ago, when the executive presented its report. The report embodied the following clauses:

1. That the flat rate system of assessing members be adopted.

2. That the annual assessment be fixed at $10 a year for the collection department, exclusive of the $2 membership fee of the association.

3. That a 30-day post dated cheque or a 30-day note be accepted from prospective members, to be returned in case enough members are not secured to make the scheme a success.

4. That the proceeds of collections be divided equally among the different merchants to whom the debts are owed, irrespective of the amounts of their claims.

5. That the division of receipts be made semi-monthly, and that a written report be furnished monthly to every merchant joining the collection department. This report will show the names of the debtors, names of those removed from the list, and amounts paid.

6. That a secretary treasurer be appointed to look after the clerical work who shall have general supervision over the work of the collector.

The recommendations of the executive came in for considerable discussion of the educative variety, but one after another they were unanimously adopted. An interesting point was raised by J. H. Kadwell, who stated that he had only $2 on his books which he would need to place in the collector's hands, and who thought that $10 was a rather large sum to pay for collecting so small an amount. It was pointed out, however, that the $10 not only secured collections, but a protection from the incurring of bad accounts which meant far more to the merchant. Mr. Kadwell incidentally came in for some hearty congratulations upon having escaped the dead beats so easily—a circumstance probably due to the fact that he has been in business only a little more than a year, and sticks pretty closely to the cash principle.

The appointment of a collector also proved an interesting theme of discussion. F. J. Thomas was the man recommended, but Wm. Anderson, ex-president of the association, made a strong plea for the appointment of W. M. Murdock, the same gentleman who a month or more ago made the first definite proposition for handling the work. The association supported Mr. Anderson's nomination by a substantial majority, and the executive cheerfully accepted Mr. Murdock as the official collector. Mr. Murdock was formerly in the grocery business on Lorne avenue. More recently, he has been associated with the Confederation Life here.

Secretary J. W. Powers was appointed to look after the clerical work. The remuneration for the two offices was not fixed, but will be decided at a special meeting in two weeks, when the response of the merchants as a whole to the proposition will be known. The meeting was remarkably enthusiastic, and most of those present seized the opportunity to put their names down as subscribers to the collection department.

Since the meeting, Messrs. Murdock and Powers, assisted by members of the executive and individual merchants, have been at work among the merchants throughout the city, and report a hearty response.

Some Lively Tilts at Retail Grocers' Meeting

Circular of the Wholesale Fruit, Produce and Provision Men Upheld and Condemned—Arguments Pro and Con Put up by the Members Present—President Explains Why He Gave Interview to the Press—No Course Decided Upon.

Toronto, May 25.—Those present at the regular meeting of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association last week were given a splendid opportunity to give ventilation to their views regarding the circular recently sent out by the Wholesale Fruit, Produce and Provision Association of Toronto. The meeting was an exceedingly active one inasmuch as some of the grocers upheld the stand taken by the wholesalers while others condemned it. It was the largest meeting held for some momths and the most enthusiastic as well.

When the routine business had been attended to David Bell introduced the question as to wholesale fruit men selling to private individuals who were not employes. He explained that one of the dealers had requested that the association pass a resolution asking that this practice be discontinued and that the resolution be forwarded to the wholesalers' association. The latter would then have something to work on in order to refuse their friends further goods. Mr. Bell made a motion to the above effect but on the matter being discussed it was decided on motion of A. White to appoint a deputation to wait upon the Wholesale Fruit, Produce and Provision Association to state that the practice of selling to other than the retail trade was not approved of.

The committee appointed was A. White, chairman; D. Bell, R. Van Loan, D. McLean and Thos. Clarke.

A Lively Time.

The members turned their attention to the much-talked-of circular and upon this question, as intimated, the "house was divided."

R. Van Loan asked why the president had given an interview to a local paper in which he approved of the action of the wholesalers and had given his views as if they were those of the association. This was the beginning, and before the adjournment at 11 o'clock there were many stormy passages.

A. White, who had heard the minutes of the meeting, asked that the clause referring to the question be re-read. This showed that at the last meeting the circular was discussed and that none had disapproved of the action of the wholesalers.

J. S. Bond was soon on his feet to state that he had no recollection of the discussion. He entirely disapproved of the course taken by the wholesalers and of their black-list plan.

Not Worth Box of Lemons.

Later Mr. Bond said: "These men have, no doubt, a right to set their time limit, but the question is that the credit of a good grocer is impaired when his name goes on that black list. If I should neglect to pay for a case of lemons at a certain time, it places me in the position that I'm not worth a box of lemons. It is different from the black list we used to have when only those who were poor-pay got their names on it.

"These men have taken the retail grocers by the throat and have said: 'If you do not pay your name goes on the black list as 'poor pays.' '

"We are the outlet for these men's goods. Why didn't they ask our opinions and use them? I'm in sympathy with the cash system but it's the manner they are taking that I'm not in sympathy with. They must look on retailers as having little respectability. If we go on that black list the banks and other wholesalers might take it up

"It is an erroneous, heinous system and I condemn it," concluded Mr. Bond amid applause.

Has Good Credit Customers.

"I'm against it; they haven't any right to dictate what we shall do," emphatically declared ex-president C. F. Thorne.

"The next thing we know all the wholesalers will be on us. The travelers are against it too. I want to say that my credit customers are better than those who pay cash, and these men haven't any right to make it universal."

The President Explains.

In order to meet the criticism against the interview referred to, Thos. Clarke, the president, stepped out of the chair, which was temporarily filled by Bailey Snow.

"The question," said Mr. Clarke, "came up before the last meeting and there wasn't a dissenting voice. Some said they thought it to be a good thing, and I had this in mind when the reporter asked me for my views. Personally, I believe it is right.

"I have a right to say when my customers shall pay me and I have a right to say if they don't pay me as to whether they get any more goods.

"Fruit men have to pay for their fruit when they get it and it takes an enormous lot of money to carry on their business. I think it wrong to be carrying on a business with somebody else's money. Short terms of credit cuts out this business of cutting prices; and I know some who have sold goods at 10 per cent. under the proper price—the sooner these people are out of business the better.

"If we could only get such a system working for us we would all be pretty well pleased. As it is now, the grocer and butcher get what's left out of a family's purse and the sooner we get down to a cash business the better. I thought this association endorsed the cash system, and when I spoke to the paper the other day I did so because this association had upheld the fruiters' action in establishing the shorter credits."

More Opposition.

"I'm opposed to it as far as the north is from the south on principle," was D. McLeon's ultimatum. "It is ridiculous that we should have paid thousands of dollars of our good money to these men, and now if we go in debt to them for two dollars we go on their black list as poor pay.

"They shouldn't do it collectively; individually they are justified to tell me when I should pay them."

No Use to Complain.

A. White took the stand that there was no sense in allowing a name to go voluntarily on the black list.

"If I must pay c.o.d. I'm beat; it is only childish play to allow our names to go on the black list for we're beat when we have to pay cash.

"I cannot see what we can do to prevent them," he said. "We may say it's mean and contemptible, but what can we do?

"Labor unions say that they must place all men in the same rank as regards to the wages they receive because it's so awkward to grade them. These fruit men have done the same thing. As to whether the thing is right or wrong it depends on the way we look at it. They think they're right and some of us think they're wrong. If we were placed in their position it would be right."

R. Van Loan did not believe that the wholesalers should say what the retailers should do. Others thought it was an injustice to those who pay up and that it would soon right itself.

Catches Price-Cutters.

David Bell favored the action of the wholesalers. "It catches those who undersell and spoil business and it does away with the pedlar nuisance to a considerable extent. There will not be one-quarter as many of them on the street.

"Personally, I'm in favor of it; if this thing had been in vogue years ago we'd have been far better off and I'm strongly in favor of it."

Mr. Bond: "Have we to submit to a baker's dozen of these fellows? I'm a pup of the old British bull dog and I'll fight to the finish."

Believe in Cash System.

"I think the only system is the cash system," said A. J. Coniam, "and I think the nearer we all get to it the better."

The black list did not affect him but he thought that if the retailers wanted to beat the wholesalers they could do it by not doing any buying for one week.

Wanted An Amicable Settlement.

"We all know of the abuse of the credit system," remarked H. Tolchard, " and I believe the wholesalers had not only in mind the good of themselves but the good of the retailers as well when they shortened the credit terms. If they had thought it was going to be objectionable they would not have done it and I think if they were properly approached they would adjust matters correctly."

Mr. White also believed that the differences could be righted in a peaceable way.

"They are as reasonable a lot of men as we are, and we all do things wrong sometimes ourselves."

Bailey Snow remarked that so far as he could see the only people who were kicking were those who had always paid their bills.

President Clark again left the chair to re-enter the discussion. "There is

Why it pays the dealer to concentrate on Christie's Biscuits—

YOU may have the brightest and cleanest store in your town. The first impression people get of it may be most favorable.

That first impression is important, but it won't go far unless backed up by the right goods.

For instance, a woman is attracted to your store by its appearance of cleanliness —by an atmosphere that seems to indicate the best of everything. When she gets inside let her see, prominently displayed, such standard lines as Christie's Biscuits and her confidence is won.

If she's thinking of biscuits, "Christie's" is the first name that comes to her mind. Other brands may be good, but she knows that Christie's are good—and that they cost no more.

By the use of your own personal recommendation you may persuade her to try another brand, on which your profit is slightly larger. What is the result?

This customer figures that you have deliberately deceived her, and unless she's very dull she will see your motive ot once. Right here is where your store gets a bl ck eye—and loses trade.

For sound business reasons, it will pay you to always give Christie's Biscuits the preference. In the first place they sell quicker than any others, and in the second place you can always rely on them giving thorough satisfaction.

Concentrate on Christie's and you'll find the volume of your biscuit trade increase to such an extent that the little extra profit per box on other brands will present no temptation.

Besides, Christie's Biscuits help you sell more than biscuits.

no sense," he said, "in standing on the black list for spite. Every wholesaler whom I deal with knows whether my credit is good or not and even if I were on the black-list it wouldn't affect it."

As a matter of fact Mr. Clarke was on the black list for a time, but he was not aware that he owed anything.

"I straightened it out right away," he said, "and it didn't do me any harm."

Mr. White thought that not liking the black-list and going on it voluntarily was like not liking getting drowned and jumping into the lake.

J. H. Johnston stated that a few years ago a similar arrangement was made by the wholesalers. One or two broke the contract, some got credit and it was all off, but he believed they were solid this time.

After a great deal more discussion the matter was allowed to rest with no course decided upon and the meeting adjourned with the house still divided.

OCCASIONAL OBSERVATIONS.

What the Retail Grocers are Saying In Their Stores About That Circular.

It does not make any difference whether they get paid once a week or once a month. Any woman who has sense should know enough to pay as she goes along.

The retail merchants are a pack of fools.

The wholesale men squeeze the life out of the retailer.

The wholesalers should have their money as quickly as possible, but they have no right to lay down a cast iron rule.

Let me tell you, this thing will do good; it will teach even those who can pay to be more prompt.

A man in business should be a business man and not a careless, easy going humbug.

If the wholesalers had acted wisely and taken the retail association into their confidence and arranged with them on better terms they could have improved their condition without a hitch.

I would like to know whether any independent man would stand the threat, that was thrown out by the wholesalers.

Some of the retailers grew into the practice of downright carelessness, through the kindness of the wholesale men.

If any man in business is not prompt with his payments he is a nuisance to the trade.

I like promptness, but I don't like my man to tell me to do so and so, "or I will put you in the black list." It is too harsh.

Why can't people pay cash for their groceries? Go down to the theatres and see how they throw down the cash, and many of them have unpaid grocery bills.

Hundreds of people go away to some summer resort, and come home and boast of the good time they had. But they don't say that it was done with the grocer's money or rather with the wholesaler's money.

To give credit to some people is mistaken kindness. It will not help them. but they will spend their money foolishly and then get into trouble.

We want the wholesalers to withdraw those offensive clauses, and we will do all we can to encourage prompt payment.

The wholesale men have been too good to the retailers and have spoiled them. They will have trouble to get them in line, for they have taken a very unwise course in putting them all in the same class.

If the wholesale men are not well paid by some. why don't they go for them or cut them out, and not treat us all like children by trying to frighten us with a threat. It is childish and good men should not tolerate it for a moment.

The wholesale men are right. They want their money and they have a right to it.

Why should we all be treated like scalawags when the greatest number of us are honest people?

I have always paid my bills promptly, but I won't do it now.

The retailers have no business to give credit with the wholesaler's money.

This giving credit to the people for things they eat is the worst trick that that has ever been taught them.

Flour, Cereals and Confectionery Department

High Prices of Grains Cause Cereal Goods to Advance—Scarcity of Ontario Wheat Noticeable—Confectionery Trade Broadening Out Among the Grocers.

The cereal market is at the present time in an interesting condition, the essential cause being the scarcity of grains. Ontario wheat can hardly be secured and in many parts of the west stocks are exceedingly low. Some Ontario millers have been offering as high as $1.40 and cannot get much even at the figure. Cereal prices have, therefore, been advancing. The advance as observed in Ontario and Manitoba is from 40 to 50 cents, and reports from Vancouver indicate that Graham flour and bread have both risen in price.

The high price of grains and of their products will likely have some effect on the profits to manufacturers of cereal breakfast foods, the prices of which seldom change.

Reports from all over Canada indicate regular increases in the number of grocers handling confectionery, departments for this side line being opened everywhere. The retail merchants are beginning to realize the advantages of confectionery, and they are desirous of having a share in the profits going.

TORONTO.

FLOUR—The special feature in the wheat market is the scarcity of Ontario winter wheat. While Manitoba wheat makes a stronger flour for bread, it is the winter wheat that is required for pastry, and especially for biscuits. The reason of this scarcity is the fact that large quantities were exported to Mexico. That country had a short crop, and as they had to import wheat they reduced their protective duty from 60c a bushel to 20c. This opened a market for our wheat, which was bought up before the rise at from 95c to 98c a bus. Not being able to make a reliable estimate on the unseen wheat which was supposed to be in the hands of farmers, the real situation was not discovered until it was too late. It is still uncertain what quantities are held by the farmers, but it is feared that the quantity is very much below what was expected. Scarcely any is coming out, but this may be owing to the busy season for the farmer. Seeding is now about completed and whatever may be in their hands will be brought out, for which they will get about $1.35 a bushel.

HINTS TO BUYERS.

Information supplied by sellers but for which the editors of The Grocer do not hold themselves responsible.

Since it has been proved that acetylene gas was capable of producing a light and a good light, too, and by which colors can be distinguished as easily as in daylight, many inferior machines for generating have been put on the market. This condition naturally caused dissatisfaction and for a time it seemed as if acetylene gas was doomed. More had to be learned. These difficulties and discouragements had to be overcome. Men of science and mechanics studied and experimented with success and proved that to produce acetylene gas certain conditions were necessary. A generator must be built of the proper dimensions of the best material and workmanship, yet withal simple enough in design that any person could operate them with safety.

There should be no overheating of gas during its generation. This overheating was the greatest trouble with primitive machines in which the heat was (known to sometimes rise to 1,000 degrees.) It is no wonder, now that its nature is understood, that acetylene failed to give satisfaction in the past. Unless the acetylene is washed, and dried, relieving it of impurities, the bubbles destroyed, filtered, and made at a uniform temperature, it is impossible to get good results. The National Gas Generator, manufactured by the National Acteylene Gas Company, Sherbrooke, Que., is said to fulfil these requisites. It is well made, automatic, simple, durable and is easily recharged, and cleaned. It is provided with a bell or floating gasometer which gives uniform pressure to the gas, and has but one place where to feed the water. It has an agitator or shaker, contains sufficient water to generate the gas and sufficient water to keep it cool. The National, which washes gas, destroys all bubbles, filters the gas, dries it, and gives a bright mellow light, is approved by the Canadian Fire Underwriters' Association. The company also has in hand certain new and useful improvements in flush tanks invented by J. O. Brousseau, of North Hatley, Que. By these improvements, which have been patented, the syphoning of the tank is made much more certain, while the defective closing of the inlet valves and outlet flush pipes, and consequent waste of water, is prevented.

O.K.—This familiar combination of letters has been traced as having originated in California in the gold digging days, when some rather unlettered millionaire appended them to a document to signify that it was "Orl Kreet" (all correct). This concise method of approving of an account found many admirers in the States where it became widely adopted, and in thousands of telegraph offices in the United Kingdom O.K. is the code-signal that all is satisfactory. It is 35 years ago since this appropriate appellation was given to "O.K." Sauce by the manufacturers Geo. Mason & Co., Walham Green, London, and which is now world renowned for its absolute purity and high quality, being particularly piquant and appetizing. Messrs. Mason offer $5,000 to any person who can prove by analysis or otherwise that "O.K." Sauce is made from anything other than absolutely pure and finest quality ingredients. "O.K." Sauce has recently been introduced into Canada, for which markets Messrs. Mason are putting up a special 12-oz. "Giant" bottle instead of the 10-oz., which makes it now the largest sized bottle of its kind in the world, and which is retailed at 25c.. We understand from Messrs. S. T. Nishimura & Co., its Canadian representatives, that they are doing a very large business already with it, receiving repeat orders daily, and they are very sanguine as to its future popularity in Canada.

Cold Spring Lemonade Power is a new line being introduced to the trade by S. H. Ewing & Sons, Montreal. The article seems to have made quite a favorable impression upon trade and consumer alike, considering the short time it has been on the market. Lemonade is secured simply by adding cold water. The packages, lithographed tins, are very neat, and sell at popular prices.

Versatile Flour

What does it mean—to you?

IF YOU were about to buy a horse at a good figure to work for you, you would be careful to buy one that could take you up hill as well as down, that would serve you not only on the level, but in the broken country. For you don't want to buy two horses, only one.

¶ See the housewife in her bakeshop. Every month she averages 50 pounds of flour—is it your flour? She wants a flour to make her a good pastry cook as well as a good baker; she can't use soft wheat flour or even the "hard-soft" kind, for they don't make bread like FIVE ROSES. Why? Ask Nature why—she makes the wheat we buy!

¶ If she uses cheap flour for pastry, she must buy bread flour also. But she doesn't want two flours in the house if she can help it, and she can—if you give her FIVE ROSES.

¶ In FIVE ROSES is contained the rich elastic gluten of the hardest spring wheat in the Northwest, the bread producer famed as the cause of lofty, well-piled, golden brown loaves such as none other can produce. Then, such puff paste as FIVE ROSES can deliver! And when a flour makes good puff paste there's nothing in the pastry line it will not accomplish. We know, for we speak from experience; we've eaten both—and will yet eat more.

¶ FIVE ROSES is a flour with a mission. Not made for bread alone, nor for pastry cooks alone. Made for both in one barrel—a two-power flour unlike any you have ever known, as different as cream is from milk. Because only such parts of the purest hard spring wheat grown in Manitoba are used as will make FIVE ROSES the real housewife's delight, every recipe a success.

FIVE ROSES

Double - Barreled Success

¶ Look through your customers' spectacles just this once. Think what it means to her to find success always in the same barrel. It takes versatile flour to do that, efficient flour. Bear this in mind, also: If a woman comes to you to buy this double-barreled flour and you let her get out without buying (because you cannot give what you have not got), somebody else will get her money and good will. We are partners in this deal, so we say—"Get it yourself!"

The Grocer's Encyclopedia From Week to Week

Origin of the Apricot and Its Commercial Value—Where the Tree Thrives—District From Which Canadian Supply Comes—Uses of the Fruit.

APRICOT—The apricot belongs to a very numerous genus of fruit bearing trees and trees which differ widely in their character. The genus prunus comprises all the varieties of the cherry, the laurels properly so called, the plum, the sloe and a number of others that are never cultivated for the sake of their fruit. Many of the genus are poisonous, and though the fruit of some of them is agreeable to the taste and safe enough when taken in limited quantities there is none of the family that can be indulged in to excess with impunity.

Columella says that the Persians sent the peach which is of the same family as the apricot to Egypt to poison the inhabitants, and species of apricot is called by the people of Barbary, "Matza Franca" or the killer of Christians. All these evil qualities are, however, destroyed by cultivation; for it is the privilege of man not only to distinguish between the good and evil properties of vegetables, but to eradicate the evil in many cases by his skill and industry.

Where the Apricot Grows.

The apricot is very widely diffused in Asia and grows upon the slopes of the barren mountains of China. Many species of it are cultivated and, as they ripen earlier than the peach or nectarine they are in considerable estimation. Some varieties are exceedingly delicious, and the Persians in their figurative language, call the apricot of Iran, "the seed of the sun."

It seems that the apricot was known in Italy in the time of Dioscorides, and that it got its name precocia from ripening earlier than some other fruits. The Romans set little value on the apricot as it was often referred to as something of inconsequential use. The scientific name for the apricot is Prunes Armeniaca which it derives from the fact that it almost covers the slopes of the Caucasus and other mountains in and about Armenia, up almost to the margin of the snow. The general opinion that it is a native of Armenia has been controverted by M. Regnier, a French naturalist, who contends that as Armenia is a high mountainous country, the climate of which resembles that of middle Europe, it cannot possibly be the country of a tree which begins to flower so early that its blossoms are often destroyed by the frost, notwithstanding every care of the cultivator.

The apricot, too, although it has been cultivated in Europe for many ages never sprang up from seeds in any of our forests, neither has it been found wild either in Armenia or in any of the neighboring provinces. M. Regnier is of the opinion that it is a native of Africa, and that its limits appear to be a parallel between the Niger and the range of the Atlas mountains, from whence it has been carried by cultivation towards the north.

Its Uses in China.

Apricots are very plentiful and in great variety in China, and the natives employ them variously in the arts. From the wild tree the pulp of whose fruit is of little value, but which has a large kernel, they extract an oil; they preserve the fruit wet in all its flavor, and they make lozenges of the clarified juice which afford a very agreeable beverage when dissolved in water.

The apricot attains the size of a very large tree in Japan. It also flourishes in such abundance upon the Oases, as to be dried and carried to Egypt as an article of commerce. In those sultry climates, the flavor is exquisite, though the fruit is small. The apricot was first brought to England in 1524 by Woolf, the gardener to Henry VIII.

The Canadian Supply.

Apricots are almost exclusively used in a dried state for cooking purposes. Tarts, pies and other things of this nature are made from them. Canada uses an increasing amount of the fruit in this way every year. She derives her supplies from Eastern Mediterranean points.

GREATEST OF CONVENTIONS.

The National Association of Retail Grocers of the United States will hold their annual convention at Portland, Ore., from June 2nd to 5th. This is expected to be the greatest and most important convention ever held by the retailers of the United States.

TO BURN THEIR COFFEE.

The state of Sao Paulo, Brazil, has offered a proposition, to the Brazilian Government, which, it is said, has been approved by the latter body of burning one-tenth of the coffee crop, each year and doing away with the 9,500,000 bag limitation under which agreement the Sao Paulo bond issue was recently made.

A CLERK'S APPRECIATION.

By a Grocery Clerk.

If you will kindly allow me space in your interesting paper, I would like to congratulate Delmere D. Butler on his splendid article in relation to the clerk and his employer, which appeared in your special number. The sentiments expressed will be heartily endorsed by every young man who is anxious to be a good clerk in a store. I also noticed a few weeks ago the article from Winnipeg where a grocer declared that it is impossible to get as good clerks now as some years ago. I think Mr. Butler's article shows plainly where the trouble lies.

In most of our stores the clerk receives very little help and encouragement from his employer. The latter seems to work on the idea that the more fault he can find with a clerk's work, the cheaper he can get his service, and for this reason he keeps a clerk in ignorance of a good many things which would make a clerk more cheerful and more valuable in the store. Your paper is getting more interesting every week, and as a clerk who is anxious to be a good clerk, but who never had a good chance, I would like to see the clerks take an active interest in this question and I think we could soon prove to our employers that the trouble is not in the material, but rather in lack of opportunity, and want of proper help from them.

Editor's Note.—We are pleased to receive this letter and we will gladly devote a liberal space each week to letters from clerks on subjects pertaining to their interests.

REMODELLING THE STORE.

H. A. Adam & Co. have purchased and taken possession of the general store of J. M. Gilpin, Hawkstone. The store interior is being renovated and up-to-date shelving and counters are being added. The new proprietors are also remodelling the store including a better daylight system. A handsome silent salesman will be placed across the front of the store. When these improvements are completed the store will be a credit to the business places of Hawkstone. Mr. Adam was formerly employed as train despatcher on the C. P. R. at Kenora.

BETTER FRUIT CONDITIONS.

Cooling Stations for British Columbia Are Outcome of Conference.

Winnipeg, May 25.—A few days ago several local C.P.R. officials, including F. W. Peters, assistant to 2nd vice-president, and J. Lanigan, district freight traffic manager, attended a gathering of British Columbia fruit growers and government officials of that province, for the purpose of bettering the conditions of carrying British Columbia fruit, and in so doing aid the fruit growing industry of that province.

For some time there has been an unpleasant feeling existing between the fruit growers and the C.P.R. upon whom they depended to carry and distribute their produce over the greater part of Canada. It was agreed therefore to come together and put matters right for the benefit of all concerned.

The object of the meeting was realized and much to the advantage of the producers. They, however, came to understand that the C.P.R. were not so much to blame for the condition in which their fruit arrived on outer markets as was considered. The trouble has been that the fruit had not been properly cooled before it was enclosed in the refrigerator cars and sent en route for its destination. As a result the fruits, chiefly apples would shrink and spoil on the way and would not appear attractive on the retail market.

The delegates took steps to remedy this by deciding to build cooling plants in which to store the fruits before they were loaded for shipment. The C.P.R. will build a refrigerator car barge to run across the Okanagan Lake in British Columbia, in which fruit from the packers will be placed. Another cooling station will be built at the landing point in which the fruit will be stored before loading. In this way the fruits will not of necessity have to sit in open barges and docks exposed to the heat before they are subjected to the close refrigerator shipping car. The cooling barge and station will gradually prepare the fruit for the car which will preserve it from chilling and the resultant shrivelling.

The fruit growers and the government of the province agreed to co-operate in building similar cooling stations at the different shipping points.

This was the only issue discussed at the convention. When this difficulty is overcome it is thought that B. C. fruit could be landed on Canadian markets in as good condition as Washington fruits which are coming in and taking the place of Canadian produce to a certain extent. The duty and freight rate has been disadvantageous to the Washington fruits, yet these goods come in abundantly simply because they were landed in better condition.

CHARTER OBTAINED.

An Ontario charter has been granted to the Toronto Fruit, Produce and Provision Association creating Henry Watts Thorpe, James Thomas Madden; Andrew Gunn; William Holland Despard and John Joseph Fee, all of Toronto, and any others who have or may thereafter become subscribers to the Memorandum of Agreement of the Company, and their successors, respectively, a Corporation for the objects following: (a) To secure a more intimate relation amongst themselves as produce and fruit merchants and the like; (b) To regulate business transactions; (c) To collect in a systematic manner reliable information and statistics relating to the produce and fruit trade, and the like and similar trades; (d) To aid in enforcing just and equitable rules and regulations in the conduct of business, and (e) To exchange information relating to credits and hold periodical meetings for the discussion of questions affecting the said or like or similar trade.

TO WATCH U. S. FRUIT.

There will be no special privileges given to United States fruit which is imported and distributed into Canada, according to J. A. Ruddick, Chief Dairy and Cold Storage Commissioner. By this time Mr. Ruddick has reached British Columbia, where he will visit the various fruit growing districts.

He has jurisdiction over the Fruit Marks Act. and intends to enforce it.

"I am aware," he says, "that it has been claimed that some of the provisions of the Fruit Marks act do not apply to imported fruit, but that is not our interpretation of it, and we have the opinion of the department of justice in support of this view. Of course we cannot go into the United States and compel packers to grade and mark their fruit according to the requirements of Canadian law, but we can and will insist on its being so graded and marked before it is distributed in this country. That puts the responsibility on the importer and the inspectors will see that the law is observed. It would be obviously unfair to both Canadian growers and consumers if American fruit was allowed to come in under special privileges."

It is likely that some additional inspectors will be appointed.

BIG STRAWBERRY CROP.

A despatch from Dover, Delaware, states that the strawberry season of 1909, which is expected to make some rich men out of poor farmers in Delaware, has opened. Never in the history of peninsular fruit growing have such luxurious berries hung from the vines. From $750,000 to $1,000,000 is the estimate placed on the crop of Delaware's three counties alone. It is admitted, however, that the million dollar figure will only be realized in case good solid prices prevail throughout the season. The $750,000 estimate allows an average of 3½ cents a quart for the ripened fruit.

THE QUALITY MAN IN BUSINESS.

By Edwin W. Moore, in System.

The hardest thing that I know of in selling is to show a customer that first cost is not last cost; to make him understand that while the price of some goods may be much lower in the beginning, they are almost invariably dearer in the end; to show him that almost always an article is worth just about what it costs; in short to impress him with the meaning of "quality."

No word in the vocabulary of business is more pregnant with significance than that one word "quality." You may apply it to goods, to service, to ability; this one truth is universally the same—no extravagant assertion of present advantage, no false logic of economy, can long make headway against downright merit in merchandise or men.

Who are the biggest men in the world to-day?

They are the men who have recognized the value of reaching the highest standard of efficiency, whether it be in the manufacture of a commodity or the rendering of a professional service. They may call themselves bankers, lawyers, engineers or ministers. As a matter of fact they are selling for themselves or someone else and the best salesman gets the highest price. They have stepped beyond the dividing line of quality that marks off the great from the mediocre. They know that the great salesman sells his commodity at his own price; the "medium good" man sells his at the customers' price.

True it is that the great are few, the mediocre many, but the few who have scored highest in the business game are the men who have built on "quality."

Talking to the Point

CLASSIFIED WANT ADS get right down to the point at issue. If you want something, say so in a few well-chosen words. Readers like that sort of straight-from-the-shoulder-talk, and that is the reason why condensed ads are so productive of the best kind of results.

CLASSIFIED WANT ADS are always noticed. They are read by wide-awake, intelligent grocers, who are on the look-out for favorable opportunities to fill their requirements.

TRY A CONDENSED AD IN THE CANADIAN GROCER.

Any Boy who has One Cent can Turn it Into Ten Dollars

One cent invested in a post card to us will bring you information about how we start you in business, so that you can earn money for yourself. You can make plenty of pocket money all the time—money you will enjoy more because you made it in business for yourself. Hundreds of boys are doing this. SO CAN YOU.

No money required. We furnish capital.

We also give prizes. There is a prize for every boy, whether he lives in a large city or a little village. Very fine prizes have gone to fellows in small places. Don't delay a minute. Write us to-day. A post card will do.

It's the same in business competition. The Western Canada market is a profitable one, the people were never more prosperous, nor the general outlook more reassuring. Thousands of settlers are taking up land every day.

The Western Market is growing all the time. Like a healthy, well fed youth it cannot help it—it's natural.

Have you something worth selling to either the retail or wholesale trade? Let us assist you in getting your share of the business. Our facilities are unequalled; our rates are reasonable.

How a Well-Known Encyclopedia Roasts Spring Scales

The New International Encyclopedia, Vol. 16, Page 109, says:

"THE FORCE OF THE SPRING VARIES WITH THE TEMPERATURE, WHICH ALTERS THE LENGTH AND ELASTICITY OF THE WIRE AND RENDERS IMPOSSIBLE PRECISE MEASUREMENTS."

Thus one of the world's greatest authorities has investigated and found unreliable all spring scales. Can you afford, therefore, to use a spring scale which is generally known as an unreliable weighing machine, a scale so unreliable as to make the weighing of your goods (your money) guesswork?

The Toledo "Springless" Automatic Scale

is always exact and accurate. It has no springs. The Toledo is the only Automatic Springless Cylinder Computing Scale in the world, and the most durable and reliable weighing machine.

NOTE:—We invite comparative demonstrations, in your store with any other scale on the market.

Famous Dayton Scales

The Scale with the Guarantee, and the Guarantee backed up by our Canadian Factory

The scale that saves time, money and worry. The Dayton is the only scale that is fitted with an automatic thermostat, which regulates the scale in every temperature. No other scale maker can use this wonderful invention, as we have all patents on it. Remember, the Dayton Scale fitted with the automatic thermostat is always right. Hot or cold weather makes no difference with it. Other scales may change in cold weather or hot weather, but the Dayton does not.

We say to the merchants of Canada : "The Dayton Scale will positively stop the giving of overweight." We can prove it to you. The thousands of merchants who have bought Dayton Scales prove this every day.

There are more Dayton Scales sold than all other computing scales combined. There is a reason for this, and the Dayton Scale is acknowledged to be the finest scale in the world.

When you buy, be sure you get the finest, and remember the Dayton costs no more than the cheaply made grade of computing scales offered on the market to-day.

Send in your card, and we will have a scale demonstrated to you. You will be under no obligation to buy it.

Do not buy the imitation. Buy the original famous Dayton Scale.

How Lindsay Merchants Protect Each Other

Grocers of That Town, Although Not Organized, Are on Friendly Terms—Stamping Out the Credit System by Thorough Inquiry Into Financial Conditions of New Customers—Stand Together in Maintaining Reasonable Prices.

(Staff Correspondence.)

Lindsay, June 2.—As a rule merchants engaged in a particular class of trade in a city or town where there is no organization to bring them together on friendly terms, are at loggerheads with each other and always willing to "cut one another's throats" in a business transaction.

Lindsay is an exception. The grocers of that town have nothing in common so far as an association is concerned. They are fortunate in that they reside in the heart of a splendid farming community and that there is enough business passing to give them a comfortable living—probably a little more to those who use the more progressive advertising and up-to-date methods.

The most interesting feature, however, in connection with their general methods is that they look after each other's interests to more than the ordinary extent—they assist each other in watching the deliquent and they seldom cut prices.

Decline of Credit System.

None of the Lindsay grocers sell strictly for cash. Nevertheless business is gradually working that way, inasmuch as new customers whose financial standing is unknown, or which cannot be considererd good upon minute investigation, are refused credit.

Lindsay is not immune from those who after paying cash for a month ask for credit because "my man is out of work just now for a few days," or "the baby was sick last week and we have to pay the doctor bill." Plenty of this class still hover around, but their "innocent" requests are not always complied with.

Where do you live?
What does your husband do?
Where did you come from to Lindsay?
With whom did you deal last?

These are a few of the questions fired at the credit petitioner and even if they are satisfactorily answered the merchant does not always relent. He calls up his fellow grocer, with whom the visitor has last dealt, to determine the financial standing of the new customer. If an account of five, ten or twenty dollars is owing not much credit is given. He also 'phones the factory where the husband is supposed to be working to find out whether he is actually there or not.

A Specific Case.

D. Adams, of Adams Bros., told of an incident in connection with the subject: "A fellow came in here one day and asked if he could have a few days in which to pay for his goods. He said he worked with one of the railways. He had recently come to Lindsay and was starting housekeeping, and wanted a monthly account opened. After ordering the goods he thought he would take some with him and have the rest delivered.

"In the meantime my brother called up the roundhouse to make a few inquiries and found that the foreman had never heard of him. The result was that we had to refuse him the goods and we later discovered we were quite justified when we found there was no such person living on the street he gave."

The above is only one example of how Lindsay grocers are stamping out the existence of the "dead-beat." They are friendly with each other and give all information requested by their brother merchants.

"A woman called here this morning," said L. A. Primeau, "and wanted credit but after asking her a few questions I said I couldn't open any new accounts just now."

In this way the cash system is being encouraged and the grocers here are not going out of the way to contract for any bad accounts.

Not Much Price Cutting.

Not only do the grocers in the Victoria capital aid each other in keeping clear of the slow pays, but they are no price slashers. They figure out their selling prices on a reasonable profit basis and stick to them. Occasionally, of course, in the case of perishable goods like fruits, they may see fit to sell at a discount, but outside of that they maintain prices.

"There is no necessity for us cutting prices," remarked one grocer, "when we have such a splendid farming community around us. The farmers are all prosperous and we are all doing a good trade."

Mr. Killen, of Spratt and Killen put it this way: "Farmers are getting more money every month and they are paying more regularly. Years ago they used to sell their butter in tubs in the Fall as well as their grain after the Fall threshing—and we got paid once a year.

"The proper system is the cash system and things are gradually working that way. We run our credit business on the monthly account plan and we watch pretty well the slow pays; but even with the greatest of care we lose a little sometimes."

Would Like General Delivery.

T. Brady is much interested in the general delivery system in vogue in St. Mary's and thinks it might work all right in Lindsay. He believes that if a good reliable man took hold of the contract he could make it pay, and thus save the merchants a lot of trouble and expense.

"I wish some one would take it up," he added.

He was also interested in the Guelph collection system and stated that there was some talk of forming one in Lindsay. He believed it would work out well.

"I keep good goods, and use my customers as well as I can, and when it comes to deciding what I shall buy, I get the dearest, providing it's the best." These are some of J. H. Fleury's methods of doing business.

He makes the quality of his goods a strong talking point, and always lets his customers know why he sells at any price or why he changes one.

Makes Use of Readers.

Occasionally Mr. Fleury inserts readers in the local press and finds them profitable. These always contain the idea: "Our goods are our reputation and chief advertisement."

Mr. Fleury has an interesting career as a grocer and takes pride in telling of the success he has made. He began business 13 years ago and for 3 years he had to carry his books home every night, not being able to purchase a safe.

He is another admirer of the cash system. "I think the day will come when we will be doing a strictly cash trade and there is no reason in the world why we shouldn't. The farmers are now in a position to get money as often as they want it, so that times have changed since I was young."

TO MAINTAIN RAISIN PRICES.

Efforts are being made in Smyrna, by the raisin packers, to arrange for a raisin convention for the purpose of seeing what can be done toward maintaining the price of Sultana raisins in better fashion than at present. In England, in the past six months, Sultanas have dropped in price at least 40 per cent. The shippers are becoming alarmed, and they will endeavor to have the Turkish Government back them somewhat after the manner in which the Greek Government makes it easier for the currant packers in that country. A "retention system" operated in connection with the Sultana raisin business would be a boon to packers. Previous to the revolution in Turkey some progress had been made with the Government. What will be done under the new regime remains to be seen.

An Accounting System for Retail Merchants

Accountant Claims That Majority of Failures Are Due to Unsystematic Methods—Books Necessary to Properly Look After a Retail Business—Address Given at Recent Meeting of Guelph Retail Merchants Association.

By G. R. Cooper, of R. J. Cooper & Co., Chartered Accountants, Toronto and Guelph.

In presenting this paper on Retail Store Accounting, I will endeavor to point out the advantages and the necessity for a proper system of accounts being kept by the retail merchant, and also roughly outline a simple yet complete system, which, with a few variations to suit the conditions of different lines of businesses, can be applied to the average retail store.

As I have a few rather uncomplimentary remarks to make in regard to the present method of retail store book-keeping I hope my hearers will take no offence as I am quite aware that a storekeeper is not a book-keeper and could not be expected to have his books in anything like reasonable shape without some assistance from one who knows.

The average retail merchant keeps books for three reasons, viz.:—

(1) To keep track of his cash
(2) To keep track of what his customers owe him;
(3) To keep track of what he owes his creditors.

Now what I want to point out are other reasons for keeping proper record of the transactions of your business. While the above information is absolutely necessary, still it does not give you any information as to whether your business is progressing or retrograding, or running at a profit or a loss, and you have nothing to guide you in the conduct of your business throughout the year.

As a rule I believe the majority of the retail storekeepers take stock once a year and ascertain their present net worth, and if same is greater than at the end of the previous year, why the difference is the net profit, or if it is less than that of the previous year, why the difference is the net loss. If the result is a loss, the question arises, how did it occur? In the absence of a proper classification of accounts and proper records being kept, it is impossible to tell. I venture to say that the majority of the failures to-day are attributed to bad bookkeeping and unsystematic methods.

Watch the Departments.

Every retailer, who handles more than one line of goods, should keep track of same separately in his books in order that he can tell how much he made in each department, and which department is paying him the best. If he finds one department is running at a loss, he ascertains the reason why, and remedies the trouble or discontinues that line. If he does not keep separate department accounts he would not know whether or not he was loosing or making in each and every department. If the business was paying as a whole, but he was loosing in one department, he would never be aware of it, and his profits would be diminished each year by the amount of the loss of this particular department.

He does not only want to know what he is doing in each department, but he also wants to know whether his sales for any particular month this year are greater than or less than for the corresponding month last year, and whether his sales are increasing or decreasing, and to what extent. He also wants to know what are the sales of each of his clerks and whether their sales are increasing or decreasing in order that he can keep proper track of his employees. He also wants to know whether his expenses are increasing or decreasing, and if increasing, why? By having a statement laid before him each month giving all the above information, he is enabled to locate defects and shortcomings and remedy them, and not allow them to continue to the end of the year which may mean disaster. The storekeeper who keeps his books in a up-to-date manner and is guided by the information rendered him each month is the man who is going to succeed. These statements are to him what a chart is to the captain of a ship, and without them he liable to run on the rocks at any time. It is just as important for the retail storekeeper to keep in close touch with all matters pertaining to his business as it is for a large manufacturer or wholesaler.

In these days of keen competition, a business man must know where he is at in order to sell at close prices and still make a profit. It is also important that he should know what percentage his profits are on his capital invested after making proper allowance for his services. I cannot impress upon you too strongly the advantages to be derived from a proper classification of your accounts and proper records being kept.

I will now proceed to give a rough outline of the necessary accounts to be kept and the proper classification of same in the ledger, and some of the necessary books of record in which to enter the transactions of the business in order to obtain the information desired.

Accounts to be Kept.

The classification of accounts and arrangement of same in the ledger should be:

Capital or Proprietor's Account.
Mortages or Fixed Liabilities.
Floating Liabilities.
Fixed Assets.
Cash or Available Assets.
Sales divided into different Departments.
Expenses of conducting each Department.
General Expenses.
Interest on any Mortgages or Bank Interest.
Profit and Loss Account.

The books to be kept to provide necessary information are:

General Ledger, which contains all the above accounts.
Sales Ledger (Loose Leaf), which contains customers accounts.
Sales Book, in which will be entered all the sales divided into the different Departments.
Purchase Book, in which will be entered all Invoices of Purchases, divided into Departments.
Bill Book, in which will be entered all Notes, Drafts and Bills Receivable.
Cash Book, in which will be entered all Cash Received and Paid Out, including Bank Account.
Counter Check Book, which will be a record of all sales.

How to Use Various Books.

Each clerk would have a separate check book so that each clerk's sales could be kept track of. These should be totaled up and entered in a book kept for the purpose so that comparisons could be made with the different clerks, and also with the different months. The sales should also be entered in the Sales Book each day and the postings made from this book to the Ledger. It is only necessary to enter the date, the customer's name, the amount, and distribute same under its proper department. The totals are carried into their proper accounts in the General Ledger at the end of the month. The Sales Tickets would be fyled in order in which they are entered in the Sales Book, so that they could be referred to readily at any time. All Invoices for goods purchased should be entered in the Purchase Book and distributed under the different Departments, and as they are entered they should be numbered. They would then be placed in a folder having thirty-one compartments, one for each day of the month, and placed in the compartment bearing the date on which the bill falls due, in order to secure discounts. After having been paid and the necessary record made on same, it should be fyled under its proper number. An index of these Invoices should be kept for ready reference.

In the General Ledger should be an account called "Accounts Payable," in which should be entered the total purchases each month and the total payments on account of same, the difference being the amount of unpaid bills, which can be verified by totaling the bills in the folder. A similar account should also appear in the General Ledger, called "Accounts Receivable." in which will be entered the total Sales for the month and the total payments on account of same, the difference being amount owing by customers, which can be verified by totaling the amount of outstanding accounts in the Customer's Ledger. When accounts are getting old and doubtful they should be transfered to a separate binder so that they would not be lost sight of, and credit to such customers discontinued. Collections of such accounts should be carefully looked after in order to avoid losses from Bad Debts as much as possible.

It is also important that all the Sales Tickets should be gone over by the bookkeeper in order to see that prices, extensions and additions are correct. This also applies to Invoices for goods purchased, in order to see that goods are received, prices are as quoted, extensions are correct, goods are up to quality, and that the freight has been paid if they are f.o.b. the store.

Little Extra Labor.

By this time you will be thinking of the great amount of work entailed and expense incurred in keeping up these records. I wish to say that the work would be but a trifle more than under your present system, and the expense would be the initial one in procuring the necessary books, but the information obtained would far outweigh this little extra labor and expense.

It is not possible to go very fully into details in a short paper of this nature, but I hope what I have said to-night will give you some idea of the importance of keeping proper records of your business transactions, and be the means of bringing about a change amongst the retailers from their antiquated methods of bookkeeping.

Why Merchants are Losing Money by Poor Debts

Cash And Credit Systems Prevailed a Hundred Years Ago—What a Merchant Of Thirty-two Years Standing Says Of The Much Discussed Problem—Grocers Too Careless Themselves In Paying Their Debts.

By M. Moyer.

Luther Andres & Co. have this day
Been opening goods both fresh and gay;
They have received near every kind
That you in any store may find,
And as we purchase by the bale,
We are determined to retail
For ready pay, and a little lower Than ever have been had before.
We with our brethren mean to live.
But as for credit we shall not give.
We would not wish to rouse your passion
But credit here is out of fashion.
My friends and buyers one and all.
It will pay you well to give us a call,
You may always find us by our sign
A few rods from the house divine.

The above advertisement was taken from a copy of the "Ulster County Gazette," published at Kingston, New York, on January 4th, 1800. This paper is in the hands of a retail grocer whom I know and although over a hundred years old is still in good preservation and valued as an old relic.

While the construction of this advertisement may arouse a little curiosity the principal point I wish to call attention to, is the fact that even in those days the cash and credit in business was an unsettled problem. It is a very easy matter for any one to say that business should all be done on a cash basis, but when it is taken into consideration that business has been carried on largely on credit for hundreds of years there must be some reason involved which does not lie near enough the surface to be seen by the casual observer. While we have large concerns that flourish on a cash basis, we also have those that have made remarkable successes on a well arranged credit system. Cash stores have failed and succeeded, and credit stores have also failed and succeeded. Who would therefore be prepared to say that the cash system should be exclusively adopted?

What Is To Be Done?

No doubt a hundred years ago, as we see by this ancient advertisement, they were holding the same views as we are doing now. Some did a cash business and others did a credit business, and this state of affairs has continued to this day, and the question is now what are we going to do with it? In all probability we will go on another hundred years the same way.

It seems evident theerfore that credit cannot be entirely cut out of our commercial system, for trade and commerce rest largely on trusting one another, or crediting one another. Camparatively few transactions take place in which credit to some extent is not in evidence, but like many other good things, it is sadly abused and it is the abuse of the credit that we may hope to correct, but never eliminate entirely from our business transactions.

When we talk about the evil results from the credit system, we generally have in our minds the amount of money which is lost through those who are either unable or unreliable. This, however, I think is a mistake, and while the professional dead beat is a thief in disguise, and is guilty of one of the meanest kinds of stealing, he should not get all the blame.

Cause Of The Trouble.

Those who are careless in their payments, never prompt, never punctual and always disappointing are causing nine-tenths of the trouble.

I am now considering this question from the retailers' standpoint, and it may be something worth consideration if they would go to the trouble to find out what percentage of their turnover they lose in bad debts. As a rule the expense of doing retail business in a large city runs from 15 to 18 per cent. and losses through dead beats seldom exceed ½ per cent. Does this not at once show that the cry about dead beats is a little too loud?

Along with the other expenses does this not sink into insignificance, and yet the evil results through the abuse of credit are almost unbearable, and the slow pay, the indifferent, careless procrastinators who cause the merchants to carry thousands of dollars on their books, are the chief sinners. Do these people ever consider this matter, or do they know its results, or have they unconsciously grown into this habit through unwise, or should I say, dishonest methods of the retailer? I say dishonest, because a retailer has no right to allow his customers to use for an unreasonable time the money that belongs to the wholesaler.

The Grocer's Part.

Bad habits, like diseases, are contagious, and if a retailer himself is notoriously slow, and always behind with his payments his customers will soon line up to the same level. A retailer who is not prompt in his payments is not prompt in his collections and his customer will soon take advantage of his weakness. There is no evil so detrimental to trade as the want of promptness and punctuality. The loss through time and disappointment caused through this one blight in trade is inestimable and if it could be shown in figures would be alarming. While the most of our retailers are prompt, it is nevertheless a fact that too many are not.

In my next article I will show how wholesale collections are treated; how some pay their accounts; who should have credit and who should not; why some do a cash business and others credit, and why and when a merchant should do a mixed credit and cash business.

Feature of a Vancouver "Horse Show" Window

Value of a Timely Display and Some Ideas on Strengthening It—Frequent Changes Necessary for Best Results — The Price-Ticket as an Aid in Selling.

There are certain times during every year when the live grocer has opportunities to show himself conversant with the trend of public affairs and also to show that he takes an interest in them.

This knowledge cannot better be displayed than in advertising and in window and interior displays.

The window of H. A. Edgett & Co., grocers, Vancouver, B.C., which is reproduced on this page, is a splendid example. A short time ago there was a large horse show in that city and the event was made use of in the dressing of Edgett's window.

By the liberal use of flags and ribbons an attractive display was the result, and with the addition of the horse and rider, an appropriate one as well.

The best window trimmers affirm that one line of goods displayed to the best advantage produce the best results from a selling standpoint. Their theory is, and it seems reasonable, that where too many goods are shown the attention is really not fixed on any. The eye wanders from one to the other and not much of an impression is made. But where one particular class of goods is presented to the passersby something substantial remains in their minds.

An important feature in display is cleanliness and this can only be maintained by frequent changes unless windows are closed in from all sides to prevent dust and dirt settling on the contents. The window of H. A. Edgett & Co. appears to qualify in the first rank in this respect.

Many of the larger stores employ a special window dresser to look after this work and nothing else. They would not do so if they did not obtain results. They aim to produce the best selling windows and they dress them regularly and often. If the proprietors of these stores after paying a special man to look after their work in this respect find that they get returns, grocers in other places can do the same.

Many merchants have not yet been converted to the advantage of the price card in cases where they can be used to advantage. In discussing this question with L. A. Primeau, a Lindsay grocer, this week, he said : "I seldom put anything in my window without a price-ticket ; I find it sells the goohs much faster and with little or no haggling over prices."

CANADIAN SALT.

Writer Says Home Product Was on Market Forty Years Ago.

By John Ransford.

Under the heading "Advance of Canadian Salt," you publish a short article in your issue of May 7th. Knowing your desire to correctly inform your readers upon all points connected with the grocery trade, I feel sure that you will readily insert a few corrections concerning the article in question.

It is difficult to remotely imagine who your "grocery wholesaler" can be, who furnished your staff with the valuable information that "Five years ago wholesale grocers sold nothing but English salt !" Speaking generally of the wholesale grocers, I affirm that it is far nearer fifty years ago that such a condition of things could have been correctly said to have existed. Canadian salt was first placed on the market forty years ago; and from that day to this, but more especially for the past fifteen to twenty years, has been gradually yet surely supplanting English salt. So much for clause 1. Referring to clause 2, permit me to say that your informant would likewise have been more correct had he added to the words "The lack of demand (of English salt) was not due to any inferiority of English salt, but to the coming of Canadian salt on the market" the words "and its marked superiority." About ten years ago, the writer was present in Liverpool at a meeting of the directors of the English Salt Union, and there showed to that august body, samples of Canadian salt, taken out of the bins. It is difficult to move to excitement, much less to admiration, and still less to confession of inferiority, the ordinary stolid phlegmatic North Briton. But I did it—with those samples !

Referring to clause 3, I would fain ask you, where can you buy salt superior to Canadian salt ? The article I am criticising does not display a very intimate acquaintance with the salt trade, but there may be information at your hand I know not of, and therefore, for information's sake, I ask this question. Where can you buy salt superior to Canadian salt, who makes it, where is it sold ? Clause 4 is painfully misleading. Pardon my pointing out to you that moisture, sulphate of calcium, chloride of magnesium and calcium are impurities and not adulterations. No salt maker with any pretensions to a sane condition of intellect would think of procuring any of the above wherewith to adulterate salt—there is a distinction between adulterants and impurities. The impurities you name are unfortunately found in all salt, but less in Canadian than in any other salt known. It is well known that there are adulterants such as starch, phosphates, etc., added by some unscrupulous salt makers to prevent their salt from caking, and some of the more largely advertised foreign salts are principal in this. Canadian salt I am sure is entirely free from any such adulteration. An easily made test of the proof of what I state is performed by mixing a teaspoonful of any of the highly vaunted, much advertised foreign salts in a wineglassful of water. The result will surprise the ordinary beholder. With clauses 5 and 6, I am grateful to acknowledge comes a change. Therein you show that Canadian salt excels the imported article, and not only excels in quality but is almost exclusively used. This achievement, and it is a grand achievement for any Canadian industry, has been won after much prolonged hard fighting on its merits.

I acknowledge the difficulties that an editor of an ordinary paper encounters in dealing with multifarious subjects. But in your case, sir, it should be that of an expert dealing with a subject, viz., the grocery trade, with which he is expected therefore to be familiar.

NEW BUTTER BOX.

The prospectus of the Clarazite Manufacturing Co., of Melbourne, Australia, manufacturers of a new process butter box, has been received at the Montreal office of The Grocer. The decreasing supply of lumber in the Antipodes has rendered it necessary for butter exporters to look around for something as a subsitute for wood for the manufacture of butter boxes. In Australia, as well as in Canada, the price of butter is enhanced considerably owing to the necessarily superior character of the wood. It is estimated that this new box will reduce the price of packing from 40 per cent. Some butter has been shipped from Australia to London in these new boxes and the results were represented as being highly satisfactory in every respect.

Laporte, Martin & Co., Montreal, will, following their usual custom, close at noon on Saturdays during June, July, August and September this year.

REALIZING THE RIGHT METHOD.

The president of the Imperial Bank, D. R. Wilkie, is the latest convert to one of The Canadian Grocer's policies.

In his annual address to his stockholders, he says that he thinks the prohibition of the importation into England of live stock is an advantage to Canada, that we are making more money by feeding the grain and hay to the cattle and sending them over in a finished condition than shipping them as stockers and selling the food stuffs as well.

The Grocer took this stand nearly twenty years ago, after the editor had discussed the matter thoroughly with the late Mr. Frankland, one of first and largest exporters. A quiet campaign in this direction has been steadily carried on by the business men throughout Canada. The agitation now lies mostly with a few exporters and those interested in shipping. The men who would sell our thin cattle when hay and grain are cheap and plentiful are in the same class with those who would sell the breeding sows because hogs are now at record prices.

BISCUIT PRICES ADVANCE.

During the past week the most important price-change occurred in connection with the biscuit market. Practically all the Ontario biscuit manufacturers have advanced their prices about a cent a pound, which means about ten per cent.

It can scarcely be said that this came as a surprise to the wholesale or retail trade as many have been forcasting this change for the past couple of months on account of the advancing prices of the biscuit ingredients. This is given by the manufacturers as the cause. With the soaring of the wheat market flour advanced and lard, butter, etc., also stand at a high figure.

Manufacturers have been contemplating raising their prices for some months but they entertained hopes that raw material would become cheaper. However, not seeing anything to warrant such a change in the immediate future, they decided to make the advance in the biscuit prices and this went into effect on Monday morning May 31st.

VALUE OF A NEAT STORE.

Empty boxes with broken lids, musty meat lying on the counter and dirty windows for displaying foods, are not conducive to the attraction of a high class trade. Yet these are actual conditions existing to-day in many stores in the cities, towns and villages throughout the country, the proprietors of which are wondering why they cannot get and hold the trade of the particular but profitable classes.

A woman who is proud of her home will see that it is kept in proper order so far as cleanliness is concerned. While she may not be able to secure expensive furniture she is never without the broom and duster, the soap and water. She keeps things in attractive order and takes an interest in her personal appearance as well. She expects her grocer to do the same.

"I cannot understand," recently remarked a gentleman uninterested in the grocery trade, "why merchants do not pay more attention to their own appearance. I was in a store the other day and saw the proprietor behind the counter in his shirt sleeves—which were extremely dirty—waiting on a smartly dressed lady. I thought to myself, 'what will that woman think of him?'

"If I were a grocer," he added, "I'd put on a clean shirt every day if I found that necessary to keep clean; I believe my laundry bills would be paid ten times over in a month by extra business."

That is an expression of the thoughts of at least one individual looking on from the outside and there are scores with similar opinions. The time has long ago arrived when the most modern conditions are necessary to be applied to business if a merchant desires to succeed in the great battle-field of competition and a clean store is one of the first requisites to a good trade, while neat personal appearance and modern equipment follow fast on its heels.

GOOD THING FOR BUSINESS MEN.

Business men, and particularly those directly interested, will not look askance at the decision of the Great Northern Railway to build a railway from the United States boundary line to Winnipeg.

The fact that it is to be an air line will reduce the time considerably between Winnipeg and Minneapolis, is hardly of the first importance. What makes the matter of first importance is the fact that it will increase the competition in the railways in freight and passenger service. Competition in railways usually means a great deal for the business man.

Where there is no competition, consideration for the business man is usually at zero. Business men know this to their sorrow. When an isolated town becomes a competitive point by reason of the advent of another railway the lot of the business man is as a rule much happier. Freight rates are lower and the railways more obliging, and if a shipper has a grievance it is more politely listened to and more readily attended to.

Business men and other shippers in the west are doubtless praying that the proposed new railway will be constructed as promised by September 1st and that it will ultimately be extended farther into the Great West beyond Winnipeg.

The more pronounced a town becomes as a competitive point the more assiduously do the railways court the good will of the business men.

TICKET PURCHASING.

Some time ago Chatham merchants decided to discontinue the practice of programme advertising and the purchase of tickets in their places of business. Correspondence in last week's issue of The Grocer from Chatham indicates that the merchants have pretty well adhered to their former resolution, which must be comended.

In taking steps to eliminate the ticket selling nuisance they have followed the proper course. There has, no doubt, been too much money wasted by merchants buying tickets for every church social or picnic, and prospective ball games in the district within which they do business. They think or are led to think that if they are not charitable enough to purchase a couple of tickets they will lose custom.

The practice of buying from every ticket vendor is one which can only be eliminated by merchants sticking together, and organizations are, therefore, necessary if the habit is to be stopped. They should make it a rule that they be treated similarly to men following other occupations. If they give to a church or charitable institution let them give because they want to as private citizens and not with the fear of losing trade if their names do not appear on the lists of donators.

But, as the condition of affairs in Chatham indicates, organization is required if the best results are desired.

A SHORT LOBSTER PACK.

A Montreal lobster dealer, speaking to The Canadian Grocer this week, stated that the storm recently eperienced on the coast of Nova Sctoia, between Yarmouth and Halifax, would have quite an effect on the pack in that district this year.

It is the packers along this coast who chiefly supply the United States and other foreign markets, and, of course, it is the foreign market that fixes the price in Canada.

The storm was most severe, and did great damage to lobster traps, boats and other paraphernalia belonging to the fishermen.

Lobsters have been shipped from Nova Scotia this year since the season began, April 10, and have not been in good supply at any time. As the season in Nova Scotia ends July 10, there is every indication of a short pack, and consequent high prices. The recent storm is so much the worse in consequence of existing conditions.

Another feature of the market this year is the adsence of numerous small packers who last year bought largely and were unable to dispose of their holdings at a desirable profit. The money stringency made it difficult for them to sell when they desired to, and at the price they expected. This year few of them are operating.

A good catch off the New Brunswick coast will help the situation. The season in that province is from May 25 to August 10.

WEST INDIES ON THE WARPATH.

A short time ago a West Indian, visiting in Canada, said a few things about the trade relations between Canada and the West Indies not very complimentary to the former.

Some of his remarks were: "There seems to be a perennial outburst of this altruistic and brotherly interest in you every year in the Canadian press. For years we thought the Canadian people really meant business, but now we know that it is all pure bluff. Business men from Canada come down to our islands to enjoy the climate and recuperate their health, and when they get home, the daily press tells about what Mr. ———.

"I wonder if it has ever dawned on Canada that in the great scheme for consolidation of Empire someone has got to make a sacrifice? No great movement like this is brought about painlessly, even where the result is the greatest good to the greatest number. We have demonstrated beyond the shadow of a doubt, the sincerity of our desires and our willingness to suffer if the Empire altogether will benefit thereby; but candidly we are heartily tired of the bluff this country puts up with reference to better trade relations.

"Years ago we thought when we did business with the United States we should consider them all rogues, and treat them as such, but this is not the case now. We get along with them admirably and we certainly do admire their rampant patriotosm, which is to them first, foremost and forever to be considered. We naturally, looked for the same treatment from Canada that we received from England, but in this we have been sadly disillusioned, and until Canada is ready to come half way, as is plainly her duty, as the big brother, we don't want to see any more of these effusions in the public press with blazing headlines of peace, fraternity and concord."

Whilst these words were delivered with considerable warmth and may be slightly overdrawn, they seem, nevertheless, to be significant of a feeling which prevails pretty generally throughout the islands.

AIDING SMOKED FISH TRADE.

A further step in the development of the fish business of eastern Canada was taken by the Dominion Government this week.

The Department of Marine and Fisheries has just decided to come to the assistance of fish dealers supplying Ontario and Quebec trade with smoked haddies and other mildly cured fish. They will do this by paying one-third of the express charges on all fish brought from the Atlantic coast to points in the two aforementioned provinces.

It will be remembered that an express service for fresh fish from the Atlantic coast was established by the Department February 20, last, through their shouldering one-third of the express charges. The innovation worked excellently, hence the decision to encourage trade in central Canada in smoked fish.

There has always been a more or less steady demand for finnan haddies, but in the summer months it was almost impossible to bring them to Montreal and Toronto in good condition, and to sell them at a profit. Express rates have always been too high, while the perishable nature of the goods made freight too slow.

Shipments of cod, mackerel and shad will also likely increase, while lower prices are possible.

WHY YOU SHOULD PROTEST AT ONCE.

To the Retail Merchants of Ontario :

Every retail merchant in the Province of Ontario should feel it a duty to join the Great Chorus of Protest against the action of the Ontario Government in awarding the contract for publishing the Ontario Readers to the T. Eaton Company, Toronto, for the following reasons :—

(1) The T. Eaton Company took the contract at a low figure just for the sake of the advertisement. Their name will appear in the books as publishers and the books will go into practically every home in Ontario.

(2) A discount of 20 per cent. is given to all purchasers, be they merchants or school children. The retailer gets no advantage.

(3) The Public, when sending to Toronto for books, will undoubtedly take the opportunity to order other goods mentioned in the Eaton catalogue. This is just what the Eaton Company are after.

(4) The Ontario Government apparently went into the contract without considering the injury they would cause the retail trade.

(5) The Eaton Company are not publishers and should never have been considered as such.

(6) Unless vigorous opposition is aroused other provinces will make similar arrangements with the Eaton Company and will thus strengthen the position of the big company.

Protest to your member and the Hon. Dr. Pyne, Minister of Education, Toronto, at once or not later than June 10. Send a letter preferably, otherwise a post card.

If you receive no reply within a week be sure to write again and let them know you mean business.

The above is a copy of the circular being sent out this week by the Booksellers' Association of Ontario to the retail trade. Every grocer in the province is urged to adopt the suggestion contained in it.

MONTREAL.

June 1.—"Everything is very high in France," were the words Henri Jonas, who has recently returned from Europe, used in summing up the situation with reference to the products which are of interest to the grocery trade. Mr. Jonas stated that for many years, the sardine industry on the west coast of France has been failing. This fact has been due not so much to the depletion of the waters, as the fact that the fish have taken on new habits of abode. This year, though, they are returning in increased numbers, and everything points to a large pack. An unfortunate condition exists, however, in the fact that olive oil will be very scarce, and high. The crop of olives has been a small one, and this will seriously hamper the canners in their operations. The price of olive oil has just about doubled in the last year. Other lines are also very high, owing largely to good demand and slightly curtailed production. While at Biarritz, Mr. Jonas went over to the aviation camp of the Wright Brothers at Pau, to witness their aeroplane flights.

Fred Hughes, of Fred Hughes & Co., with a large party of friends, spent a few days in the Laurentians recently at the Kaneron Club.

J. M. Douglas & Co., have been appointed agents for J. H. Todd & Sons, Victoria, also for J. P. Mott & Co., Halifax, N.S.

Albert Matthews, of the Geo. Matthews Co., was in town from Ottawa for a few days last week.

Fred Hughes & Co. are feeding the dogs on exhibition at the bench shows at Toronto, Hamilton, Winnipeg and Montreal, with Spratts' foods.

Victor Archambault, Sherbrooke, was in town for a few days last week.

Archie Langevin, for many years with Rowe & Rowe, Waterville, has forsaken the grocery business for the clothing trade.

It is reported that the whole lobster industry off the southwestern shore of Nova Scotia suffered greatly by the gale that swept the coast recently. All along the shore are sunken boats, while smashed lobster traps dot the coast line. An immense amount of hardship will be entailed on the men who make their living from this industry, for in many cases all that many of them had was invested in their outfits. At the height of the gale, there was a tidal wave that swept the boats up on the wharves and flooded many buildings. All attempts to float the stranded United States seiners, the Judiene and the Lena and Maud, have failed.

Fraser, Viger & Co. are showing a very seasonable and attractive window display this week. It consists of a series of picnic hampers of different sizes and prices, neatly packed with the necessaries for a picnic or fishing expedition.

S. J. Mathewson, of Mathewson's Sons, Montreal, is expected back from Metis this week.

A. H. Brittain, Montreal, was in Ottawa on Wednesday.

H. Fischer, representing Max Ams, the New York canned goods man, was in Montreal on Tuesday.

Howard Cane, of the Wm. Cane & Sons Co., Newmarket, Ont., was in Montreal for a few days this week, and visited the trade in company with the firm's local agent, W. C. Christmas.

Mr. Munro, of McLaren's, Ltd., Hamilton, was in Montreal early this week.

Victor Revillon, Paris, France, is visiting the Montreal office of Revillon Bros.

Walter F. Leonard, of Leonard Bros., was in Montreal from St. John Tuesday of this week.

The Sperhoid, which arrived in Montreal this week, brought 2,500 tons of raw sugar to Montreal, besides having unloaded some in Quebec. The Yanariva, which berthed last week, had 3,600 tons, while the two previous boats to arrive, the Salybia and the Savan, brought, respectively, 3,000 tons and 3,700 tons.

HALIFAX.

June 1.—Trade is quieting down a little now, and the rush of Spring orders seems to be pretty well over for the present. The markets generally are well supplied. From the farming sections throughout the province come reports of late seeding, the weather having been cold and backward.

There has been somewhat of a falling off in the receipts of creamery butter this week, but this is regarded as temporary only. There is no shortage of butter and practically no change in the price.

The flour markets are very strong and the prices continue to soar upwards. The bread dealers continue to move prices upward in keeping with the advances made by the mills. Seeds are also very strong. Prices of flour range from $5.80 to $7.00 per barrel. Rolled oats are $5.60 to 5.75; oatmeal from $6.00 to $6.10, and cornmeal from $3.50 to $3.60 per barrel. Eggs are coming in in fairly good supply. The demand at present is rather light and prices are steady at 17 to 18 cents.

The consumption of beef has fallen off considerably as a result of the high prices. American beef is now quoted at $17.00 to $18.00 and Canadian $16.50. American pork is quoted at $24.50 and Canadian at $23.00.

Canned goods are in fairly good demand but they are not selling quite so freely as last year. Many of the dealers here still have very large stocks on hand. There is practically nothing doing on dried fruits just now. Stocks are good and prices are fairly reasonable.

The molasses and sugar markets are both very firm. According to advices received by the trade here an advance of one cent per gallon has been made. Several vessels with large cargoes are now on the way to this market. Barbadoes worth 35 to 36 cents and fancy Trinidad about the same. Sugar is steady at present, but an advance in the price would not cause any surprise. In fact some the trade are now predicting a rise. Extra granulated is now at $4.70, and bright yellow $4.30.

An interesting experiment is now being made by the Canadian Government. It is a test of the cost of carriage of goods from Canadian Atlantic ports to Canadian ports on the Pacific by way of Mexico. The scheme is to have freight carried from Montreal and Halifax to a point near Vera Cruz, Mexico, thence overland by railway to the Pacific seaboard, and thence by water again to the place of final destination. It is claimed that by this route freight can be carried from Montreal to British Columbia ports 20 per cent. cheaper than overland by the C. P. R.. David Martin, of the Customs staff, Toronto, was on the steamer Bornu which sailed from here this week for Mexico, and he thinks that there are great possibilities for trade development over this route. Mr. Martin will report to the Government the result of the test.

W. R. Drynan, secretary of the Canadian Canners Assosiation, was in Charlottetown, P. E. I., this week, and while in that city he made final arrangements with Gordon L. Cohoon to be their representative for Prince Edward Island.

Job Bros. & Co., Ltd. one of the largest fish firms in Newfoundland have opened a branch in Halifax and will export the most of the fish that they send south through this port. W. C. Job, a member of the firm, was in this city this week and stated that the excellent facilities for shipping to the West Indies had led them to open the branch here. The company, which is capitalized at $430,000, has leased the R. A. Hart property on Lower Water Street.

Walter Thompson, aged 70 years, one of the best known citizens of Yarmouth, and who was engaged in the grocery business in that town for many years, died last week. He was successful in business.

The death occurred at Tunro, on Thursday of last week, of Alexander Ross, aged 48 years. He was a grocer in that town and had been ill for a long time.

ST. JOHN, N. B.

June 1.—The only changes in the local market last week were in beans and oatmeal. Handpicked beans advanced 20 cents a bushel and oatmeal is quoted 50 cents a barrel higher. One advance in the latter commodity was made last week and the second one was announced to-day.

The price of flour is unchanged, but local dealers are anticipating another advance in Manitobas. In speaking of the flour situation, one of the dealers told The Grocer correspondent, he could remember when flour sold at $14 a barrel. That was in 1857. The lowest quotation he could remember was in August 1901, when Ontario flour was selling for $3.75 a barrel. Present prices have not been equaled in twenty years

H. G. Weeks, manager of the Lake of the Woods Milling Company's business here, returned last week from a visit to Montreal.

Alderman J. W. Vanwart has dropped the cares of his grocery and meat business for a week and is visiting several cities in Massachussets with the view of bringing back to the council a report on the most suitable style of pavement for St. John streets.

"If you go a-fishing, get a bite here," was the invitation displayed on a card in Walter Gilbert's grocery, Charlotte Street, the week before Victoria Day. An attractive line of canned meats, pickles and pams, etc., suitable for a fishing trip were shown in one of the windows and the hint conveyed on the card resulted in many sales of these goods.

As a result of the increase in the price of flour, bread is now being sold at seven cents wholesale and eight cents retail, an advance of one cent a loaf.

At a meeting of the council of the Board of Trade, held last week, the matter of securing delegates to the seventh Congress of Chambers of Commerce of the Empire, to be held in Sydney, (N. S. W.). on September 14, was left in the hands of a committee. W. Frank Hatheway, M. P. P., wholesale grocer, thinks seriously of representing the local board, and the committee hope to secure at least one other delegate. Notice was received that the Maritime board will meet in Charlottetown, P E. I., in August. Delegates from the local board have not yet been appointed.

It is reported from Prince Edward Island that Davis & Fraser are about to take over the plant formerly operated by the Dominion Packing Company. The plant has been idle for several years and the news that it is to be opened will be welcomed by the farmers, as it will give an impetus to the pork industry.

Definite word has been received from the Government that St. John will receive the Dominion grant of $50,000 for an exhibition in 1910. It has been dedecided that the fair will open on Labor Day and continue for ten days.

The amendments to the Liquor License Act recently adopted by the Provincial Legislature are not without interest to the grocers here. Under the new law, beer shops are compelled to close at 10 o'clock every night except Saturday, when the closing hour is 5 o'clock, the same as the saloons. To evade the law several of the beer sellers have procured a small stock of groceries and are posing as grocery and fruit stores. In a test case a few days ago the police magistrate gave judgment against the beer shop and fined the proprietor $20, or one month in jail. The defendant gave notice of appeal and the case will be carried to the County Court and the result is awaited with considerable interest. It is interesting also to note that the new law makes it necessary for grocers to take out a beer license for non-alcoholic beverages in quantities less than one quart. This makes it necessary to procure a license for selling mineral and aerated waters, etc., as the bottles contain less than the stipulated quantity.

LONDON.

June 2.—Retail trade showed some improvement during the past week, as did also wholesale business. Farmers have been busy with late seeding, but now that that work is about over, country merchants are looking for things to boom.

Wholesale prices are reported by brokers as very firm. California raisins have advanced about ½c per lb and prunes also show an upward tendency. Both fruits are pretty well cleaned up at the coast. Sugars are very firm, with a slight advance in raws. The demand is slow. The market for all good liquoring teas is steady, and rather weaker for inferior. The Japan market has opened high, due to the rush of American dealers, still fearing a duty, to buy.

A deputation from the Retail Grocers' Association waited on D. S. Perrin & Co. last week and complained that restaurant keepers were being sold biscuits at wholesale prices. The result was the prompt receipt by the restaurant men of a notification that they must in future look to the retailers for their supplies.

Wm. O'Laughlin, manager for Mrs. Burton, grocer, Waterloo Street, is receiving the congratulations of friends on his recent marriage.

Ed McCormick, grocer, has purchased a lot on Kent street on which he intends building a handsome home.

Local grocers are saying nice things about Ex-Vice-President Garfield McCormick, of the Retail Grocers' Association, whose marriage is to take place this month.

An east end grocer is authority for the statement that local pop men who have been manufacturing soft drinks here for some time, are cutting prices for the purpose of putting a newcomer out of the field. A reduction in prices was made last week and one of the old dealers at least was offering his goods for about any price the grocer was willing to pay. When asked would the reduction be permanent, however, the man was not in the position to make an agreement. The grocer claims that some of the manufacturers have formed the ring to "squeeze" the latest arrival out.

The announcement is made that C. R. Somerville, of this city, will handle the entire Canadian end of the gum trade in the new $8,000,000 gum trust which is being formed. The trust will include the largest firms in the United States and C. R. Somerville's, which is the largest in Canada.

The Wednesday half-holiday among the grocers begins this week. The flour and feed dealers are the latest to join the movement.

The wholesale biscuit men have notified grocers of an advance of two cents a pound, in consequence of the rise in flour. The manufacturers claim that they are justified in making the increase, as they did not take advantage of the opportunity to make the change some weeks ago when the millers announced the advances. Pound boxes of soda crackers, which have been retailing at 10 cents, will go up to 12, while some of the inferior cookies for which there is little demand will go up but one cent. Fancy cookies will be two cents dearer. The advance is now in effect.

THE SPECIAL NUMBER.

(From the Hamilton Correspondent.)

Speaking of the Special Spring Number of The Grocer, a local grocer said: "I must say it is the handsomest looking trade paper I ever saw, and it is just as good as it is handsome. I thoroughly enjoyed it—not only the news matter, but the ads. as well, and I think the advertising patrons should be very much pleased with the manner in which their copy appeared to the public. The information contained in the paper was a regular feast, and will be read again and again by hundreds of subscribers."

ful day to do their shopping in our coming city.

All subscribers of the Canadian Grocer in this town are highly pleased over the fine Spring and Export number and have authorized your correspondent to tender their congratulations to those responsible for it. The issue was certainly an excellent one.

Prevailing prices on Saturday showed butter down to twenty cents a pound and very plentiful. Eggs were firm at 18 cents a dozen; potatoes firm at $1.25 per bag.

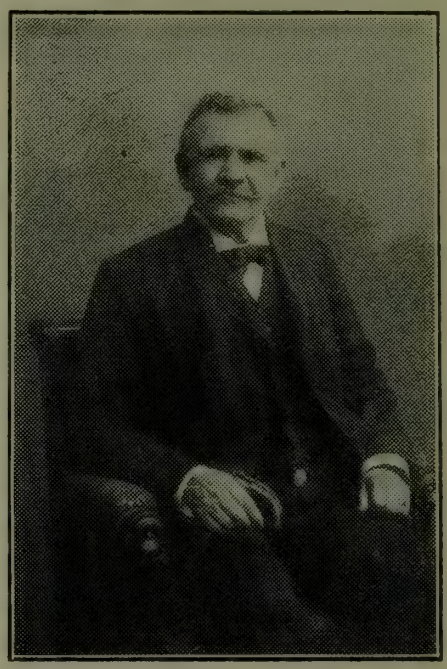
Members of the 367 club returned to town last Friday evening looking tanned and healthy after the three days trip up the lakes. Peter Hutchison and Mr. Gillespie both say it was the best trip the grocers ever made.

TORONTO.

June 2.—Jas. E. Hurst, 699 College Street, instituted recently a unique reduction sale, which lasted ten days. He advertised it by circular and announced that to every customer whose parcel amounted to $1 there would be returned seven cents in cash. It was also pointed out that his goods were all fresh and of the very best quality, bought from the best and most reliable wholesale houses. The circular went on to say: "I defy any honest grocer to offer the same goods below my prices. Only short weight and inferior goods can be sold less. I guarantee all goods to be of the best brand and make—purely fresh and clean—no old stock. Come and get your 7 cents returned out of every dollar's worth you buy. Watch weight and quality when any cheap John offers goods at slaughter prices."

Chas. M. Elmes, 602 College Street, will on Saturday of this week inaugurate a unique advertising scheme. He will have a "shoe shine" located on either side his store and these will shine shoes free of charge by using a particular kind of polish which he wishes to make more widely known.

John Davidson, grocer, 342 Bathurst Street, is suing the Toronto Railway for $3,000 damages for injuries received on Bathurst Street last fall. The claim is that while riding a horse bareback the animal came into contact with one of the defendant's cars, and the plaintiff was thrown to the ground. He claims that he lost an eye thereby.



The plate glass window of the Grand Valley grocery, 438 Queen Street West, was broken on Monday night, supposedly from a piece of iron, which was precipitated against it by a passing automobile.

HAMILTON.

June 2.—In grocery lines trade is good. Nearly all the factories are again in full working order and a large amount of improvements are going on in radial and street railway lines so that unskilled labor is getting employment. That is what helps out the average grocer.

The annual picnic is finally arranged for and will be held at Niagara Falls on Wednesday, July 21st. The G.T.R. and T. H. & B. Railways will each send out five trains, making ninety coaches in all. The Brantford grocers will join with them at the Falls. The grocers have provided many attractions and their patrons will certainly be well entertained.

Butter is down and eggs are up in this market. There is no sale for butter and it is simply a drug—nearly all the stores having too much and would gladly sell out at a loss. On the other hand, eggs are scarce and are going higher, 22c. and 23c. being the prices now.

CHATHAM.

June 2.—Live hogs on Saturday reached the top notch price of $7.85 per cwt. Deliveries show a slight falling off, but this may be due to the fact that farmers are taking full advantage of the good weather to get their work done.

Butter prices on the market dropped as low as 18c, 20c being the rule. This was a result of the hot spell. This year no ice is available for market vendors, and consequently the butter softened rapidly, vendors being faced with the alternative "sell or spoil." prices will likely keep pretty near the old level, however, since the vendors intend selling to the creamery to a large extent.

The golden opportunity which Kent's three weeks' advantage in climate over the rest of Ontario gives this country in the growing of early apples was emphasized last week by A. McNeill, of the Ottawa Department of Agriculture in a series of lectures delivered in this vicinity. Members of the Chatham Fruit Growers' Association, which has done the pioneer work in the co-operative handling of fruit, were largely represented at a meeting held in Chatham on Saturday. Mr. McNeill pointed out the necessity, first, of growing the right kind of apple—the early variety—and, second, of proper handling, including a local cold storage system. Hitherto, growers have gone in for fall and winter apples. Though Chatham growers have as yet no cold storage system, a scheme is understood to be under way. On behalf of the Government, Mr. McNeill offered, provided a $15,000 plant was built, to rebate 30 per cent. of the cost, and also, if a Government expert were allowed to be on hand, to pay 8 per cent. on the entire investment for two years. The discussion which followed indicated a design to provide a system for handling mixed trade, including eggs, butter, poultry and meat.

E. R. Snook, of this city, is refitting the building at Erieau, formerly used by J. B. Moore as a grocery, and will start a new grocery there in the near future.

Wm. Graham has purchased John Kelly's store at Quinn, and is adding a number of improvements.

Merry war is in progress among the Blenheim grocers, competition for the country trade being very keen. In early spring an informal agreeemnt was reached among all the grocers save one to take their delivery wagons off the road. Now, however, the rigs are flying in all directions, the farming trade being catered to with great regularity.

PETERBORO.

June 2.—The grocers and fruit dealers are disposing of large quantities of pineapples and orages these days. The prices are favorable and most people can take advantage of them. The gradually increasing hot weather is also affecting the demand for lemons, which are not as scarce as was feared some time ago. Noticeable too among the new goods displayed are fruit juices which are used as summer drinks.

The Grocer's stand in connection with the text book contract going to T. Eaton & Co., is meeting with general approval and many grocers and other business men have stated that there should be some steps taken to have the effacement of the company's name as the publisher.

E. F. Mason's lower store on George Street, has a unique and attractive window displaying a breakfast food. On the interior there is an array of boxes of the food arranged in a manner that would of itself catch the eye of the passerby, but the feature is a package which casually appears to be fixed in a broken part of the glass. The suggestion is that the box had been hurled through the window and the idea is carried out so well that one has to stop a second before the illusion is manifest. The effect is heightened by streaks along the glass to represent cracks in the glass. one half of the box is, of course, glued to the outside and the other on the inside and the whole is carefully done.

The box is in one corner of the window and down lower there is a little card with the words to the effect, this particular breakfast food has "hurled" its way into hundreds of the homes in the country.

H. A. Sisson has moved from Rubidge Street, further up town and is located on Charlotte Street, in a trim store near the Snowden House. He has a complete line of groceries displayed with taste and the interior presents a neat and inviting appearance.

C. N. Brown is opening a store at Kawartha Park, Clear Lake, to cater to the demands of the hundreds of summer visitors who spend their holidays among the Kawartha Lakes. It will be fitted up with a choice line of groceries and provisions and will be a great advantage to tourists and cottagers.

Geo. W. Buck who has been associated with mercantile interests in Norwood and Hastings has disposed of his general business and is going to the West.

Peterboro's merchants were not behind in decorating their premises on Victoria Day. Many of the grocers showed their interest in the city's welfare by decorating their windows and hanging out bunting. Apart from the holiday and the memory it commemorated the displays created a favorable impression on the visiting regiments from St. Catharines and Brantford.

STRATFORD.

June 2.—A marked difference was noticed in the attendance at the market on Saturday over preceding Saturdays. The farmers have practically all concluded their seeding and the result was a great influx to the market. The market gardeners were well supplied with green stuff. Rhubarb, lettuce, onions, asparagus, radishes and spring produce of every description were present in abundance and sold rapidly. The most noticeable feature in the staple products was a decrease in the price of potatoes, which fell from the previous Saturday's mark of $1 to 70c and 80c. They were present in large quantities. Eggs and butter remained at 18c and 20c, respectively.

In the grain market only two changes are noted, wheat being quoted at $1.35, and oats at 52c (standard). The fact that the price of wheat has been abnormally high without a corresponding rush to market of farmers with the grain, is good proof that there is very little wheat in the granaries of Ontario farmers at present, scarcely more than is required for their own consumption. A rise in the price of bread looks almost certain now, although locally there has been no advance as yet.

Live hogs keep the top-notch price of $7.50, and are very scarce.

Most grocers report business for the past week as being bright, the subject most discussed being the rise in the price of biscuits by the high price of lard and flour.

GUELPH.

June 2.—It is not every store which can lay claim to being kept as "spick and span" as the busy little suburban grocery on Gordon St., run by "Will" Stevens. Like most other outskirt stores you find on its shelves almost everything; but unlike many suburban stores, you find here everything in uniform order. "A place for everything, and everything in its place," appears to be the motto followed by this Gordon St. store. It is fitted up with all the latest improvements, such as Walker Bin fixtures, computing scales, cheese regulator, etc. The "all roundness" of "Will" and the sunny disposition of his wife who manages the store during the day and their obliging manners behind the counter, have built up such a business as any storekeeper might well be proud of. "Yes," replied Mrs. Stevens to an enquiry as to whether they derived any benefit from The Grocer; "We often get pointers which are of great value to us." If more of our "round the corner" stores would pay greater heed to the pointers which The Grocer contains, would not a wider business be the result?.

Geo. Williams, who is always looking for something with which to tempt the eye, and appetite of his customers, is showing some fine cauliflowers at 2 for 25c., also a good line of Morrelle mushrooms.

The fine weather of Saturday, one would have thought, would have induced a lot of the farmers in the fertile country surrounding Guelph to stay at home and get their seeding done. As a matter of fact, many of them did, but their wives and daughters came to the city in good numbers very well stocked with the smaller lines of farm produce. So that in spite of all there was a very good market. Butter sold at from 20c. to 22c.; eggs from 16c. to 18c.; potatoes retailed at about 85c. per bag; rhubarb at 5c. per bunch and cabbage 8c. and 10c.

In some places potatoes are very scarce, but it is not so in Guelph.

GALT.

June 2.—Business in the grocery trade has been exceptionally brisk in Galt for the past fortnight. The new green goods are beginning to come in, and, as usual, the demand is larger than the supply.

Potatoes are very scarce in Galt at present, and $1 per bag is the ruling price.

The following were the prices at the Galt market Saturday morning: Eggs, 17 and 18 cents; butter, 25c to 28c; curd, 5c pint; farmer's cheese, 14c lb.; green onions, 2 bunches for 5c; lettuce, 2 bunches for 5c; rhubarb, 2 bunches for 5c; radishes, 5c bunch; asparagus, 5c bunch; tomato plants, 15c to 25c dozen; smoked ham, 15c lb.; farmer's sausage, 15c lb.; chickens, 50c to 75c each.

G. L. Phillips has purchased the grocery business on Brant Road, formerly conducted by Ald. T. G. Robinson. The new proprietor will also conduct an ice cream and confectionery department. He is an experienced man and should do well.

The clerks in the grocery and other businesses in Galt are again agitating for a half holiday during the summer months. They argue that in other towns the idea has worked out quite satisfactorily. The merchants of Galt have not heretofore taken kindly to the idea, but the workers may be more successful this year.

The Retail Merchants' Association is now discussing the annual picnic.

Picnic necessities are being featured by all the local grocers.

The system of having an official collector has been abandoned by the local Retail Association.

OTTAWA.

June 2.—There were about 50 of the retail grocers and their friends in attendance at the euchre smoker of the Retail Grocers' Association last Wednesday evening. The affair was a splendid success. The first prize, a briar pipe, was won by S. J. Cairns. Fred. MacNiel won the second prize, a silk umbrella, and the other trophy was landed by Peter McIntyre. After the playing, cigars, coffee and sandwiches were served followed by a programme. Mr. Waters' speech was one which will be of considerable interest to the retail trade generally. He advised the retailers of the city to fight shy of the so-called co-operative store idea until a thorough investigation had first been made. "In passing the Co-Operative Bill some time ago, the Ontario Legislature showed that they were not for the good of retail merchants," stated Mr. Waters amid some applause. He said that the efficiency of the retail merchant will serve the public most co-operatively. He counselled those present to place their business on as sound a foundation as possible, and to conduct same in the very best interests of the public and to refrain from assisting co-operative enterprises in any way. Mr. Waters said that the day of the long-winded credit system was gone and now it is a matter of paying cash, and selling for cash, and cash only.

The new grand stand and the attractions to be provided in front of it will be the big feature at this year's Central Canada Fair in Ottawa. Contracts have just been let and the work is now under way. The cost will be about $80,000 and a condition of the contract is that the structure will be completed in time for the fair. It will have a seating capacity for twelve thousand people. It will be absolutely fireproof. Steel and reinforced concrete will be alone employed in the construction and the total length will be 470 feet and the depth 103 feet. The Exhibition Association is this year reverting to the old custom of a spectacular performance each night of the fair and the Siege of Sebastopol will be put on with all the realism of military display and pyrotechnical effects. In the afternoons before the grand stand there will be horse racing and a long list of special attractions. Howick Hall, which in the last three seasons has been utilized mainly as an auditorium for vaudeville performances, is being turned into a process building where machinery will be installed and many firms will exhibit products in the process of manufacture from the raw to the finished article.

Wants Removal of High Licenses on Peddlers.

This is What Editor of a Winnipeg Paper Desires—Thinks High Prices of Fruits and Vegetables Due to This Cause—Comparisons With Prices in United States.

Winnipeg, June 1.—In an editorial which appeared in the Free Press of May 28, a comparison was made between the wholesale and retail prices on green fruits and vegetables in St. Paul and Winnipeg. It was pointed out that the difference in the wholesale prices were not so great as in the retail prices. In commenting on this situation it is surprising to note that the writer of the editorial sought to agitate for the removal of high licences on street peddlers in the following words:

"As to the retailer's profits, it may be that they are not any larger than they should be to enable the individual dealer to live, the fault is in the manner of distribution. In the cities of the United States street peddlers who start out with loads of fruits that they sell off in a few hours are the means of bringing cheap fruit to the homes of the working men. Winnipeg's high licenses on peddlers have led to the establishment of a great many small fruit stands, whose rent and other fixed charges are high in comparison with their sales, so that they must charge high prices even for inferior fruit. The result is that competition is restrained and fruit prices are kept at a high level."

Nuisance Across the Border.

One need not live long across the border to become impressed with the demoralized condition of the grocery trade. And it is invariably attributed to the fact that this street peddling privilege is taken advantage of by thousands who are incompetent to operate a well organized grocery business. This traffic robs the United States grocer of a legitimate line of trade which has figured largely in establishing the strong businesses which Canadian grocers generally possess. Many American grocers attach saloons to their store in order that some recompense might be made through this traffic, for that which they have been deprived of by the peddler.

The argument, the writer wishes to make is that fruits and vegetables would be cheapened in retail price should the peddlers be allowed to enter into the competition. It is an unwarranted reflection on the local retailers to intimate that anything but a legitimate profit is exacted. Southern grown fruits and vegetables are high to the Winnipeg consumer because of the duty charges, and for no other reason.

Need Home-Grown Goods.

Vegetables and fruit will be reduced only when they are locally grown, and in this connection the writer is pursuing the proper course by stating:

"The hardships inflicted upon the mass of the population by the high prices for fresh fruit and vegetables is a serious one. For this state of affairs our climate is partly to blame; and the tendency of people in this part of the world not taking up market gardening has also much to do with the high prices which have to be paid for fresh vegetables. The profits to be made from market gardening are great, and surely we may hope to see this industry developed to a far greater extent than it has been developed hitherto in this region of Manitoba. The statement was made recently by a Winnipeg importer and wholesaler that the local supply of celery is just about sufficient to meet the Winnipeg demand for six weeks out of the whole of each year, the celery consumed in Winnipeg for the other forty-six weeks being imported. This is but one of many similar facts that might be mentioned in this connection, and which ought to need no more than to be stated to convey their lesson."

ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES.

The Busy Man's Magazine's free trip to the National Exhibition this fall is stirring up lots of interest among energetic clerks. Many of them have arranged to get their vacations during the big fair, so that it will fit in with the Busy Man's program.

Many enquiries similar to the following reach the Busy Man's office each week:

Ilderton, Ont., May 28th, 1909

Busy Man's Magazine,
Toronto.

Dear Sirs:—

Kindly send me full information of your offer in the Canadian Grocer regarding free trip to the National exhibition.

Yours truly,
JACK McRAE.

All enquiries are of course answered by personal letter, but for the information of others it might be mentioned that the Busy Man's will send a first class railway, or steamship, ticket from any point in Canada to Toronto and return, also six admission tickets to the fair grounds, to any one sending them a stated number of subscriptions. The tickets are certainly a big return on the energy expended in securing the subscriptions.

One man in Brandon, Manitoba, completed his required number (50) two weeks ago. He now has 64 to his credit, and plans to get 100 before July 15th, which entitles him to two return tickets from Brandon to Toronto and twelve admission tickets to the fair grounds.

THE SUCCESS OF CLERKS.

Another Writer Anxious to Raise the Standard of the Youth Behind The Counter.

By a Clerk.

Now since the grocery clerks have started to take advantage of your kind offer of giving them space in your valuable paper I hope we can arouse enough enthusiasm to make it a very interesting part of The Canadian Grocer.

There is a decided change recently developing, and very much, if not altogether, through the increasing efforts of your paper among retailers to study the real science of successful business methods, and I know of no medium that can do us as much good, or give us greater help than The Canadian Grocer.

The employers are also finding out that a trained clerk is easily worth twice as much as a poor one, and as soon as this is discovered by the clerks they will do their best to compete for the higher salaries. But the question arises how can we get the training when the "boss" himself is not an accomplished merchant. While there are some splendid men in the retail business, there are also many who are no help whatever to a clerk who is anxious to improve in his work. Some of us love the retail business, like to serve the people, and would like, in time, to be store owners, and with this in view we find that we have to face the departmental stores, mail order houses, etc., and the only way we can hope to make our living, and a little money out of the work of our choice, we must become better prepared to fight our battles and this we can only get through good training and diligent work.

The country from one end to the other in spite of all the large stores, will demand the convenience of the ordinary retail stores, but it will take trained men who will be able to give the desired service in order to hold the most convenient system in the interests of the general public.

I hope therefore that the clerks who will be the future retailers of this country, will avail themselves of this opportunity and suggest other ways and means, through The Canadian Grocer which will fit us better for our present work, more profitable to our employers and prepare us for the positions we may be called on to fill through life.

HINTS TO BUYERS.

Information supplied by sellers but for which the editors of The Grocer do not hold themselves responsible.

For some weeks daily delight has been found in a cup of Ceylon tea, of the sort presented to the United States fleet while in Ceylon. Its character is so far above medium and ordinary grades that it dispelled a prejudice held against India and Ceylon tea on account of its sweetish flavor. This is not characteristic of high grade British grown tea, which is often of light color in the cup and possessed of an enticing aroma that not only pleases the palate, but gratifies the sense of smell. If dealers appreciated how much greater pleasure consumers derived from fine tea than from medium and ordinary grades, and would educate their trade to an appreciation of the great difference which exists between grades, they would increase their tea business and popularize the fragrant leaf. Then there is the unchallenged fact that one pound of Ceylon or India tea will make twice as many gallons of beverage as a like quantity of Japan or China sorts. At one dollar the pound a cup of the finest Ceylon or India tea will cost the consumer about one-third of one cent.—American Grocer.

VANCOUVER.

June 1.—The event of the week is the sale of the lots in Prince Rupert townsite. The auction sale lasted five days, from the 25th to the 29th of May inclusive, and the prices realized, especially on the business portion, were beyond expectations . Reserves had been put on, but in all cases these figures were exceeded. Local opinion is that the prices went far too high, and that the speculative spirit was rampant. Certainly it shows how the future of the new terminus is regarded, and indicates the confidence of people in the development of British Columbia and the West.

The Pacific Coast Fisheries, composed of business men of this city, have brought here the first output of clams from their factory on the Queen Charlotte Islands. This company was organized recently and will engage in a general fishing business in the north, the intention being to use trawlers and utilize every portion of the catch, the fish products being canned and the remainder being turned into oil, guano, etc. The clam cannery is the first of the plants to get in operation, and the tins will now be supplied to the local trade.

Few changes are noted in prices this week. Strawberries so far have not been very good in quality, and are consequently high in price. To-day there are as as low as two boxes for 25c, but these are soft and small. The firmer berries are two for 35c. and there are qualities at 20c a box and even 25. Cherries still hold at 40c pound, with good quality. There is a temporary scarcity of tomatoes and, of course, the price is higher, there being an advance of $2 a crate.

F. R. Stewart & Co., produce wholesalers, are adding two stories to their warehouse on Water Street.

The transplanting of 1,800 lobsters in a pound constructed for the purpose on the southern coast of Vancouver Island has been successfully carried out by officials of the federal department. Heretofore, the shipments brought here have been placed without any special means of being taken to keep them in a restricted area. The result has been that the lobsters were lost sight of and only one or two specimens were ever discovered. Now it is proposed to keep close tab on them so as to see if they thrive. If they do, then further shipments will be brought West. The location is a favorable one, and the experiment will be watched with interest for it will go a long way toward deciding whether or not the lobster will propagate in Pacific Coast waters.

R. M. Palmer, Deputy Minister of Agriculture, has returned from his trip through the Okanagan, and states that because of the unusually cold weather of January and Spring frosts the crops of peaches and other stone fruits would be light this year. Neither will strawberries be as plentiful as in other years. Such a prediction was made the more sure because crops in similar varities in the States of Washington and Oregon were seriously injured. On the lower mainland, Mr. Palmer says, the prospects were good for apples, pears and plums. Throughout the interior, the apple crop would also be first-class except in cases where the trees have been permitted to overbear the previous year.

The Provincial Board of Horticulture held its quarterly meeting at Vernon so that the members could discuss with fruit growers on the ground the many matters of importance. Hon. R. G. Tatlow, Minister of Finance and Agriculture, was chairman. It was decided that in the future there should be a more thorough and sytematic inspection of nursery stock coming into British Columbia than had heretofore been attempted. It has always been the policy of the Government to have a strict system of inspection, but it is found that with increase in fruit pests outside the province further effort will be made to keep the orchards in British Columbia in condition to bear the best fruit. There has been received a large shipment of the insect destroyer known as Black Leaf, and the samples of this are being sent out by the Government to all secretaries of Farmer's Institutes and members of the Board of Horticulture. These experiments are made with a view to ascertaining what is the best insecticide for this province.

Nelson, B.C., is to hold a fruit fair in September next, and already considerable local interest is being taken in it. Merchants and manufacturing companies are offering many special prizes. The prize list will be issued early in July.

Following the protest made by manufacturers of canned goods in the Okanagan district, a reduction has been made by the C. P. R., which will enable the people here to compete with the canneries of Ontario. Up to the present, the rate from the Interior to the Coast has been about three-quarters of that from Ontario, but now conditions have been much ameliorated.

Another help is for the fish men, the Dominion Government having passed an order in council whereby a third of the express rates on fish from the Coast to the Prairie Provinces will be rebated. This will encourage Canadian industries and all the more so since it is supplementary to an order issued a few weeks ago forbidding the New England Fish Company, an American concern which has been operating in Vancouver, from passing for customs entry fish to be sold in Canada. Fishermen here say that if the Government would offer a bonus of a cent a pound on halibut, they could invade the Canadian market on equal terms with American competitors.

SASKATOON.

June 1.—A neatly trimmed window is to be seen this week in the Clinkskill store, on 21st Street. A specialty is made of Jell-o, which is abundantly displayed in square packets. Cartoons are strung from the ceiling, while sample cases and display cards add to the attractiveness of the window. On a big block of ice in the centre of the window a quantity of butter is shown, which gives the display a "cool" appearance. Wines, fruits and teas occupy the remainder of the space. The window was trimmed by F. H. Hall, of the Clinkskill staff.

The local Retail Clerks' Association have sent a signed petition to the city council asking that stores be closed at 12.30 on Wednesday afternoons during the months of July and August. Most of the merchants are in favor of the move, but some of them prefer having the half-holiday on Thursday afternoon. It is probable that the request of the clerks will be acceded to as the need of a half-day off is very much felt during the Summer months.

A money by-law to raise $30,000 for the purchase of a site for market buildings has been voted down by the majority of the citizens. A move is now on foot to rent temporary quarters, which can be used for a year or two. The want of a market is very much felt, as it would tend to increase the quantity of produce raised here, as well as reduce the price to the consumer. A fresher supply would also be assured.

WINNIPEG.

June 2.—Winnipeg was honored last week by a visit from a delegation of grocers from the Southern States. Sixty-five retailers arrived in the city on the morning of May 26, and were entertained during the day by a committee representing the local grocers, the Industrial Bureau and the Board of Trade. A special street car was chartered for the morning, and the party, about twenty of which were ladies, enjoyed a trip over every car line in the city. Before lunch a visit was made to the roof of the Union Bank Building, Winnipeg's only skyscrapper, and it was here that many remarks were passed relating to the magnitude of such a young city. A special train brought the party, which consisted of the officers of the National Assosiation of Retail Grocers of America and delegates from Missouri, Arkansas, Texas, Oklahoma, Mississippi, Illinois and Minnesota, all well labelled. The train left St. Louis Monday over the Burlington route to St. Paul and then over the Soo line to Winnipeg. The party traveled to Vancouver over the Canadian Pacific and will then travel to Portland where they will attend the big convention of the Assosiation. A visit will also be paid to the Seattle Exposition. All along the line they have been given an enthusiastic welcome and each member is highly elated at the pleasure of the trip. The convention promises to be the most important to the grocery trade of the United States since there will be actions taken and arrangements made to take better care of the retailer. This will come from manufacturers, a number of them realizing the absolute necessity of protecting the retail grocer. A feature of the party is that L. F. Padberg, the candidate of St. Loiusians for National president and Thomas P. Sullivan, the nominee of the mob from Chicago and Illinois, are travelling in the same sleeping car, but the announcement is made that nothing untoward has happened between them so far on the journey.

E. D. Smith, of Winona, Ont., was in the city during the past week looking over the territory with the local agents, Mason and Hickey. It was interesting to Mr. Smith to note the development of the canned goods trade in this city, since he received his first order of a few cases from A. R. Christie about ten years ago.

L. A. Franks, son of James Franks, a grocer in Wapella, Saskatchewan, has taken a position in the office of Folley Bros. and Larson, in this city.

Thomas Reynolds, representing the Quaker Oats Company, has been assisting the local agent W. H. Escott, for several days.

REGINA.

June 1.—The weather has been splendid for the growing crops as it was fine and warm up to Friday. Since then we have had a heavy warm rain, which was beginning to be needed and if this is followed by some more fine weather the crops should advance rapidly. In conversation with some outside merchants recently, the general opinion is that the growing crops are practically as far advanced as they were a year ago, and are in splendid condition and as a result everyone is feeling hopeful.

Country retailers generally report business rather quiet on account of the farmers being still busy on their land. A seasonable amount of business is being done, however.

A very noticeable feature recently is the number of merchants adopting the cash system and nearly all report very satisfactory results. A country merchant, who was in the city recently, in conversation with the writer, was telling him that he had given considerable thought to the matter and through seeing a number of shipments from the Eaton Co. in the local freight and express offices had gone carefully into it, and as a result had in the 1st May advised all his trade that from that date he would do nothing but a cash business, and by doing so would be able to reduce his prices from five to ten per cent. all round. He reports the results so far as entirely satisfactory and says that in his opinion country merchants will have to adopt this system. He stated that it used to make him very sore when he would happen to be down at the station and notice express parcels from the mail order houses for some of his customers that he was carrying and they were sending their cash out of town. He went into the matter with several of them and showed them where, after paying express charges, they could have done better by buying the same goods from him. This is a matter that interests every country storekeeper, and if some of them would adopt the same policy that this man did, they would have a much better chance to combat the big city departmental stores.

The fine weather of the last week caused a large increase in the movement of fruit and local jobbers report a very satisfactory business in this line. The only new lines on the market this week are California cherries.

E. D. Smith, of Winona, accompanied by his son, spent a day here this week, and was very much surprised at the growth of the city since his last visit. He was also accompanied by Mr. Marshall, of the Mason & Hickey traveling staff.

Among the country merchants noticed in the city during the week were Mr. Ritchie, manager for J. E. Martin, of Milestone. Mr. Ritchie was attending the big muscial competition for Saskatchewan held here the latter part of last week and the first of this week. Mr. Palmer, of Lecky & Palmer, Chamberlain, was also here, and Mr. Balfour, of Balfour Bros., Lumsden. G. E. Watson, of Winside, was also in the city buying his opening stock for a store he is opening at that point. Lees & Toop were here also on the same errand. They are starting a grocery store in Moose Jaw.

J. Schacter, of Regina, has turned over the lease of his store on Eleventh Avenue to A. S. Gimpel, who started a grocery store there this week.

S. C. Burton, local manager for Cameron & Heap, Ltd., returned on Wednesday morning from Kenora, where he had been spending Victoria Day. He was called down there in connection with the opening of the firm's branch in Fort William. R. M. Alexander, who has been shipper for Cameron & Heap, Ltd., here for the past two years, left on Thursday evening for Fort William, where he is taking charge of this firm's warehouse.

The only features of note in this week's prices are the large advances on rolled oats and white beans, both of which have taken a decided jump.

Winnipeg, June 3, '09.

Retailers report a busy week in the trade, and a revival in some lines that were almost despaired of for several weeks. The cereal market is very strong just now owing to the advanced, firm situation of the grain market.

A local miller made some interesting statements descriptive of the flour milling situation in Western Canada.

"There is undeniably a shortage of flour in Canada at present," he said. Despatches from Chicago, where the national millers convention is sitting, state that flour stocks are low all over the Union. There is a similar condition in Canada.

"As a matter of fact, all over Canada, including the west, the small mills are practically turning out no flour, and many of the mills that are not small are not running at present or are running on short time. In Ontario mills are very generally shut down. Those that are still running in various parts of the Dominion are using up their reserves of wheat. A few of the largest mills are buying wheat regularly still, supplementing their reserves."

"The explanation of this situation of course is the high price of wheat. Two days ago Winnipeg May wheat touched $1.30, and yesterday it closed at $1.27¼. At these prices wheat is much dearer than flour. The big mills would make money right now if they placed their wheat reserves on the market. It is the simple truth that flour prices, now are 30 cents below cost. Although flour prices are considerably higher than usual, they would have to be raised 40 or 50 cents more before the mills would be making any profit. The big mills that are running on wheat recently purchased are running at a loss.

"Every spring, when the price of wheat goes up, some of the smaller mills come to the large ones for flour. This is the case at the present time. I happen to know that many small mills that are not themselves running, are buying flour from the big mills, and if the big mills were so disposed, they could sell a great deal more than they are.

"In spite of the present shortage of flour, and the practical non-existence, outside of old reserves, of cheap milling wheat, there is not the slightest foundation for apprehension on the part of the Canadian public that the shortage will become serious. In a short time the growing crop will reduce the price of wheat. Those who fear that this will not be the case, can protect themselves by buying the October option, which is now selling around $1.08. At the worst, nothing can result but a rise in the price of flour which would make milling reasonable at the high prices of wheat. Things will not go to the point of an actual scarcity of flour for consumption."

QUEBEC MARKETS

POINTERS—
Molasses—Advance of 2c.
Sugar—Market steady.
Coal Oil—Drop of 1c.
Tea—Japans scarce.

Montreal, June 3, 1909.

Wholesalers are doing a satisfactory business, good shipments being made, chiefly by water to local points, and by rail and water to more distant centres.

Sugar is steady this week. Molasses have advanced two cents. Beans continue very high, Austrians having advanced since last week. Peas, too, are away out of sight. Supplies of both beans and peas are very slight. Dried fruits are slow. Reports state that a good crop of Valencia raisins is in sight in Spain, provided the critical stage is successfully passed through. Evaporated apples are quiet. Coal oil is one cent a gallon lower. Salt has not been selling well at all, but dealers anticipate a good business during June, July and August. Japan teas are scarce. The first of the new crop arrived in Montreal this week. Collections are satisfactory.

SUGAR—Crystal Diamond sugar is quoted lower this week, barrels being 40c easier, and the cartoons 2½c lb. Sugar is steady. The volume of trade passing is not large.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES — Molasses advanced two cents last Saturday. Reports from the Barbadoes state that the stock there is well cleaned up. In Canada the situation is somewhat relieved through the large sales of fancy molasses made by Barbadoes firms to American houses. The Spheroid, a Reford boat, arrived in Montreal Tuesday with 2,000 puncheons, and 200 hogsheads of molasses. A previous Reford boat, the Salybia, brought 1,000 puncheons and 200 tierces to Montreal. Importations so far have not been nearly up to last year for the same period.

DRIED FRUITS—Sultana raisins are going a-begging at prices surprisingly low. Valencias are slow, trade being quiet. The usual amount of business which is done at this season of the year is passing, but little special interest is displayed in the lines quoted hereunder.

TEA—Cable advices from Japan are to the effect that owing to many parties buying early teas for rush shipment to the United States before the duty is advanced the market has advanced considerably. Cables state further that the quality of teas arriving from the country has deteriorated somewhat owing to the large pickings. Future prices depend largely upon the outcome of the present discussion relative to a duty on teas going into the United States. The first new Japan teas to arrive in Canada reached Montreal yesterday. They should have arrived here last week, but delays in transportation kept them back. Few of these teas are used here, but such as have come forward are quite up to sample quality, and satisfactory to purchasers. The local situation in Japans has not changed. Stocks are practically nil, especially in the lower grades. Other teas are moving satisfactorily, but nothing special is being done.

BEANS AND PEAS—Bearish reports published by some papers on the bean situation of late are not being verified. Offerings are very small. Shippers have really nothing worth while to offer, even at the attractive prices intending purchasers are willing to pay. Austrian beans, which were gong to break the market, in the opinion of many bears, are selling this week at only 5c below Ontarios, the selling price being based on present purchasing figures in Austria. Higher quotations for all beans would not surprise conservative people. As may be imagined, there is not much trade at the prices that rule.

Peas are also quite high, and climbing. At present quotations peas are a good buy. Inquiries are coming in from all sides, but most purchasers wish to pay the old figures. The market being strong, holders will not part with their stock under ruling prices. The stock held is small, and, as there will be nothing new on the market until the end of September, when the presently growing crop is shipped, firmness may be expected to characterize the market for the next four months. Brokers have sold at high as $1,45, car lots on track. Before the new peas are on sale prices may reach $1.60, car lots on track, which would mean $1.75 to the dealer, at least.

It is intelligent, concentrated and persistent effort that wins success in advertising campaigns.

CANNED GOODS

Montreal.—A fair trade is being done in canned fruits and vegetables. Stocks held are not too large. New prices are likely to be late this year, according to reports going the rounds. French peas are up $1 a case. The crop in France will be short this year.

Toronto.—The season for canned fish is almost on and already salmon is moving fairly well. Every order from the wholesalers has its canned goods, including a good supply of fruits, principally apples.

Prices of canned goods for this year will probably be known before the end of the month. It is reported that peas, which will now soon be known, will not be placed at a high figure on the list. Peas and corn are now scarce and tomatoes are liable to be the same.

ONTARIO MARKETS

POINTERS—

Sugar—Decline In Some.
Molasses—Prices Firmer.
Beans—Advance.
Evaporated Apples—Stocks Low.
Apricots—Good Sellers.

Toronto, June 3, '09.

Wholesalers engaged in the general grocery lines are pleased with the present business, but of course would be willing to handle more. Almost all state that the trade is picking up generally speaking although in the first lines there is not much doing. Collections are coming along nicely and a better tone is exhibited in this account.

The chief interest during the week has been in beans, evaporated apples and biscuits. The former are getting very low and it is difficult to secure them even at the prevailing high prices. Evaporated apples are also running low with a good demand. Quite a number have been sent to New York either for consumption there or for shipment across to Germany.

The sugar market is a trifle weaker than a week ago with a decline announced in St. Lawrence Crystal Diamonds as will be seen by the quotations. Dried fruits, particularly apricots, Valencia raisins and prunes, are selling well.

SUGAR.—The market is steady and if anything a little easier than last week. Prices on Crystal Diamond sugars have declined since a week ago due to local causes.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.—So far as syrups are concerned there is very little doing. Molasses are also moving slowly "despite the hot weather." Nevertheless prices are stiffening in view of short holdings in the Barbadoes. There is now practically no cheap molasses on the market except that coming from the West Indies.

More, however, are coming on soon. Choice are quoted a little higher than before. Currants are firm but no changes in prices are quoted. Valencia raisins have been splendid sellers this spring. Brokers claim to to have had an exceptionally good spring. One stated that it was the best he ever had.

WITH OLD COUNTRY AGENCIES.

C. E. Choat, of Halifax, N.S., has returned from England with appointments as representative in the Maritime Provinces of several British houses. He will sell in that district Twining's teas, Chas. Southwell & Co.'s jams, jellies, marmalade, etc.; Bryce Robarts & Co.'s grocers' chemicals, and dried fruits, etc., exported by a Valencia house; Fredk. Fisher & Sons, London; Halton, Limited; Uddington Scotland; Grattan & Co., Limited, Belfast, Ireland; John Jeffrey & Co., Edinburgh, Scotland; Alfred Morton & Co., Bordeaux, France; and J. T. Benkers, Schiedam, Holland.

TRADE NOTES.

Jno. Knight, general manager of the Campbell Milling Co., died on Wednesday of this week.

The Fremona, the fourth fruit boat of the season, arrived in Montreal on Tuesday. She carried 2,985 boxes, and 79 half boxes of oranges and lemons from Catania, and 1,227 boxes, and 325 half boxes from Palermo.

It was announced, this week, that the amalgamation of independent canners under contemplation for some weeks did not materalize. This, it is understood was owing principally to the decision of one of the firms interested.

W. H. Millman, of W. H. Millman & Sons, grocery brokers, Toronto, accompanied by Mrs. Millman, will leave to-morrow (Saturday) morning on a two months' pleasure trip. They will go to the coast via Fort William, Winnipeg, Edmonton and Calgary, after which they will visit in Seattle and the large Californian cities before returning home.

The Grocer's Encyclopedia From Week to Week

The History of Rice Cultivation And The Present Methods In Use—Many Varieties Grown—Yields Best On The Lowlands—Its Value As a Food—Mode of Transplanting.

WHITE RICE.—One authority states that rice originated from a wild plant called in India, Newaree or Nivard. It is said to grow on the borders of lakes, in the Circars and elsewhere in India, and is also native in tropical Australia. The rice plant is an annual grass with long glabrous leaves, each provided with a long sharply pointed ligule. The cultivated varieties are extremely numerous, some kinds being adapted for marshy land, others for growth on the hill-sides. The cultivators make two principal divisions, according as the sorts are early or late. Other subdivisions of the plant depends upon the habits of its growth, the presence or absence of an awn, the colour of the grain, and other particulars. Rice has been cultivated from time immemorial in tropical countries. Many believe rice to be a native of China. It was, however, very early cultivated in India, in some parts of which country, as in tropical Australia, it is indigenous.

Some Early History.

It is not mentioned in the Bible but is referred to in the Talmud. Egyptian remains reveal no trace of the plant. There is no trace of it as a native plant among the Greeks, Romans or ancient Persians. It was cultivated in the Euphrates valley and in Syria four hundred years before Christ. It is thought that rice was introduced into Persia from India about the same time.

The plant was taken into Spain by the Arabs, under the name of "Aruz"—the arros of the Spanish and the "rizo" of the Italian, from which we derive our word rice. It was first cultivated in Italy near Pisa in 1468. It was introduced into Carolina in 1700, and then it is said by accident, although at one time the Southern United States, furnished a large proportion of the rice introduced into commerce.

This plant possesses a multitude of varieties. The minute nomenclature applied to rice in India, the Malay and Philippine Islands, seem to point to great antiquity in the culture of this cereal. Rice is one of the most important articles of food in all tropical and subtropical countries and is one of the most prolific of all crops. Rice yields best on low lands subject to periodic inundations, and thus enriched by alluvial deposits.

It is sown broad cast and in some cases is transplanted after a fortnight or three weeks. It may be said that the soil best adapted for rice is ill suited for any other crop. No special tillage is required but weeding and irrigation are requisite.

Construction of the Grain.

Rice in the husk is known as "paddy." On cutting across a grain of rice and examining it with a microscope, first the flattened and dried cells are seen and then one of two layers of cells elongated in a direction parallel to the direction of the seed which contains the gluten or nitrogenous matter. Inside these, and forming by far the largest amount of the seed are the little cells filled with very numerous and very minute angular starch grains.

Rice is not so valuable as a food as some other cereals, inasmuch as the proportion of nitrogenous matter is less but it is more nutritive than tapioca or sago. In spite of this, however, it forms a large part of the food of the Chinese and other Oriental peoples. It is valued highly in Europe and America, as a light dessert food, and is largely used in hospitals for invalids in view of its easily digestible nature.

In Greater Demand.

Every year the consumption of rice increases, and its dietetic value becomes better known. It is in high favour as a summer food. A reecnt consular report of the American trade representative at Bangkok, gives some information of a decidedly interesting character regarding Siamese rice, and an exhibition of rice products which has recently been held at Bangkok.

"The first national exhibition of Siam rice was opened on March 11, 1909, by the Crown Prince of Siam, in the Temple of Siddharta, one of the best specimens of Siamese ecclesiastical architecture. The main features of the structure are two large quadrangles inclosing a central building which contains the chief image of the Buddha. The rice exhibitions were arranged in tiers at the foot of vast rows of more than life-size figures of the Buddha. There were nearly 3,000 separate exhibits from the various parts of Siam. Each district's exhibits were put together, the exhibitor placing his rice in a neat little bamboo basket, sack, or glass jar, according to his taste. the whole making a pleasing variety and showing much skill and ingenuity in make-up. Each receptable was plainly and neatly labeled as to its owner, district, kind of rice, etc. The prizes for the best rice in each district were: Best, 400 ticals (1 tical equals about 36 cents); second best, 200 ticals; third best, 100 ticals. The first prize and a silver vase will be awarded to the exhibitor of the best rice in the show. The trophy remains in the custody of the high commisioner of the district of the winning cultivator, and is held for one year. Won three times it becomes the absolute property of the winner. The judges award a maximum of 90 marks, made up as follows: Long grain, 10; size of grain, 10; clearness, 10; whiteness of grain, 10; thinness of husk, 10; thinness of case under husk, 10; luster, 10; regular size, 10; and weight, 10.

ASKING, NOT ADVERTISING.

An old darkey was told if he asked he would receive. He prayed, "O Lord! Please send me a chicken." The next morning he looked for an answer to his prayer, but there was no chicken. He prayed again, "O, Lord! Please send me a chicken." The following morning he was again disappointed. Then he prayed, "O Lord! send me to a chicken," and then his prayer was answered.

Produce and Provision Situation of the World

Why Eggs are maintaining the Present High Price — Cold Storage Accounts for the Present Situation—Price of Hogs Near the Limit—May Cheese Not up to Standard.

It is the common opinion of packers that hogs, although still very scarce, have reached the limit. The market for cured meats is already strained, and cannot stand a higher pressure. While the demand is still good, there are indications of a gradual decrease in the consumption.

If it were not for the excellent plants with which our dealers have equipped themselves, at very great expense, to take care of all kinds of farmer's produce, butter and eggs would, in all probability, be very much lower. Years ago when they did not have these facilities, these products had to be sold on arrival, but now the surplus goes quietly into their cold storage rooms, and brought out in good condition when they are again required.

It is frequently asked why eggs keep at such a high figure. This can easily be answered and understood when the conditions are explained. The methods for handling eggs have wonderfully changed. Years ago farmers would bring their eggs to the country stores, when they got ready or when it suited them to go to town. Sometimes these eggs were three and four weeks old when they took them to the store. The storekeeper might not be ready to ship them for another week or two, so that by the time they reached the wholesale house they were from four to six weeks old, and quite stale, if not entirely rotten. From the wholesale house they were sent to the retail store without being candled or examined, and again sold in the same way to the consumer. The eggs as a rule were so bad that they were hardly ever used on the tables through the entire summer months. Now eggs must be brought out regularly by the farmers and the storekeepers rush them to the market as quickly as possible, because every case of eggs is now carefully examined by expert candlers, and bad ones, if found, are deducted and not paid for to the country storekeeper. Every egg, therefore, when it leaves the wholesale house is fresh and fit for the table, and this has largely increased the quantity which is now consumed through the summer.

Besides this extra demand on our supply of eggs, instead of keeping them in limed water for the winter and which were never fit for table use, they are now kept in cold storage, from where they come in good condition for the table or any other purpose.

Through this better care, consumption has so largely increased that our home demand requires the entire hen product, without having any left for export. These are the reasons why our eggs are so high.

PROVISIONS.—The opinion of packers last week was that the highest point in the price of hogs had been reached, and the price this week supports that opinion. In comparison with the value of other foods the price of cured meats has reached a point when it is unsafe to advance it any higher. People will pay to a certain limit for a commodity, and if it goes beyond that, consumption will drop off, and something else will be substituted. This is the position of the cured meats, and the trade cannot afford to take chances which might lead to serious results.

CONTRACT TOO LARGE.

Montreal Packer Does Not Believe Canada Could Supply British Navy With Tinned Meat.

A cable despatch was recently received from London, Eng., by the New York Herald, stating that German officers were on their way to Chicago to contract for the supply of tinned meats for the German Army and Navy. Great Britain used to get all her supply from Chicago, but ever since the meat scandal there, the despatch says, the British Navy has cut off all supplies from there.

"Now it is a fact of which I am assured," says the writer of the despatch, "that the British Admiralty cannot continue his stubborn policy much longer, because without Chicago it cannot get all its supplies of tinned meat necessary for the ships at sea.

Supposing war were to break out, the British fleet would find itself in a sorry plight for lack of preserved meat, and if Germany shall open up the big contract with Chicago, which her army and navy supplies department has in view, provided the report of the inspecting officers shall prove satisfactory, the British Admiralty will find it impossible to renew its contract for a supply of tinned meat from Chicago."

The question arises, cannot Canada supply the British navy with all the tinned meat necessary?

Not Enough Produced.

"No, Canada could not supply the army and navy of Great Britain, were she called upon to do so to-day," said W. Clark, Montreal, when approached by The Canadian Grocer.

"Such a contract would be beyond us to-day and for years hence," he continued," for we have not the facilities to begin to handle such a contract. But it is altogether unlikely that we will in the near future be called upon to supply the forces of Great Britain. The United States packers are in a position to supply both Great Britain and Germany, were they requested to do so. The chief reason for Canada's inability to take such a big contract is our small population, and the scarcity of beef which we experience.

"Our population being small, the regular consumption of canned goods is limited. This being the case, perhaps, the scarcity of beef does not matter so much as it otherwise would.

"The United States, with its population of eighty million, can consume an immense quantity of beef. The packers provide for this consumption. Much of the beef used consists of choice cuts of the animal. The people are educated to the eating of the choice portions, which they secure through the butcher. But the other portions of the animal cannot be thrown aside. So, in most cases, the United States packers sell to the butcher the choice cuts and can the rest of the edible part of the beast. This means that they must find an outlet for this enormous quantity of canned goods. They have this market in the United States. We have it only to a limited extent in Canada.

Plenty for Both.

"The packers there, too, are constantly filling large contracts, and their facilities for packing could make it quite possible for them to handle the business of Great Britain and Germany both.

"Were the United States Packers to go back upon Great Britain it would still be possible for the Mother Country to obtain supplies, as there are fine sources of supply in other parts of the world, Australia and the Argentine Republic, for instance.

"In the latter country there are millions of head of cattle, and hundreds of idle factories, which would enable that country to fill very large contracts."

A MENACE TO ENGLAND.

London, May 24.—The departmental committee appointed in July, 1908, to inquire into the alleged combinations in the meat trade in the United Kingdom, has issued its report. A large portion thereof is devoted to the American beef trust and its representatives in London, and the committee concludes that while a combination exists to a certain extent between four companies in the United States engaged in the United Kingdom, it is not at present sufficiently powerful to seriously endanger the beef trade as a whole. But should these firms as seems possible, acquire considerable interest in the Argentine the situation with regard to the meat supply of the United Kingdom might become serious.

"With such command," the report says, "of practically the whole imported live cattle and chilled and frozen beef trade, the firms composing such combination might be able to determine beef prices at Smithfield market itself and largely affect prices throughout the country."

According to the report, the representatives of the American companies in London all told the committee that they knew nothing of the conditions prevalent in the United States, and, commenting on these statements, the committee says.—"The committee, reluctantly, is compelled to express grave doubts as to the reality of this uniform ignorance, and its assumption naturally has tended to throw doubt upon the other statements made by the representatives of these firms. It is almost incredible that Armour & Co., Swift & Co., Morris & Co. and the Hammond Beef Company the last named representing the National Packing Company, should be in combination in the United States and in competition in the United Kingdom."

In a paragraph relating to the local tendency to exaggerate "the power and malevolence of successful trade competitors," the committee comments upon the trade methods of the American companies. "These are superior to those prevailing in this country," it says, "and perhaps less influenced by considerations of sentiment. As one witness put it:—'Business is business all the way and we do not run business for love.' This maxim is ruthlessly applied by the American companies; they are therefore unpopular among their trade competitors."

The committee failed to find evidence of any deliberate action on the part of the Americans with the object of destroying inconvenient arrivals, and it does not think that they have yet attempted to capture or control the whole beef trade in this country, as alleged. At the same time it is satisfied that the firms mentioned consult together with regard to prices and the amount of the supplies to be put in the market, and that they fix the prices at which chilled beef shall be sold in the provinces. Furthermore, it is convinced that provincial salesmen are practically bound to sell at the price daily dictated by the Americans."

H. Laporte, of Laporte, Martin & Co., Montreal, is expected back from Europe about June 22.

RAISIN AND ALMOND CROP.

Good Prospects for Valencias, but Sicilian Almond Crop Reported Small.

W. H. Rowley, of Underdown & Crichton, London, Denia and Valencia, was in Montreal this week, and was taken around to see the trade by Wm. C. Christmas, local agemt for the firm.

Mr. Rowley but recently left Spain. He told The Canadian Grocer prospects were that a good crop of Valencia raisins would be harvested this year. He thought the crop would be about the same size as that of last year. About 800 tons of raisins were at present held in Spain, which was an abnormal quantity for this season. Most of this amount would, however, be used for distillery purposes.

Speaking of the almond situation he stated that the Sicilian crop was reported as being only one sixth of what it was last year. Last year's crop was a large one, it will be remembered. This he could not vouch for himself but, considering the damage done by the earthquake, was most likely correct. The Majorca crop of almonds would be about half of what it was in 1908.

Spanish almonds, which are mostly used in Canada, will be plentiful, from present appearances. Chances are that the crop will be a little larger that it was last year, but Mr. Rowley did not anticipate lower prices on that account, giving his reason for so thinking as the annually increasing consumption of shelled almonds.

Mr. Rowley left Montreal for Halifax and St. John Tuesday evening.

CHRISTIE'S BISCUITS

—and the preferential tariff

Canada's particular housewives placed Christie's Biscuits on the preferred list long since. That's one reason why progressive grocers prefer Christie's to all others. But —there are other reasons.

Christie Quality has become a household phrase throughout the Dominion. Other biscuits may be good—undoubtedly are good---but even the best of other "bakes" fall short of Christie Quality. Not because we say so, but because the fact is admitted by particular women and progressive grocers alike.

Then our aggressive advertising helps some. About half a million new dwellers are pouring into our land annually. In order that the best grocers may secure the patronage of our best settlers we are carrying on an extensive advertising campaign.

You certainly can secure the paying trade – the trade that stays---by stocking Christie's Biscuits.

Flour, Cereals and Confectionery Department

Why Flour and Feed are Dearer in England—Patten Not Blamed for it—Cereal Foods Advancing in Prices on Account of Scarcity of Wheat and Oats—Biscuit Prices Advance.

There is great outcry in England, remarks the Literary Digest, over the high price of wheat and the resulting dearness of the poor man's loaf, coincidently with the same condition in this country. But it is noticeable that the British do not blame Mr. Patten for it. Many circumstances, we learn from the London Press, have conspired to make wheat scarce. The area of the wheat-consuming world is becoming wider, but as a compensation wheat is being produced in ever-increasing quantities. Russia, India, Canada and Australia all feed the London wheat market, and although a sympathetic change has resulted in Europe from the state of the Chicago quotations everything must not be laid at the door of Mr. Patten and his confederates. The editor of the Mark Lane Express, the leading London agricultural organ, attributes to several causes the rise in the price of wheat, and remarks:

"Whether there has really been a 'corner' in wheat or whether Mr. Patten only showed astuteness in sizing up the position of the grain trade is a question which is hardly worth discussing here, though the fact remains that he has made a huge fortune in buying wheat for future delivery.

"Naturally, this is a very real source of anxiety to all people in this country. Apart from any questions of manipulation of the American markets by a single operator or clique, with the object of driving prices to a fictitious level, it cannot be denied that the tendency has been for many years in this country for wheat and flour and consequently bread, to get dearer. No doubt the manipulations in America have done a great deal to excite the wheat markets of the world; but the whole cause of the recent advances in this country is not to be found in the manipulations in the pit at Chicago, but rather in the shortage of supplies and the absence of stocks in this country.

"It is reckoned by the best authorities that at the present time the visible supply in round figures is 3,000,000 quarters less than it was twelve months ago, and it is to this fact that the recent increase in price must be ascribed. It is made up in this way: Farmers' holdings, 1,000.000 quarters; merchants, 1,450,000, and on passage, 3,870,000 quarters. Total, 6,350,000, as against 9,350,000 at the corresponding date last year. Against this shortage there is a surplus of nearly 1,500.000 quarters in the United States, but over there values are so big that none of the wheat is likely to come here until well over 40 shillings per quarter can be got for it on this side."

He even goes so far as to see in the dearness of bread an inducement to farmers to revive the cultivation of wheat in Britain, instead of leaving the country to live on imported cereals. This eminent specialist speaks on this point as follows:

"It cannot be denied that a regular price of 40 shillings the quarter for home-grown wheat would act as a great stimulus to arable farming in this country and that large areas of land which were allowed to sow themselves down to grass during the last two decades would again become available for wheat-growing if prices remain at about the level indicated. From the farmers' point of view it would be a great advantage for wheat to reamin steady in price at about 40 shillings the quarter, and this figure would not unduly press on the town dweller, for bread would be little if any dearer than it is to-day, certainly not more than a half-penny a loaf."

This opinion is echoed by the London Daily Mail, in which is read of the rise of the price of wheat in its effects on the farmer.

"Every shilling by which it rises will put five shillings an acre profit into the pocket of the farmer. Agriculture will revive, and there will be a return movement from the cities to the land. From the national standpoint such a result would not be undesirable. Cheap food is not the end of life and it may be very dearly purchased by losses in other directions. We are awakening to the dangers which arise where the state leads a one-sided life."

FLOUR—Ontario winter wheat is still very scarce. Some millers were entertaining the hope that the farmers were holding considerable quantities and which would be brought out after they would get through with their seeding. Seeding, however, is over, and still very little wheat is forthcoming, which is evidence that there is very little wheat in the hands of the farmers. In consequence of this, prices are very firm. It is estimated that over seven million acres are in wheat in the Northwest, and with favorable weather the prospects are glowing. This at a very conservative estimate, should yield 140 million bushels, as long as the prospects continue so favorable prices are not likely to go up any higher. ?

Renowned Flour

What does it mean—to you?

THE FIRST question fired at him was, "Young man, what's your record?" 'Tis always the first question asked of a new man—usually the deciding one. It is not a question of price, merely the reason for for the price.

¶ You, Mr. Business Man, would not select a new clerk by a "pig in the bag" method. You'd inquire into his experience, his ability to sell goods, to do things for you, his recommendations, his reliability. You'd look him over critically. No "hit or miss" method for yours. You have a right to know what he has done, for what man has done man can do—and it's your money and confidence that is at stake.

¶ In your choice of a flour to make or mar your flour trade, why not adopt the same logical method? In FIVE ROSES you employ a salesman having the very best of references, a salesman that never sleeps, that has no "off times," that has done things. Behind FIVE ROSES and your own guarantee there looms up the reputation of our big mills.

FIVE ROSES

Has a Good Record

¶ Is there a flour milled which enjoys a better reputation, a better record, a longer chain of satisfied users? FIVE ROSES spells q-u-a-l-i-t-y. It's not a "reformed spelling"—it has spelt quality almost a quarter century, and always will as long as we own our mills!

¶ On its record, you c a n n o t overlook FIVE ROSES. Here at last, is the flour overcoming the defects of all others—the brand that gives you the kind of service you never expected to receive—the flour you have been looking for. Success is waiting around the corner to shake hands with the man who knows that it is not enough to hold the key to the situation; you must be able to turn it to open the door. You know that FIVE ROSES is the key to the best buyers. Are you the man?

PLEA FOR ASSOCIATIONS.

By W. J. King.

Travelers inform us that when a strong wind passes southward over the Alps, it takes to itself a body of snow; when it reaches the Mediterranean Sea, it drops the snow and takes to itself a body of spray, and when it reaches the hot Sahara desert, it leaves the spray behind and takes a body of sand. In like manner the wind of human thought —a force as it passes from century to century—takes different forms or modes of embodiments.

The forces that govern society are evolutionary and cannot be obstructed, but may be assisted in their progress.

All human institutions are like snowdrifts; they are pure and white at first, but gradually become foul and blackened. All the dirt in the snow remains on top, while the pure elements melt in the sunshine. Sometimes snowdrifts become so thickly crusted with corruption that the sun has no effect upon them and they have to be removed by revolution from underneath.

Uses of Associations.

Organizations are revolutionizing our business methods and many reforms may be expected. The credit system, which has served a useful purpose in the past, but which has been so much abused, is receiving consideration, and eventually through the medium of associations may be abolished.

I am in full sympathy with the spirit of association, and many benefits have been derived through co-operation. Co-operation is a natural law, and in order to be effective requires to be unlimited in its operations. Its governing or fundamental principles are justice, equality and truth. By justice, I mean that sense of honor that should permeate our every act; by equality, I do not mean distribution of wealth, but that equal opportunity and advantage to be acquired and which is absolutely necessary in the obtaining of a livelihood and the maintaining of a perfect life; and by truth I mean the sense of right, the embodiment of those ethical principles, enunciated by an inspired writer, when he said: "Then ye that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please yourselves." This is the ground-work of co-operation.

Have our trade organizations inculcated and accepted those principles?

Have they considered the interests of the weak?

Are they not inspired by the spirit of selfishness to succeed, and to rise to the dizzy heights of materialism and worldly prosperity upon the bruised and mangled bodies of the victims of a cruel and tyrannical system? If individual commercial prosperity is the aim and object of those who comprise the membership of those organizations, I venture to express the opinion that failure of true success will be the final outcome.

The various resolutions adopted are selfish and unchristian and lack the spirit of true association, and their supporters stand condemned in the light of intelligence and commen honesty. Would it not have been better for those interested to discuss their grievances and arrive at a mutual arrangement, instead of inflicting hardship upon the community?

Let us get right ourselves before we pose as social reformers, and their oft-repeated maxim, "United we stand; divided we fall," has been ill-considered.

Greatest Good to All.

I stand as an ardent exponent of co-operation, and recognize no principle of self-interest or class legislation, believing in that divine and social principle, "The greatest good to all without injury to any," and I would not be true to my convictions if I did not advocate a cash system.

A prosperity based upon debt is fictitious. Debt is the foundation of bankruptcy and slavery. It eats like a cancer into a man's life. It destroys self-respect, and creates anxiety and despair. It robs the day of its pleasure and the night of its rest, and I ask, why we should uphold and premiumize a system of credit that is fraught with so much misery and disaster?

Let us unite our forces; let us extend the circle of associations; let us join hands with those who are endeavoring to destroy this corrupting influence; let us bring in every trade; let us bring in every business and let us unite in the common purpose of life.

Warm Weather Causes Splendid Fruit Sales—Pineapple Season the Best on Record—Lemons not Keeping Extra—Cabbage Arriving in Large Quantities—Preference Given to Mildly Cured Fish in Matter of Rates.

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS—Warm weather has resulted in a fine increase in fruit sales, and has also been responsible for larger arrivals of new lines. Another fruit boat arrived in Montreal this week, the fourth of the season, particulars about the cargo of which will be found on another page. California cherries, black and white, are being quoted this week. They are the first of the season, and, as will be noted, are rather high. But they are selling freely. Oranges are fairly steady. Bananas are in good demand at lower figures. Receipts of same are satisfactory. Cranberries, which are dull, are lower. Pineapples are plentiful and more reasonable.

VEGETABLES—Tomatoes, beans and cabbage are arriving in larger quantity and dealers are inclined to shade prices. New potatoes are uncertain, the price fluttering considerably. In New York there was an advance of 50c. at the end of last week, which resulted in a firmer feeling here for a few days. Cucumbers are easier, as are also Boston lettuce, new radishes, and green peas. Lines that have advanced include asparagus, Montreal and P.E.I. potatoes. Local new stuff is beginning to come in, nice shipments of radishes, lettuce and carrots arriving daily.

FISH—The topic of interest in fish circles this week was the action of the Federal Government in putting mildly cured smoked fish upon the same basis, in the matter of express rates, as fresh fish coming from the Atlantic coast. The larger dealers will not be affected one way or the other, but the smaller men, in the towns and villages of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec will benefit considerably. The consumption of finnan haddies, mackerel, cod, shad, and other such lines will increase. There are a number of price changes this week, chiefly downward. Gaspe salmon, which is now being quoted, is coming in freely, and prices are weak. Increased arrivals of halibut are keeping the price steady. Haddock is lower. Among the new lines of fresh fish offered this week are noticed: dressed perch, dore, weakfish, mackerel, sea trout, lake trout, white fish and German carp. Soft shell crabs are selling at 90c. a dozen. Lobsters are coming in more freely, and are lower. The recent storm on the south and east coast of Nova Scotia did considerable damage and the pack of lobsters in Nova Scotia will be light this year. In salt fish, mackerel is higher.

The three fish days this week meant good business for all dealers and grocers.

GREEN FRUITS—Pine apples are still in abundance and constitute the largest portion of the fruit trade. The quantity handled in Toronto is far in excess of any previous year. The quality also was good, and in consequence of the large supply the prices ruled lower than ever before. So far they almost all came from Cuba where the season is now nearly over, and those that do come from there are rather over ripe. The Florida pineapples are now having their turn and are expected to make their appearance in this market in a few days. While most people are supplied for their year's requirements, they may add a little more to their stock when the Floridas arrive, which are admitted by some to be superior in quality to the Cubans.

There is an unusual heavy waste in lemons. For some reason, not accounted for, they do not keep and in consequence prices are almost sure to go higher. Strawberries are arriving in large quantities. Four cars from Maryland and one from Deleware were unloaded on Monday. The quality varies considerably and they must all be carefully assorted, and sold at different prices, from 16c. down.

VEGETABLES—In vegetables, cabbages have by long odds the preference. Every place is fairly loaded with them, and prices suffer in proportion. Florida tomatoes are about over, but Mississippi follows right up and keeps up the supply. New potatoes are now coming from Texas and are cheaper, but are not considered equal to the Bermudas in quality. Asparagus, spinach, rhubarb, etc., are supplied by our own gardeners. Potatoes are unchanged but firm.

FISH—"How is the fish market this morning?" was asked of a fish dealer. "Very good," he replied. "You know, fish are a great brain food and the more the people eat, the better they can understand that they are cheaper as a food than meat. We have no kick to make. The supply and demand just nicely balance each other. This in itself keeps up a good demand, because we

Q—When were Lemons first grown?

A—They were apparently unknown to the ancient Greeks and Romans. The wild stock of the Lemon tree is a native of the Northwest Provinces of India—introduced by the Arabs into Spain between the 12th and 13th centuries and now grown in Sicily, Spain, California, Florida—almost all tropical countries.

TO VISIT THEIR FARM.

Arrangements have been made for the holding of the annual meeting of the Dominion Orchards Company, Montreal, on the company's farm, at Rougemont, Que., on June 9. The shareholders will be conveyed to the farm by train in a special car, and will be given an opportunity of personally seeing what has been accomplished during the year, as well as what may be done in the future.

THE VEGETABLE OIL CENTRE.

arsellles is the leading vegetable oil centre of the world. The first mill for crushing oil was started there in 1817, and since that time the industry has grown wonderfully. There are now 45 mills crushing annually about 465,000 tons of seed. In Marseilles cotton seed was being crushed when it was thrown away in America. Later a market was first found at Marseilles for American crude oil and subsequently for refined oil.

Peanut, sesame, copra, linseed, cotton seed, colzas, poppy seeds and castor seeds are crushed in Marseilles. In addition to the product of the mills, considerable oil is shipped here. In this market about 400,000 barrels of olive oil and about 150,000 barrels of cottonseed oil are bonded annually. France ranks next to Netherlands in being America's best cottonseed oil customer, taking about one-fifth of the entire exportation of this product, and yet it is almost impossible to buy in the shops pure cottonseed oil put up in small packages. Most of the cotton seed oil is mixed with other oils—olive, peanut, and sesame —and sold as "table oil." Consular Report.

WHEN IN OTTAWA.

Ottawa never had an hotel that was so perfectly equipped in every detail as the Hotel Cecil, of which Walter B. Walby is the proprietor. A quarter of a million dolalrs was spent in making the hotel up-to-date in every respect, and to-day the dining room, cuisine, bar, bedrooms, represent the last word in modern hotel building and management. Electric lights, running water, hot and cold in the bed rooms, electric elevators, fine sample rooms, make the Cecil the ideal hotel for the traveller. Its central location, corner Sparks and Bank Street, is something further in its favor. The commercial traveler must go a long way to find a finer hostlery.—Advt.

G. W. Hodgson has purchased the plant of the American Gum Company, 898 St. Lawrence Street, and is now installed there . The firm name will in future be, The Hodgson Gum Company. Mr. Hodgson purposes building a new factory within the year. All the brands put out will be new ones.

HOW EXPERIENCE COUNTS

Perhaps there are those who will tell you that experience does not count when it comes to packing Kippered Herring.
Don't you believe them. There's a "know how" to this business as there is to all others, and the education necessary to enable a firm to properly pack Kippered Herring is not gained in a day.

That's why we are so sure that Ice Castle Brand Kippered Herring are not simply good, but the best obtainable in Canada, or elsewhere.

We have been in the business for such a long time, and have met with such success, that we feel justified in saying that we have the experience that enables us to scientifically pack Kippered Herring that will meet with the approval of the most critical buyer.

The Canadian Grocer,

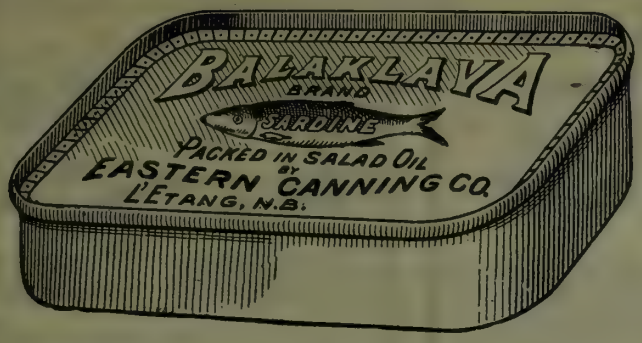
Dear Sirs:



We have been advertising in the Canadian Grocer for a number of years but never realized the good work you are doing until last Fall when the writer took a business trip through the North West and British Columbia.

Your journal seemed to be well thought of by the retail grocers, and many of them, especially in Vancouver and Victoria, took the trouble to mention that they had seen our ad in the Grocer.

This was appreciated by us as it is rather difficult to know just what class of advertising is giving us results. However we are now satisfied that your journal is an excellent medium for any manufacturer to use who wants to talk business to the wholesale or retail grocer of Canada.

Bad Bills--Slow Collections Something's Wrong

When a grocer fails his reason is usually: "bad accounts," or "couldn't collect." What's the use of such talk, when there's away to prevent the trouble?

BUSINESS FOR YOU AND FOR US.

SUN PASTE Stove Polish in Tins goes so much farther on the stove than the so-called liquids (which are always settling out) that the up-to-date housekeeper is bound to be far better pleased when you sell her SUN PASTE.

It is always ready to use, no separation of the ingredients and, as a result, she uses it oftener and comes back to you for more. That's business. Good for you and good for us.

EVERY merchant's back shop tells the story of stickers —things that sold well for a time and then went flat. You know what they have been in your case, don't you—and you don't need to look them over to find that SURPRISE SOAP isn't on the list.

SURPRISE has been a good seller from the very first

And every year it is getting harder for the man who sells a substitute to do any business at all. He finds that women simply won't listen to his argument about soaps that for the minute pay him a better profit—they've tried that kind before—and why should they when SURPRISE value is the best in the world?

EVERY week we have been telling you of the merits of the Old Homestead Brand of Canned Fruits and Vegetables and seeking to impress you why it would pay you to feature this brand. You know in your experience as a grocer that the best paying trade is the kind that stays. Trade that floats your way to-day will float some other way to-morrow if you do not do something to stay its disposition to roam. You can do this by building around the wandering ones a solid wall of value, quality, integrity and reputation.

One of the best means of contributing to this end is by selling, in the line of canned fruits and vegetables, the kind that retain nature's flavor, that are produced in the best equipped factory under the most sanitary conditions by the most up-to-date methods and selected from first quality stuff.

What "The Lancet" says:

"Cobra" Boot Polish has just been analysed by Dr. Ed. Nihaul, Professor of Industrial Chemistry at the University of Liege, and he has recognised that the Polish does not contain lamp-black or any acid substance. This is important so far as the preservation of the leather is concerned, but from the health point of view the Polish does not close up the pores of the leather, so that the feet keep fresh and cool.
—September 6th, 1905.

from the health point of view

"COBRA" Polish instantly commends itself to those who appreciate the difference between health preserving, hygienic shoe dressing which keeps footwear in good condition, and the destructive compounds made of acids, oils, treacle and soot known as "Blacking."

Dealers are Not Mules

H. M. Montgomery in Printer's Ink.

I THINK the trade papers are going through the same evolution that magazines went through years ago—educating advertisers to see the business value of spending time and thought talking to readers.

Dealers are not a lot of mules, as some advertisers seem to think. They are alive to good, new merchandise, and it is merely a business-like deference to their intelligence to advertise to them first. After distribution has been fairly well established, then the campaign to consumers will both move the goods faster and help to stock in other dealers.

The trade paper advertising makes it a safer risk for the jobbers to take hold, and thus the new product is skidded along to success in quick, safe grooves without the bumps that are frequently given to new products by over-enthusiastic but premature advertising.

I have known of manufacturers being spoiled for all time as advertisers by the unintelligent persuasions of some advertising agent whose lack of knowledge of merchandising conditions made him incapable of comprehending the costliness of his impracticable advice to jump into a campaign to the public the very next month.

One case I know of was that of a manufacturer in the textile line, who had practically decided to spend a large sum advertising his goods, according to a plan laid before him by an inexperienced advertising agent.

When he told his plans to a seasoned veteran in trade-paper textile advertising, it didn't take long to point out how utterly impractical it was to begin on the consumer at once, with the season, style and distribution conditions as they were.

Naturally, when the advertising agent's plans were temporarily set aside, he was angry, and desired to warn the advertiser that, if he didn't look out, the trade papers would "hog" all his money. But in this case it is safe to say that the trade paper advertising saved that advertiser to the magazines by safely solving his dealers' and distribution problem, the lack of which was pretty certain to have spelled failure.

Probably there are trade papers which would endeavor to "hog" an advertising appropriation, but the responsible ones are not so narrow; neither are responsible advertising agents.

Wholesalers Want Exclusive Distribution

Sentiment Expressed by President of the United States National Wholesale Grocers' Association at Recent Convention—Urges Members to Find Out What They Want and Why Before Approaching Manufacturers.

Detroit, June 7.—"We naturally and properly feel more kindly towards those manufacturers who distribute their product through the jobber than we do towards those who sell to both jobber and retailer. We naturally push more cheerfully and energetically the sale of the product of those concerns which show the most favorable attitude towards us—this is correct merchandising."

The above remarks were numbered among the sentiments expressed at the annual convention of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association held here last week, by President William Judson.

In the course of his address he further stated:

"In dealing with manufacturers, transportation companies and producers we first find out definitely what we want and why we think we ought to have it. The proper committee then thinks the matter out to a conclusion and in a dignified, businesslike way takes it up with the other party in interest without bravado on the one hand or fawning on the other.

"'Vinegar catches no flies,' asperity wins no commercial victories. Our committees have learned this in many important engagements. The Scriptures say: 'A soft answer turneth away wrath'; our committees have found that conciliatory speech opens the way to fruitful negotiations.

"The so-called big interests are surprisingly amenable to proper approach. Knowing definitely what we want, and being able to give a good reason why we think we should have it, we are certain to secure a respectful hearing and a response, either granting what we ask or giving a good reason why it cannot be granted. Prejudice and bigotry are banished from our counsels and open-mindedness is our mascot in our dealings and negotiations; and our committees make sure that they are as amenable to reason as the other party to the conference.

Value of Joint Discussions.

"It is surprising how amicably the most radical differences may be discussed when both parties to the interview are open-minded and able to give reasons for their respective attitudes. While we do not always get all we want, we do get much, and we always get a reason for not getting all we ask. This pulls the sting and leaves no room for poisonous prejudice or rancorous resentment to breed in uninformed minds.

"The big interests do not find us narrow-minded, captious and selfish, as we have sometimes been pictured to them, and we do not find them as arbitrary and greedy as they have sometimes been represented to us. They need us and we them, and with this as common ground upon which to stand we get as close together on matters of mutual interest as proper regard for our respective individual interests will permit.

"Trade is a matter of fact and not of sentiment. Conditions of supply and demand; war and peace; flood and drouth, and hundreds of other things are influencing factors over which no set of manufacturers or distributers have control, but all of which must be considered in arriving at equitable conclusions. These considerations all show how out of place are ignorance and prejudice and how all-important are information and fair-mindedness.

"We naturally push most cheerfully and energetically the sale of the product of those concerns which show the most favorable attitude towards us—this is correct merchandising.

Wholesalers' Attitudes.

"We naturally and properly feel more kindly towards those manufacturers who distribute their product through the jobber than we do towards those who sell to both jobber and retailer. We contend that the attitude of the latter is uncommercial, illogical and unfair to both jobber and the rank and file of the retail trade. Why should we feel favorably disposed towards those manufacturers who sell direct to the large retailers and then expect us to carry their product in stock to supply those retailers with whose accounts, for any reason whatever, such manufacturers do not want to be encumbered?

"We also rightly and enthusiastically favor most those manufacturers who try hardest to enable us to make profits on their goods. In this connection it is both gratifying and encouraging to call atention to the fact that of late there are conspicuous examples of manufacturers making extraordinary efforts to aid jobbers in making better profits on staple commodities that too often are sold by wholesalers at little or no profit.

"We should give, are giving emphatic endorsement to the efforts of these manufacturers by increased volume of sales when possible on their product, not only because of the more satisfactory profits available, but also to encourage other manufacturers to do the same thing, and to secure a continuance of such welcome service at the hands of those manufacturers who are extending it. This is one of the gratifying results of the diplomatic work of our committees. It is impossible to overestimate its importance, and the full and permanent benefit of this achievement can be clinched only by each of us in our individual capacity doing our respective share towards the perpetuation of the improved profit conditions thus brought about. Mind you, in doing this we accomplish one of the vital purposes for which our organization exists—that of showing manufacturers and producers that they subesrve their own best interests by giving to our welfare the consideration that our acknowledged importance to them deserves.

"This logically leads me to refer again to a matter which I have discussed at previous meetings, and that is the practice of handling staple commodities without profit, sometimes in the past amounting possibly to 30 or 40 per cent. of the business of the wholesale grocer.

Self-Wrought Injustice.

"To demand and receive adequate compensation for services rendered is not only commercially equitable but morally obligatory. The old Scriptural dictum that 'The laborer is worthy of his hire' is the very essence of common sense, the unimpeachable dictate of business morality. Since the edict went forth that 'In the sweat of thy brow shalt thou earn thy bread,' labor has been the test of worth, and its resulting fruits the reward of the toiler. The jobber, therefore, who labors and risks without exacting a fair price for the service cheapens his vocation, does injustice to himself, inflicts undeserved burdens on his fellow workers of like calling and weakens the moral fibre of those whom he gratuitously serves. Moreover, he fosters weakness, insecurity and moral turpitude where he should inspire strength, self-reliance and wholsesome respect for the laws of Nature and the rules of righteous success.

"Every cause has its inevitable effect and every service should have its just reward. I speak earnestly on this subject besause we all feel deeply both its material and moral importance.

"The honors you have heaped upon me by making me your president for a series of terms has made me think more deeply on these matters from the viewpoint of the responsibilities of the position than I could have thought from that of the individual jobber. But the broad basis of observation and experience that has meen my privilege through your generous kindness has given me a realizing sense of the basic importance of this matted that amounts to profound conviction.

"The banks we patronize do not lend us 30 per cent. or 40 per cent. of the money we borrow without interest; the railroads that transport our merchandise do not handle 30 per cent. or 40 per cent. of it without freight charge; those from whom we purchase do not sell us 30 per cent. or 40 per cent. of the merchandise we buy without profit. We pay the full price for all service of all kinds that is rendered us. Why, then, in the name of common sense, should we invest our capital, employ our time, take the risk of business and sell 30 per cent. or 40 per cent., or any other per cent. of our merchandise without profit?

"If I read the signs of the times rightly co-operation is taking the place of cut-throat competition as a business slogan. The time has come for cut-throat competition to be relegated to the museum of commercial monstrosities to keep company with 'prison for debt' and 'chattel slavery.'"

Entire Advertising Scheme of a Retail Grocer

How Wm. Robson Keeps His Name and Goods Before the Public in Addition to Using Newspaper Space—His Sample Distribution Plan Which Has Produced Good Results — Obtains Rubber Stamps From Manufacturers of Food Products For Nothing.

Lindsay, June 9.—One of the recognized qualifications in successful advertising campaigns is persistency. This pertains to the retail grocer as well as to the manufacturer of a new product, which he wishes to introduce to the retail trade. A good name in business is essential to success and a publicity scheme which tends to produce that is at all times commendable.

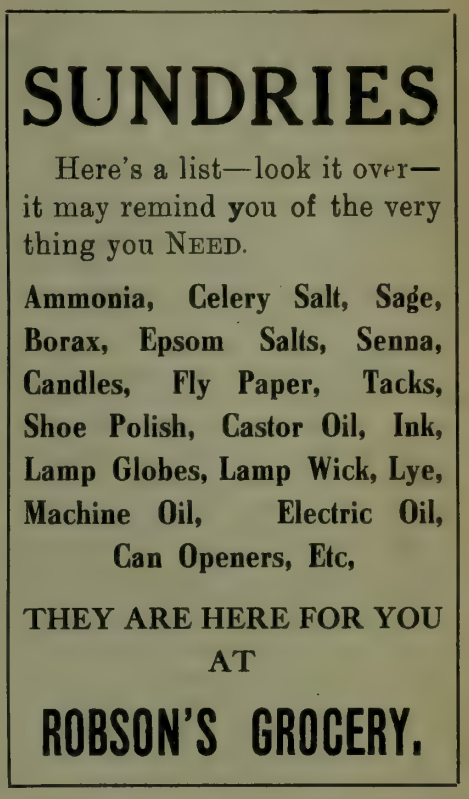
Merchants are found to frequently institute advertising campaigns, expecting every person who crosses the threshold of the store door to mention that they want to purchase a certain article as per advertisement in the local paper.

One of the persistent advertisers in the retail grocery trade is Wm. Robson, Lindsay, Ont. He is waging an advertising campaign with results because he is placing before the Lindsay public his name, the goods and quality of the goods he sells and because he takes advantage of every scheme that presents itself and looks favorable.



ROBSON ADVERTISING SCHEME—Rubber Stamp Used on Goods Leaving the Store.

"You can't judge the value of your advertising merely by direct results," he recently said intimating that the prestige secured could only be observed by the increase of business from year to year.

Mr. Robson's system includes several lines. In the first place he uses newspaper space and every other day presents an appeal to the public on the quality and variety of goods he sells. He writes his own ads and they are well written. An example of his work in this respect was illustrated in the Special Spring and Export number of The Grocer, when one of them was chosen by an ad critic, to represent what he considered good advertising meant.

"My newspaper ads are paying me," remarked Mr. Robson. "I find that autumn, winter and spring, are the best seasons for us on account of so many spending the summer months at the resorts around here. During the summer I intend to discontinue for a time."

. Samples Distribution Scheme. .

Another link in the Robson advertising scheme is the sending out to customers and all prospective customers, samples of various goods on sale. This is one of Mr. Robson's own ideas.

As will be seen by the accompanying cut, he uses envelopes with reading notices on one side. These are in dimensions, about 4½ inches by 3 inches.

Since quality in goods commands a good deal of Mr. Robson's attention, he is not afraid to let the people know what he carries. In the envelopes he places samples of tea, currants, biscuits and other grocery articles and distributes them, not only among customers—he believes in holding what he has — but among those who he thinks might be induced to become customers.

The reading notice on the envelope contains a blank space in which to describe the article sent, and the price, of course, is always included. The remainder of his communication to the public may be seen from the cut.

"I find that the distribution of these samples are of much benefit; they give to the intending purchasers something substantial. They are able to tell exactly what class of goods we carry, without having to buy them and in this way we often get into touch with consumers, who otherwise would not come near our store.'' That is the way in which Mr. Robson described the value of the sample distribution scheme.

Another point should be noticed here. The Robson store is known as the ''Pure Food Store,'' and as the stock is maintained so far as possible in accord with this motto, the proprietor secures an additional prestige.

Advertising That Costs Nothing.

As before intimated every opportunity is seized to keep the Robson grocery before the public and Mr. Robson has hit upon another scheme for this purpose, which costs him practically nothing.

He has a large woden box beneath his counter filled with rubber stamps. These were presented to him gratis by various manufacturers of high grade food stuffs, including breakfast foods, teas, pickles, etc. They were got for the asking. These stamps contain an ad for the manufacturing firm and they read as if written by Mr. Robson himself. For example, ''We sell H———' food products. You cannot buy better. Perfectly pure and cleanly made, etc.'' At the bottom in large letters is ''Robson's Grocery.''

''Manufacturers, we find, are usually only too willing to supply us with these stamps. We use them on all our paper bags stamping them on the side where they can be easily seen and read. The clerk and myself are able to stamp a few hundred bags in a short time.

Other Rubber Stamps Used.

''This gave me the idea to get some rubber stamps of my own,'' said Mr. Robson, ''and I frequently use them on parcels and bags sent out of the store.''

Examples of these are shown herewith, with the headings ''vegetables'' and ''sundries,'' and the talks following are worth while reading.

Strict attention is given to parcel delivery. For this a small printed leaf is used on which are spaces left for the name and street of the purchaser and the number of parcels. The blanks are distinctly and carefully filled in, so that little temptation is given the delivery man to make blunders.

AN EXTRA HOLIDAY.

F. W. Thompson, vice-president and general manager of the Ogilvie Flour Mills Company, Montreal, has issued a notice to employes of the firm to the effect that an extra week's vacation, on full pay, will be granted all employes joining the Canadian volunteer militia. Mr. Thompson's patriotic action has been warmly commended on all sides.

It will be recalled that Col. A. E. Labelle, the company's local manager, commanded the Canadian team which went toi Bisley last year. Col. Labelle commands the 65th Rifles in Montreal.

Business in the Wilds of the Silver Districts

Interior View Of Christakos Bros., Store At Haileybury, Ont. —Equipments That Compare Favorably With Those of Any Up-to-Date Store On The Frontier—Little Credit Requested By The Miners.

Not many grocers would turn to Haileybury in the wilds of Northern Ontario for an example of what a grocery store ought to be. The accompanying picture of Christakos Bros.' store, Haileybury, shows plainly enough that they might look a long while for a better. Here is a store in a region still under the sway of the mining prospector, the pioneer farmer and the lumber jack, but there are few finer appearing stores, better equipped or better stocked in the Capital City of the Province.

A Haileybury Store Equipped With Most of The Modern Conveniences, Owned by Christakos Bros.

Christakos Bros., both young men, went to Haileybury two years ago and began business in a shack. Their trade grew with the town and they soon moved into their present premises, a substantial two-story building, two stories and cellar, 30 feet by 70 feet.

Miners Are Good Customers.

They now have a staff of seven employess and Mr. Christakos states that if the business keeps increasing they will have to get more help. The firm carries a $10,000 stock of general groceries and their trade is largely with prospectors, mining camps, and mine operators.

''We find them first class customers,'' said Mr. Christakos, '' and not looking for any great line of credit.'' There, as in the older south, the dead line of business seems to be the credit line.

The firm enjoyed a big rush of business with the opening of navigation and the spring movement in and towards the silver lands.

''Did you not see,'' asked Mr. Christakos discussing trade in the new north, ''the published list of Peary's food stuffs for his last dash to the Pole? One of the big items was tea, nearly half a ton of it, far more, at any rate, than would suffice for normal consumption by his crew. Well we're pretty big tea drinkers in this north country. There aren't so many other good things to drink you know.''

Up-to-Date Fixtures.

It is well to draw attention to the modern equipment of the store, the telephone, electric light, plate glass, silent salesman, cash register, computing scale, paper rack, refrigerator and pressed metal ceiling. A glance at the illustration also shows that confectionery is prominently displayed. It forms a good part of the business. It all goes to show that in these days civilization with its suit cases comes in on the train after the prospector.

Earnestness triples earning power. There should be no room for a man who does not mean business, and who does not earnestly try to get all the business that his utmost exertion can secure.

WHAT CASH DISCOUNTS MEAN.

One of the important features in the running of a retail business is systematic buying methods and the chief among these is obtaining the cash discount. This is well illustrated by correspondence in this week's issue from Perth. There a grocer kept careful account of the discounts he received in view of prompt payments and found that he was saving enough money to pay his taxes, his insurance and lighting bills.

This is a matter which every retailer should study. If a Perth grocer does enough business to have his taxes, insurance, and light paid for by cash discounts, merchants in other places whether large or small, should be able to do the same.

The cash discount is one of the secrets of the success of R. C. Braund, a Peterboro merchant, who, as a recent article in The Grocer pointed out, has built up a business of $50,000 turnover on a visible capital of $2.50. These are only two instances of many.

With the knowledge of these facts merchants are given a direct impetus to look to their buying. The discount not only means a straight gain but it simplifies matters with the jobbers and places the retailers in a much better light.

THE SECRET COMMISSIONS ACT.

The Aylesworth Bill, making it criminally illegal to give a secret commission or rebate, and known as the Secret Commissions Act, has been a topic for much discussion among all sections of the trade since it appeared in The Grocer of May 14th last.

The bill, of course, applies to all commercial transactions and was introduced into Parliament by Hon. A. B. Aylesworth to combat the perpetration of such frauds as led to the recent enquiry into the Marine and Fisheries Department of the Quebec Government.

It has been reported that the Minister of Justice was not responsible for the bill but that it emanated from some Canadian wholesalers in the grocery trade and retailers have been led to believe this.

Such a view of the matter, however, does not seem to have much of a foundation. It is probably true that wholesale grocers are delighted with the bill but when it is considered that it applies to all classes of trade and naturally covers all commercial transactions, there can be little reason to suspect that the wholesale grocers were the fathers of it. Making it illegal to give a secret rebate refers just as much to insurance companies and their agents as it does to the manufacturers of food products, wholesale grocers and their travelers.

A RETAILER'S TURN OVER.

Some time ago the public mind, the New York Journal of Commerce points out, became impregnated with the virus that 90 per cent. of all business men fail.

Commercial paper has for this reason never attained the dignity accorded to less volatile security in savings institutions and places where money is loaned. Then again the average retailer is not a financier and the weakness of retailing, wherever it has shown weakness, has generally been at the financial end of the system.

There is really less reason why retailers should fail in business than there is for manufacturers failing, and while we all like to tell that the country store was the first department store in the land, every merchant knows that the real strength in the department store system lies in the measure of wisdom shown in its financial control.

In February, 1907, long before the country was alive to the dangers that were ahead in merchandising, one of the United States greatest merchants said to a newspaper reporter. "The retailers will have to sell on a decreasing margin of net profits," and that statement in print woke up many a business man in different parts of the country to a realization of what was ahead.

One of the factors in a large jobbing house was asked to explain what the statement really implied, and as he was one of the few men who after 40 years in harness had been able to adapt himself to the new system, what he said seemed very illuminating as bearing on the elements that are gradually displacing personality in trade.

Said he: "No retailer needs to fall if his system is right. He should never carry more than four times his capital in merchandise. He should turn his capital over at least four times a year, as shown by the volume of his sales. As a matter of fact many metroplitan stores turn their capital over six and seven times a year. On a capital of $200,000 the turnover should be at least $800,000. Five per cent. profit on this volume gives $40 000, and 10 per cent on the capital eats up $20,000 of this amount. The rest can be applied to a capital account or surplus. The struggle will be to keep expenses below 20 per cent. and the effort will be to sell at 25 per cent. profit. The difference in net profit will depend on the success of the effort and the strength of the struggle. In order to make 25 per cent. on sales it is necessary to add 33 1-3 per cent. to the cost of goods."

These figures are necessarily rough and offhand. There are some stocks that cannot be turned even once a year, but in a well known retail store a few weeks ago the bedding stocks were turned over five times in two weeks. There was a run on in that special department. By following the figures of sales closely it is possible to see what goods are being purchased most freely and the success of merchandising lies in knowing what will move best. It is one thing to have a reputation for carrying the choicest goods in the world, it is another to sell the goods the great mass of people want to buy, and to have them for sale when the people want to buy them. The happy medium between these extremes makes great merchants and it also makes great combinations of retail stores not only possible but desirable.

The grouping of retailers for better buying methods is seen in the formation of buying syndicates of all kinds. The desire among them to expand their merchandise accounts and make buying in large amounts possible, is seen in the way in which many of them are seizing the control of stores in different centres. The crystallizing of store management is going on everywhere, and it all leads up to the crystalization of the financial management of the stores. Strong personality will always assert itself, but its future efforts will be directed along systematic lines that are now only in the process of evolution in merchandising.

Novel Ticket Selling Plan Introduced by Montreal Retail Grocers' Association—Reports of Fish Catches off Coast of Nova Scotia—Fish Being Shipped to United States — Advances in Flour and Cornmeal at St. John.

MONTREAL.

June 8.—A new plan for the selling of picnic tickets was suggested at the regular monthly meeting of the Montreal Retail Grocers' Association, held last Thursday evening in Montreal. Most interesting of the subjects discussed was the coming picnic, of course, which is to be held at Maple Grove, on July 21. First Vice-President J. D. Boileau announced the new idea. Each grocer will be given eleven tickets. On selling ten of these he becomes the owner of the eleventh, and so does not have to pay any railroad fare or entrance fee to the picnic grounds himself. If he sells twenty tickets he is entitled to two free tickets. The scheme was most enthusiastically received, and if the majority of the members of the association take the matter up the organization will be considerably benefitted, and the annual excursion will be a remarkable success. The tickets are saleable at 90c each. Maple Grove, the destination of the excursionists, is a beautiful place on the New York Central, and is an ideal picnic spot. In addition to the ordinary picnic prizes to be distributed to winners in various contests, there will be special prizes aggregating $200. These prizes will be drawn for on the picnic grounds. Every person purchasing a ticket stands a chance of winning one of these. L. E. Lafond started a little discussion on the manner in which a local lighting company was alleged to be unfairly treating the trade. It was claimed that the company was not charging for gas at right prices. A member asked for information on the stand which the city would take in regard to early closing. A recent judgment handed down proclaimed as legal the city by-law calling upon retail grocers and other like dealers to close at seven o'clock Wednesday and Thursday evenings. The Early Closing Association has been fighting for their object for the past few years. Sentiment has always been evenly divided. Little interest was taken in the matter at the meeting. It was also asked how the city felt in regard to the grocery stores being open on Sundays, as they are in certain cases. The meeting thought that it would be wise to address the city council a letter asking them for the desired information. This will be done. It was announced, amid applause, that the breweries had decided that after July 1 they would no longer sell beer to private houses, as they have, many of them, been in the habit of doing in the past.

Chausse & Co., Montreal, agents for the Kentucky Refining Co., have removed to 17 St. Gabriel Street, where they have larger and more convenient quarters.

H. F. Pacaud & Co. have secured large premises at 594 Papineau Avenue, Montreal, and have removed their factory to that address, from Varennes, Que. They are now making starch, soda, harness and machine oil.

HALIFAX.

June 8.—The local grocery markets are in excellent condition and business generally is reported to be good. Large quantities of fruit are now coming on the market, and it is of excellent quality. Pine apples are more plentiful than for some years and the prices are lower, good large pines retailing at 20 cents each. Bananas are in good supply and of fine quality, the choicest stock selling from $2.25 to $2.50 per bunch. Green truck such as spinach, radishes, lettuce, cabbages, cucumbers, asparagus, and rhubarb are now on the market, also being local grown with the exception of cukes and cabbages, which are United States.

The receipts of good butter show a heavy falling off during the past week, but there is no change in the price. The farmers are now busy with their crops and to this is attributed the decline. Eggs are in good supply and the price remains steady at 18 cents for the choicest stock.

The fish markets are now very active. Mackerel have struck in along the coast and in soce sections of the province large catches have been made. At Lockeport, two hundred barrels were taken in one day. The fish are not quite as large as the usual spring run. The first fish that reached the market early in the week sold from 25 to 30 cents apiece, but the large number of mackerel coming on the market later caused a big drop and they are now selling at two for a quarter. Owing to the small catch of the United States mackerel fleet in southern waters this season, there is a good demand for the fish in from that market, and heavy shipments from this province are now being made. The first big shipment was from Yarmouth, the steamer Prince Arthur taking 150 barrels of iced mackerel to Boston. If the weather holds favorable some big hauls are expected, as several large schools have been sighted.

The lobster season has closed, and the last and the record shipment of the season was made to Boston this week, the steamer Prince Arthur sailing from Yarmouth with 1,630 crates. They are quoted in Boston at $10 per crate. The season just closed has been a most disastrous one for the lobster fishermen, a recent storm having destroyed gear valued at least at $100,000.

Salmon are now being taken but so far the catches are small. The prices however, are good and will likely keep up until the fish become more plentiful.

On the Cape Breton coast there is a phenomenal run of haddock, and the fisherman are reaping a harvest. Never before have such large catches been made, the fishermen returning to shore with their boats loaded to the gunwhales.

Arthur S. Barnstead, Secretary of Industries and Immigration, returned this week from Ottawa where he was conferring with the Department of Immigration in company with Hon. Dr. Landry, Minister of Agriculture for New Brunswick, and R. H. Montgomery, of Summerside, P.E.I. The matter of further development of the oyster industry in the Maritime Provinces was presented to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Mr. Barnstead reports the interview to have been satisfactory. As a result the terms of modus vivendi have been referred to the provincial governments so that the difficulties that have heretofore existed with respect to securing adequate titles for private culture will be eliminated. Other matters which were presented by the delegation were favorably considered and such steps have been taken as will ensure active co-operation on the part of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and that of the This leaves the Angostora in a class by and developing the oyster industry.

ST. JOHN.

June 8.—The market has been rather active lately and a number of changes are recorded in the prices of several staple lines. Ontario flour advanced fifteen cents again last week, and is now quoted at $7 wholesale, which is only fifteen cents below Manitoba. Cornmeal is up 10 cents a barrel, clear pork is $1 a barrel higher and lard is held at an advance of ¼ to ½ cent a pound. Brooms are twenty-five cents a dozen cheaper.

Eggs are higher, but butter remains about the same. Rhubarb is coming in freely and is selling at three cents a pound retail.

In fish, shad are still high, but salmon are coming in quite plentifully and the price has dropped to twenty and twenty-five cents a pound.

The cold weather has interfered somewhat with the crops and a number of the farmers in the province, who put their seed in early, had them nipped with the frost and had to replant.

William C. Cross, of Hall & Fairweather, Andrew Malcolm, and W. L. Harding, of W. F. Hatheway & Co. will attend the annual meeting of the Dominion Wholesale Grocers' Exchange, in Victoria, B.C., on June 24th. They will leave early next week.

Sanford Fawcett and Carey Fawcett, honey dealers, in Memramcook, have made an assignment to Sheriff Willett, for the benefit of their creditors. Their liabilities are placed at $2,000.

LONDON.

June 9.—Wholesale trade continues to improve, with payments coming in strong for all kinds, and India and Ceylon teas are very firm. Nothing is doing in finer qualities of Japans, which have pretty nearly all been picked up by United States buyers. Valencia raisins are rather lower. California seeded and prunes are about ½ cent up with the market strong.

Retail trade in the city during the week was fair with excellent prospects.

E. F. Reed, grocer, corner Horton and Colborne Streets, was married on Wednesday last to Miss Robinson, of South London, and is receiving the congratulations of his fellow grocers.

Many of the retail grocers spent the first half holiday of the season on Wednesday last, at Springbank Park, where they witnessed a game in the Retail Merchants' baseball league between the grocers and shoe clerks. The latter won by a score of 8 to 7. The grocers' team contains some capable players and with good management, should be able to make a good showing. The series for the Lea Pickling trophy will not commence for a month yet.

A meeting of the executive committee of the Retail Grocers' Association was held last week to elect committees for the purpose of visiting the grocers for donations for their annual excursion to Detroit on the 23rd inst. Already a number of the firms have donated, among them a Toronto firm which forwarded a large cheque. McCormick Manufacturing Co. and D. S. Perrin & Co. have donated neat little packages to be presented to the ladies on the train. Local wholesale grocery and fruit firms and manufacturers have also contributed liberally. A large amount of correspondence was received from people in Detroit about the grocers' outing. Those present were: President, E. J. Ryan, N. McLeod, J. Hockins, H. Ranahan, T. Shaw, F. Travers, C. W. Summers and F. W. Paull.

Thos. Martindale, a millionaire wholesale grocer of Philadelphia, and a native Londoner, was the guest of honor at the Canadian Club luncheon at the Tecumseh last week, and gave an address on "Advertising as a money maker." In the course of his remarks he said that in the United States wholesale grocers confine their advertising to weekly or monthly trade papers. He could not recollect ever seeing the ad of a wholesale grocer in a daily or ordinary weekly newspaper. "Trade journal advertising," he said, "is to be commended, as the trade papers exist primarily to help in promoting the interests of the particular trade it represents, and they generally are filled with the latest trade news, advice, statistics etc., pertaining to their field. Besides it stands to reason that such advertising ought to be profitable in thus being directed right at the prospective buyers who subscribe for and thus help to make profitable such publications. Many years ago an experiment was tried by the late William M. Singerly, the proprietor of the Philadelphia Record, an influential and splendidly-managed paper, having a wide circulation in such Democratic states as Kentucky, Maryland, Delaware, the Virginas, North Carolina and Tennessee, besides its clientele of readers in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, etc. In order to encourage jobbers and particularly wholesale grocers to advertise in the Record, Mr. Singerly sent free copies of the Record to the hotels in all towns of over 10,000 population in many of these states to encourage the jobbing houses to use the columns of the Record in aiding them to sell their goods. I have heard it said that many thousand copies of the paper were thus placed on the free list, but the jobbing trade and the wholesale grocers in particular didn't respond at all. Therefore, in time the free list was entirely cut off. All of which goes to show that the wholesale grocer in the States, as in Canada, knows what he is about.

INGERSOLL.

June 9.—The retail merchants intend making a mighty effort to frown down ticket selling and its kindred evil, soliciting charity, during business hours. Scarcely a day goes by but demands are made upon the finances of the merchants, either by charitable organizations or others soliciting alms. The merchants, of all individuals, are invariably singled out for first attack, and while in the past they have submitted without a murmur, they now believe that united and uncompromising action should be taken to put a stop to the wholesale soliciting which has become absolutely obnoxious. If this course were decided upon it would place the merchant upon the same plane as other citizens, and they would doubtless be immune from countless attacks which they now experience. Merchants recognize the importance of the question and that it is one in which they must stand together. The matter has been slated for careful consideration at the next meeting when definite action will no doubt be taken in this respect as well as in regard to bad debts.

It is indeed pleasing to note that so far as the Ingersoll branch of the Retail Merchants' Association is concerned that there are reassuring signs of life. The members have come out of their hibernation, which has been most protracted, and they have now taken a grasp of affairs of mutual interest that simply spells "business" in capital letters. The Association was formed some two or three years ago, and for a while everything was serene. But there was a gradual decline of interest, the attendance at the meetings began to shrink, and eventually no meetings were held. In expressing their individual opinions the merchants were always frank enough to admit the advantages of organization, but for some reason or other that concerted action which makes things hum, was conspicuous by its absence. But times have changed and the fact is worth jotting down that Ingersoll is going to have one of the most thoroughly organized, pushing, progressive Retail Merchants' Asssociations to be found in any community of similar proportions in the Dominion. This at least is what the merchants say and we know their capabilities once they have determined to put their shoulders to the wheel of progress. The merchants have been aroused to the necessity of taking immediate and earnest action in regard to several matters in which they are vitally interested. One of these is the soliciting during business hours by which they are simply "held up" from day to day. Another matter that they believe should receive attention is bad debts. The opening meeting of the reorganized association clearly indicated that the merchants mean business. They have outlined a progressive policy and intend to give it vigorous attention. The new officers of the association are:

President—John J. McLeod.
1st Vice-President—R. W. Waterhouse.
2nd Vice-President—Theo. Wilson.
Secretary—R. N. Thurtell.
Treasurer—W. I. Hogarth.

During the past couple of weeks two grocery stores have been burglarized. The manner in which both places were entered would indicate that the nocturnal visitor was familiar with the surroundings. The store of L. C. Menhennick was entered by means of a rear window. A small amount of change and some candy was missing. The thief overlooked a cash box containing about five dollars in silver. S. M. Fleet's store was also entered by way of a rear window. As in the case of the visit to Mr. Menhennick's store only a small amount was stolen.

WOODSTOCK.

June 9.—The E. J. Coles Company are enlarging their already large store by an addition to the rear which will give them half as much floor space as they have at the present time. The Coles stores handle lines of groceries, furniture, hardware, crockery, books, and all manner of miscellaneous and fancy articles. The addition is now under construction and will be completed this summer.

George Parker and W. J. Parker, two brothers who have grocery stores in this city, one in the east end and one in the west, were in Paris last week at the meeting of the Paris and Brant Baptist district. George Parker is a prominent member of the First Baptist Church and W. J. of the Oxford Street Baptist Church, and they were at the convention as delegates.

Peter Poole, a well known grocer, went a-fishing one day last week, and slipped into the mill pond while in pursuit of the elusive tenants of the water. John Markey, editor of the Sentinel-Review, who was with him, went after Mr. Poole and then a Mr. Hodges went after the two fishermen. In some way Mr. Markey's shoulder was put out of joint. Mr. Poole was pulled out of the water and sustained no injury.

Woodstock has no retail merchants' association. One was formerly in existence here, but it died slowly. There was no trouble in securing members, but the few who were active in the matter found great difficulty in getting members to attend, and gradually the association fell into a decline and soon was no more. There is occasional talk of reviving its dry bones, but it is difficult to see what the use would be unless local merchants secure to a greater degree the spirit of co-operation and mutual assistance.

Once again are the business men meeting with the ticket selling graft in all its force. All the year it is bad enough, but in the summer it is particularly obnoxious. This refers to the way business men are victimized by those selling tickets and soliciting aid for the thousand and one church and secular enterprises of every town for which money is required. In many cases those selling tickets appear to send to business men those who are their customers, and it puts the man in the position of giving to everything that comes along and loading himself up with tickets of no earthly use, or of running the risk of offending perhaps a valuable customer. "It's a hold-up game purely and simply and I cannot understand how self-respecting people will condescend to adopt such small means of raising money," was the way a local grocer expressed the situation the other day.

Business has been very satisfactory in Woodstock this year. City people and farmers appear to have all the money necessary to supply their wants and merchants are not complaining. The weekly market has not been as large as usual during the past few weeks, as the farmers have been too busy getting in their spring crops to attend, and the horses have been too much engaged to permit of their wives attending.

BRACEBRIDGE.

June 9.—Saturday, as usual, was a busy day among our merchants. The well-lighted stores and well-lighted streets filled with well-dressed buyers, made the scene a gay one at night.

The grocery windows came in for some nice remarks. Armstrong & Gillespie showed a well-arranged double window of fruit; J. G. Meyers' window was dressed with fruits and green vegetables; Kirk Bros.' large windows were bedded with plants, fruits and vegetables, and R. A. Lawson's window with fruit. Hutchison Bros. have a pretty window arranged with tea. In the centre stands a deep well made up with tea packages, and over the top is a bucket swinging from an old limb of a tree with this sign, "Our teas draw well"

Butter on Saturday dropped again in price, this time to 17c per pound. Other lines of produce are the same as last week. Maple syrup is still being freely offered by the farmers, and it finds a ready market. The quality is good.

HAMILTON.

June 9.—The Retail Grocers' Association have completed arrangements for their annual picnic to Niagara Falls on July 21st. At a meeting of the association held last week the picnic was the one topic of conversation, and arrangements to make it a greater success than in former years are already under way. John O. Carpenter was elected chairman of the picnic committee. Arrangements have been made for eighty cars to carry the Hamilton contingent, and no doubt every one will be filled. Both the G.T.R. and T., H. & B. will be used. It was necessary to put up a guarantee with the railway companies, and on that account the excursion will come off, rain or shine. The association came out somewhat behind last year on the financial end of the affair, and the committee are determined that not only will they make up the deficit, but will also close their books with a good balance on the right side. The picnic will be bigger than ever, as several new attractions will be taken, and all who have enjoyed this trip before, together with many new friends, will be on hand. The retail grocers and butchers of Brantford are joining in the excursion again. The 91st Regimental band has been engaged, and three "rube" bands will be taken along to provide amusement. The programme of races will be longer than ever, and the prizes well worth getting. Over $125 will be given away in cash prizes, as well as prizes of other kinds. This excursion is the best patronized of any in this city, whole families going on it to view the Falls.

KINGSTON.

June 9.—Earl Grey honored Kingston by his presence lately and the military city was all agog with excitement. Everybody walked erect and the air was full of music. Cannons boomed and even the new bell in the town clock chimed in. He was well entertained and pleased with his visit, but if he had waited till July 14th he would have had the entertainment of his life, for the famous Grocers' picnic is to come off and Secretary Dalby and committee are going to make it the success of the 20th century. We expect 10,000 people to attend. It will be held at the fair grounds within the city limits.

"Cash receipts are slow," said a grocer this week. "When goods go out quickly and cash comes in slowly, it's hard to make things go and the wholesaler wants cash. He is sick of excuses such as 'I have a lot on my books, etc.' Long credits should be cut out; some well-to-do people getting dividends keep grocers waiting for months and years, and perhaps on account of friendships the grocer is afraid to open his mouth to say a word—too bad, too bad."

Mr. Smith of West Toronto bought out Mr. Shea of Pim St., and is hustling after trade. He formerly was a carpenter, but he has evidently seen an easier way to make a living.

Marshall Reid has purchased an up-to-date delivery wagon of Canadian make. It is wiser to buy new rigs, as old ones soon bring up the cost in the repair shop or hospital for sick wagons.

Chas. Pickering has purchased a fine delivery horse.

A local grocer states that every time he wants to get his shop the telephone girl shrieks "bizzy" and he doesn't know whether to get mad or not. It would be better to say that's good and whistle, for it's better to whistle than whine. Too many merchants wear lemon-looks. They should live on the sunny side of the street.

Canned goods are always a drug when there is an over-production and prices go below value in consequence. Merchants cutting below cost reduce their own salaries. "Departmental store prices have to be met," said a grocer to-day, "and I found by introducing hand-packed tomatoes in sanitary tins I have gained a victory over the man selling old pack with new labels. It is not necessary always to get to mud level to meet the man who makes a business of cutting prices, giving light weight, short measure and old goods.

Carelessness in keeping stores and windows well dressed speak to the passers-by of the negligence of this staff. Goods well displayed are three quarters sold. If clerks would just get into the habit of introducing goods new and old it would surprise them the number of extra sales recorded. A clerk who just stands behind the counter and hands out goods is a man of wood.

The early closing movement is being encouraged by the clergy and it is a move in the right direction. It's a strange thing if people cannot get sufficient for internal and external needs between the hours of 7 a.m. and 6 p. m. It's all nonsence burning gas and wasting energy. Merchants who are afraid to close at six o'clock lack backbone. Don't watch the other fellow. Lock up at 6 o'clock sharp and 9 o'clock Saturday and the other fellow will folow suit.

PERTH.

June 9.—How many ever keep a careful account of their cash discounts? Grocery discounts seem very small, but a local grocer who has kept careful account for some years finds he saves enough by taking advantage of every discount to pay his taxes, his insurance and his lighting bills.

With lard climbing to 15c, biscuits all up a cent a pound, starch and smoked meats at ½c stronger, and pork and beans advanced about 10c dozen, we are wondering what grocery prices are coming to.

W. R. McRae has been connected with the grocery business for a long period. He spent some years as a traveler, but for the last number of years has been in the ranks of the grocers. Mr. McRae pays close attention to his business and his success is shown in his owning the fine stone block on Gore St. East in which his store is situated.

The Arnprior Creamery Co. have closed their creamery for a couple of months. Scarcity of cream is given as the reason.

Farmers have about finished planting, and potatoes in small lots are being offered imore freely at a variety of prices.

A. V. McLean, our youngest merchant has somewhat changed the interior arrangement of his store. A fresh coat of paint on his store front gives it quite a bright appearance.

One grocer is selling tomato plants, asters, verbenas, etc. Those being just ready to set out find a ready sale to the mutual advantage of both grocer and grower, who supplies them to be sold on commission.

The Retail Merchants' Association will consider some important matters during their sessions in Brockville, June 16 and 17. A number from here will likely attend.

Butter remains at 23c. Buyers are offering 17c for eggs, a drop of ½c from a couple of weeks ago.

BARRIE.

June 9.—Jas. Vair last week purchased the stock of H. Knight and has 12 days in which to dispose of it, moving the balance to his other store. Mr. Knight has purchased the restaurant business of his brother-in-law, Isaac Cox and will move into his present stand when vacanted by Mr. Vair.

John Sasso has launched into the wholesale fruit business here.

Butter took a sickly appearance in price last week and dropped as low as fourteen cents a pound while the bulk of it sold for fifteen cents. Eggs still remain about the same, selling at seventeen cents a dozen. Potatoes also took a drop in price, selling at seventy and seventy-five cents a bag.

With the first appearance of warm weather last week, came a few of our summer visitors. The prospects for a bumper summer trade are good and all merchants who cater to this class of trade are wearing that sunny smile.

Although the season was very backward and the strawberries are only in blossom in most cases, the general outlook is very good and should the weather continue fine the berries will be ready as early as last year. At least this is what one of the largest growers here had to say about it when interviewed by The Grocer.

CHATHAM.

June 9.—The ice problem is beginning to loom up large in the calculations of local grocers. The complete failure of last winter's ice crop necessitated the importation of ice, and one result is that this year ice is selling at 35c per cwt., where in previous years the price was 15c. It is doubtful if the price would have been so high had the field been left open to competition, but following the failure of the crop the two local dealers promptly seized the opportunity to amalgamate. The high prices will doubtless have their effect upon the summer trade in perishables.

As this section is subject to partial and occasionally entire failures of its ice crop, the suggestion is brought forward by one grocer that the merchants to whom ice is a necessity, co-operate to ensure an annual supply at fair prices. Large consumers, such as the Maple City Creamery, imported their ice last winter and thereby secured an ample supply at fair cost; but the individual merchant whose demand was small could not afford to do this, especially in view of his lack of storage facilities. Collectively a large amount of ice is used by merchants, so that the supply could probably procured advantageously—in addition to which, it would save the merchants from ever being "held up" by dealers.

Cheap butter—18c to 20c a pound—was again in evidence on the market last Staurday. Now that the warm weather has set in, farmers are a great deal more willing to part with the product on reasonable terms.

Hog deliveries were a feature of Saturday's market. Following a slight decline during the week, Saturday saw the price jump to in some cases $8 per cwt., while $7.90 was the ruling price. Not so long ago, hog raisers thought themselves lucky to get this price for dressed, let alone live hogs. Deliveries continued large. The high price locally is attributed to the foreign demand.

From all accounts, last year's bean crop is pretty well sold out. The price has now reached $2 a bushel.

Imported strawberries—from Detroit—have been in evidence in many groceries the past week, selling at 15c and 20c a box. The home grown product is expected to appear this week, several grocers having been assured of berries by Friday or Saturday. This is somewhat later than usual. The crop is reported in splendid condition, however.

In company with dry goods and shoe dealers, the Wallaceburg grocers have decided to close their places of business on Wednesday afternoons during the summer months, to give themselves and clerks a half holiday every week. It is some years since the weekly half holiday has been tried by Chatham merchants, except in one or two lines; and there seems no disposition to repeat the experiment. As a rule, clerks here favor and employers frown down upon the scheme; though there are of course notable exceptions. The main difficulty is to induce everybody to line up.

BRANTFORD.

June 9.—The merchants here report business good. The factories are all busy, and the unskilled labor is well employed.

There was a good market on Saturday but meat was not as plentiful as usual. Butter was plentiful at from 18 to 22c, and there was also a very large display of plants, flowers and green vegetables. Potatoes were plentiful and were selling at 75c a bag Saturday.

A large number of property owners and merchants around the market square held a meeting in the council chamber on Friday evening, in reference to the improvments of Brantford's market by the erection of suitable buildings and accommodation on the present market square, they named a committee to look after their interests.

Brantford millers are paying $1.30 per bushel for wheat and little is coming in; the grocers are retailing flour at $3.50 cwt.

Mr. Harris, manager of the Brantford branch of The Geo. Mattews Co. Ltd., accompanied by his wife, left this week on an extended trip to Ireland. They will also visit England and France before returning. Mr. Harris has not been enjoying the best of health for some time and the change will it is hoped restore him to his usual strength and health.

The clerks enjoyed their first half-holiday last week. While it was not unanimous, one large grocery on Market St. refusing to close, the majority were anxious for the holiday.

GUELPH.

June 9.—The edict has been delivered—the law, as irrevocable as that of the ancient Persians has been hurled into action; and—but this is the law—that the merchants of this the Royal City, do close down their stores every Thursday afternoon during the months of July and August, excepting such weeks as—well that's enough.

Peter Anderson's store looks very nice, clean, and well arranged. He is showing some good lines in china.

Some ads. there are, which are printed for the sole purpose of hoodwinking the public, again some ads. are mis-interpreted by mistaken either by the printer or the consumer; and yet again there are ads. which are straight-hit-from-the-shoulder, nothing-but-the-truth-statements. It would be well to remember that it is upon just such hooks as the latter upon which the public hang their hats and it is the merchants who advertise in the latter truthful way, who secure the best customers.

There were not any great changes in any of the lines of produce on Saturday, the prices being as follows:—Butter, 20 to 22c; eggs, 18 to 20c; potatoes, 80 to 85c per bag; rhubarb, 4 and 5c a bunch; lettuce, 5c a head; onions, 40c a dozen, and 5c a bunch.

TORONTO.

June 9.—B. A. Belyea, Southampton, Ont., has purchased a grocery business in Toronto, at the corner of Spadina Avenue and Sussex Street.

Lloyd Bros., 552 Queen Street West, who opened a store a few weeks ago, are doing remarkably well. They have already a large trade, and business is evidently coming their way.

Fred White, grocer, 123 McCaul Street, has purchased Charles Mayes' property in Avenue Road, for speculative purposes.

Wm. Cole, grocer, Avenue Road, has taken a pleasure trip to England, and has left the management of his store in the hands of his clerk, F. Beckingsale.

I. McMinn, 923 Queen Street West, has moved to 703 Ossington, where he intends to enlarge his business.

S. E. Embury, 604 Queen Street West, is doing a business which reflects great credit on himself and his methods, as well as on his wife, who is perhaps the chief means of his success. He handles only the best goods. His favorite lines are cooked meats, bacon, sausages, etc. Everything is kept clean and the store, which he has lately remodeled, has an attractive appearance.

W. E. Best, 1048 Queen Street East, keeps his store in good order, and this he claims has a great deal to do with successful store keeping.

J. F. Cryderham claims he is a prompt payer, but he over-looked a small account and according to the rule of the Fruit Association goods came C.O.D. This he says, was annoying and he is therefore against the new rule.

A committee from the Retail Grocers' Association took a trip across the lake this week to make final arangements for their picnic grounds. The date is July 14th.

ST. CATHARINES.

June 9.—George B. Darker, who recently opened a new grocery store on St. Paul Street, has purchased the business of E. Gander. Mr. Darker states it is his intention to operate both stores. Mr. Gander has not yet decided to what business he will give his time and attention.

The supply of dairy butter during the past few weeks has been very heavy with the result that the grocers dropped their buying price on Saturday last to 16c per pound.

Those grocers who had a supply of crocks to sell noticed the increased demand caused by the packing of butter.

Fresh eggs, on the other hand, are higher in price and scarce even at the advanced price. The prices on Saturday last for quantities were from 19 to 20c per dozen.

The fruit crop of the Niagara Peninsula at the present writing promises to be an extra large one. Fruit growers, agree with this prediction with the exception of peaches, which they claim will be below the average. Strawberries are looking splendid and the first home grown berries will likely make their appearance next week. If the weather should continue warm and dry, the strawberries are likely to ripen up all at once and the crop will be a short one. Buyers will find prices governed largely by the weather.

PETERBORO.

June 9.—There does not seem to be much change in the butter situation here. The farmers report excellent verdure and growth in the pastures, but they are sending their surplus milk to the cheese factories and the townspeople are thereby profiting but little. The butter has a noticeable dark yellow color, which it obtains from the new grass.

The cheese manufacture this spring has been on the whole better than last year. The price is better and the output shows a slight increase.

The past few weeks have been rather quiet. There is still a demand for house-cleaning necessities and garden seeds and fixtures.

Recognizing the fact that the average household has exhausted its supplies of preserved fruits, some of the grocers in their advertisements are making a specialty of canned goods. Pears, peaches, raspberries, etc., are the headliners and from all reports there is a strong demand. Jas. R. Bell is one of those who is trying to advance his trade in these lines.

Another line of the grocer's business that is now in season is supplying provisions for picnics and pleasure parties. There are grocers who pay particular attention to this branch of their summer trade and make it a point to carry lines which will appeal to the picnicker. Dainty tongue, ham, chicken, pickles and other delicacies are always found in the outing basket and it is generally the grocer who makes a specialty of these lines who snaps up the business.

The merchants on the main street claim that their rents are too high. Ald. Morrow, of the council, is endeavoring to make an arrangement whereby a flat rate may be secured for the use of electric power. A merchant states that he would prefer if something were done to secure cheaper rent—at least, what he claims more reasonable. He states that the amounts have practically doubled in ten years.

The breakfast food weather has arrived. That is to say, the warm weather, means the changing of the customary foods for the prepared varieties, which are served with seasonable foods. Local grocers apparently feel that there is something in this and are advertising in their window displays the most popular foods.

Potatoes are still at the spring mark, $1.25 a bag. There are people in the city who believe that if the papers had not stated that other places were receiving high prices, Peterboro would still be able to get them at $1.

The market gardeners in the outskirts of the city are busy with the orders from the grocers. Seasonable vegetables and greens are now in great demand and the grocers are apparently not letting the opportunity to please their customers go by.

WHOLESALERS FOR VICTORIA.

List of Those Who Have Handed in Their Names to Take in the Trip.

Announcement was made Tuesday of the names of those who will in all probability attend the annual meeting of the Canada Wholesale Grocers' Exchange, to be held in Victoria, June 24th. Some of those mentioned may not be able to get away, but, on the other hand, it is likely that there are some other members of the Exchange who will participate in the convention who have not yet handed in their names.

Those on the list at present are:—

Nova Scotia—Robt. Murray, S. O. Hogg, R. M. Symons, Arthur C. Pyke.

MEMBERSHIP INCREASING.

At the regular monthly meeting of the Dominion Commercial Travelers' Association, Montreal, the secretary's report showed that the membership, to date, was 332 more than at this time last year, while the payments of death claims amounted to practically the same sum.

CALGARY.

June 8.—If real estate values continue to climb as they have been doing here this year it will necessitate the removal of a number of the retail grocery stores which are now located on Eighth Avenue to the side streets and suburbs. During the past two weeks central Eighth Avenue realty has been in great demand at fancy prices. The Ellis & Grogan property was sold for $1000 per front foot and the premises occupied by J. D. Young & Co., stationers, etc., was sold for $1,200 per foot. Saturday last the property occupied by Rochon Bros., confectionery and the Premium Tea Co., near the post office, was sold for $1,000 per foot. As the buildings on none of the above are of much value the prices paid practically represent land values. Yesterday the central property formerly occupied by Wing & Kidney as a grocery store was sold for $1,200 per front foot. There is a two storey brick and stone building on this lot worth probably $6,000 to $8,000. The foregoing, however, will serve to indicate what investors think of Calgary realty. West Eighth Avenue, i.e., from First West to Fourth, is now looking up. and it will not surprise some if inside of two years a number of high-class retail stores will occupy sites that are to-day without buildings of any kind.

The particularly favorable weather that has been enjoyed since May 20th has instilled confidence and business of all kinds is very good. The rush of immigration continues unabated. The C. P. R. irrigated lands, every acre of which when developed means business for Calgary, are in great request by the Americans, who are investing freely. Retail grocers report an excellent trade. Local-grown, fresh vegetables are in good supply. Potatoes are still high in price owing to scarcity of local stock. Hood River strawberries are in, retailing at 35c per box, but this price will probaly not hold long as deliveries will be heavier shortly. New Alberta cheese will be available in a week or two. This finds a ready sale as some prefer it to Eastern cheese. Fresh butter is plentiful, retailing at 30c per lb. Eggs are not so plentiful, as the western demand is heavy. Locally the retail price is 30c per dozen.

California dried fruits are firming up. Apricots are scarce and high; it is doubtful if any choice can be obtained under 10c per lb. on the Coast. Peaches and prunes show a tendency to stiffen in sympathy with apricots. Available stocks of prunes in California are said to be not more than 3,000 tons, which is the lowest for many years.

C. E. Lathrop, the representative of one of the largest shippers of dried fruits and canned goods in California, was in Calgary during the week calling upon the trade. Mr. Lathrop left San Francisco in March and has since covered the territory as far south as St. Louis. He reports business much improved all along the line, and particularly in the Canadian west. Mr. Lathrop is always a welcome visitor in Calgary, as the trade recognizes him as an authority on California products. On one occasion, however, Mr. Lathrop under-estimated the tonnage of "prunes" and the jobbers have not yet forgiven him. Nevertheless, his estimates are generally as nearly correct as possible. Tees & Persse of Alberta Ltd. are the local agents for the company.

WINNIPEG.

June 8—John Galt of G. F. & J. Galt, wholesale grocers, leaves in a few days for a three months trip to Europe.

F. J. Gallagher has left the T. Eaton Company store, where he was engaged as manager of the fruit section of the grocery department, to become a traveler for White Bros. & Crum, commission merchants of this city.

As stated a few weeks ago, the confection trade in this city is in somewhat of a demoralized condition, due to the fact that foreigners monopolize the fruit trade, and confectioners are compelled to rely upon limited lines. It seems almost absurd that in a city of 120 000 only two confectionery stores can be found, worthy of the name. The leading down-town business is that conducted by W. H. McBrien, who opened the store on April 1 last. The apearance of the premises is beautiful and attractive, being renovated and equipped with new fixtures, just prior to the opening, Mr. McBrien, who was familiar with the trade and conditions before opening the business on his own account, feels encouraged with the general upward tendency of the trade. Before the summer season opened, baked goods and candies were the chief lines, but now candies have been replaced by ice cream, and in this line the trade has been good. Mr. McBrien is of the opinion that although the keen competition in the fruit business among the smaller retailers is detrimental to the up-to-date confectionery trade, yet the time will come when the first-class confectionery will be depended upon for all lines of goods belonging to that trade, thus eliminating much of the inferiority which is so prevalent among the foreigners' fruit stores.

C. W. Graham, secretary of the Winnipeg Horse Show, to be held on June 24, 25, and 26, has been authorized to issue prizes to the retail merchants of the city for the best decorated windows representing the occasion. The prizes consist of four first prizes of $15.00 each, and four second prizes of $10.00 each. This arrangement will give a large number an opportunity to win prizes. The classification is as follows:—

Class "A" — Departmental stores, furniture, house furnishings and dry goods.

Class "B"—Jewelers, druggists, boots and shoes, haberdashers and clothiers.

Class "C"—Hardware, grocers, liquors, cigars and tobacconists.

Class "D"—All others.

Already many merchants have made arangements to enter the contest, and as the time approaches for the judging the interest will become quite keen. Local merchants as a rule believe in good window displays, and look upon it as one of the leading assets to the trade. The grocers are not backward in this regard, and it is expected that some of these merchants will capture a prize. Awards will be made on the following basis:—

25 per cent. for artistic arangement.

60 per cent. advertising the Horse Show.

15 per cent. for advertising medium for exhibitor's own business.

William Mitchell, formerly a clerk in the store of Sutherland Bros., of this city, has taken charge of the new grocery department of F. Ashford, on Portage Avenue.

C. H. Baird, of the Christie Brown Co., Toronto, returned east last week, after a few weeks business trip in Western Canada.

James Powell passed through the city recently on his way from the Coast to Birmingham, England. Mr. Powell has been representing the Cadbury Chocolate Co., in the West.

SASKATOON.

June 8.—C. J. Greene & Sons are building an addition to their general store on Avenue B. It is 50 x 50 feet and will allow the handling of a much larger stock.

L. S. Bishop, who has been manager of the grocery department of W. H. MacBeth, has left on a trip to Chicago and St. Louis. He will return in about two weeks time to start in business here with other local men.

Currie Bros, who carry on a departmental store business on 2nd Avenue will open a branch on 20th Street West. They have leased two stores in the Richardson-Butler block, with a floor space 50 x 60 feet. The plan is to put an archway between the stores and put in a first-class stock of groceries, dry goods, boots and shoes, men's furnishings, ladies' wear, etc.

J. F. Cairns has announced the list of prizes to be offered in a guessing contest shown in his window. The eight prizes offered are: an automobile, team of horses, lady's costume, man's suit, lady's hat, pair of shoes, lacrosse outfit, tennis racket and shoes. The contest closes on the 6th of August, the last day of the fair. The competition is to guess the number of grains of oats in a glass box, which has been placed in the window. One guess is allowed for the purchase of each dollar's worth of goods.

The death of William Vine, traveler for the Northern Fruit Co., of this city, took place last Friday at St. Paul's hospital. Mr. Vine was ill only a short time and underwent an operation a few days ago. He was 26 years of age and came from St. Catharines, Ont.

The Saskatoon Milling & Elevator Co., is building elevators at Zealandia, Vanscoy and Harris, on the C.N.R. The local mill will be increased from 100 barrels to treble that capacity.

REGINA.

June 8.—The fine warm weather prevailing this week, following the rains at the end of last week, has been favorable to the growing crops and up to the present prospects are excellent for a good crop and with the high prices farmers are feeling jubilant.

There have been no changes in the produce market during the past week, and jobbers are still paying the prices mentioned in our last letter. The warm weather was favorable for the fruit trade and jobbers report a good business in all lines of seasonable fruits. The last of the navel oranges are now in and the stock is good, but does not hold out long. Missouri strawberries are on the market and are in good demand. Most shipments arrive in good condition, but occasionally lots are in very poor shape when received. California cherries are also on the market, and are moving well at 40c per pound for the red, and 50c per pound for the white.

The local grocery jobbers report business as being exceptionally good and during the week both houses have been very busy. There are no changes to note in prices.

W. R. Hunt, of the Tetley Tea Co., was here this week on his farewell trip, as he leaves on the 20th inst. for California, where he will represent Ridgway's teas. His many friends in this territory wish him success.

William Sclater, of Sclater & Findlayson, Regina, left this week for an extended visit to his old home in the east.

Archie Mallinson, manager of the wholesale fruit firm of Stockton & Mallinson, of Regina, returned on Wednesday from a two weeks' visit in Toronto.

A good many of the stores report the flooding of their cellars through the heavy rains of last Saturday and Sunday. In all fully five hundred dollars' damage was done.

T. W. Dawson, representing the Stewart Chocolate Co., of Toronto, has been here for the last two days and reports business as being good.

VANCOUVER.

June 8.—Vancouver grocers played the host on Sunday last, when a large party of eastern grocers were in the city on their way to Portland to attend the convention of the National Association, which opened there on the Monday. The party included C. J. Kramer, president of the National Association of Retail Grocers, and wife; J. L. Peters, G. Penick, K. Bars, T. England, Mr. and Mrs. Frank T. Longley, Miss Martha Kupferle, Mrs. L. Koers, Miss Julia Koers, Adam Penzell and wife, W. G. Pigford, W. D. Hawkins, Mr. and Mrs. George J. Schulte, E. D. Myer, the Misses Myer, Mrs. R. M. Colgin, David Noonan, A. A. Thompson and wife, Mr. and Mrs. L. F. Padberg, C. H. Kreigh, Miss Agnes Shine, C. O'Donnel, — Thurston, R. McIntyre, A. S. Werremeyer, E. Niemweller, all of St. Louis; J. J. Ryan, Fred Lorenzo, Mrs. Masek, St. Paul; E. C. Ekeland, Minneapolis; Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Kingsbury, Mrs. Ella Holland, Winona; T. P. Sullivan and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Poft, L. L. Schineter, Walter Horn, Chicago. On arrival here, they were met by James Ray, secretary of the Vancouver Retail Grocers' Association, and W. Clark, George Hobson and C. F. Wright, directors. A drive had been arranged, but owing to inclement weather this was not carried out, but Mr. Roy presented each of the ladies with a handsome bouquet of carnations, just to show that the hearts of the Vancouver grocers were in the right place.

Strawberries are scarce, and the price varies considerably. Last week there was a good supply on hand, and the price was two boxes for 35c, but when these were taken up, few were on hand, and the wholesale price was $6 a crate of 24 boxes, or 25c a box. This is just a trifle high. The prices, however, may not be very low in consequence of the shortage in the crop, and last week the Victoria Fruit Exchange refused an order for six carloads, because the figure was not up to what it was thought it ought to be under the circumstances. Even this price was in advance of that of last year.

California gooseberries have arrived and are jobbing at 11c per pound.

The death took place last week at Revelstoke of Harry A. Small. He has been Kootenay representative of W. J. McMillan & Co., wholesale grocers, of this city, having been connected with that firm for the past six years. Previous to that he was traveler for Kelly, Douglas & Co. for five years. Deceased was one of two or three individuals whose active business career from one end of the Dominion to the other had reached almost forty years. For many years he had his headquarters in Ottawa and Montreal, in the days when traveling was done in stage coaches. During most of his eastern career he was agent for Wm. Donohue & Co., wholesale grocers, of Montreal. His connection with the Dominion Commercial Travelers' Association dates back over 35 years.

A petition is being circulated among the merchants of Vancouver and Victoria for a travelers' week, to be held once a year, the idea being to make the holiday, such as will obtain this month, an annual affair. For a considerable time, the travelers have been asking for this week so that they might meet together, and with the employers discuss general matters. The district affected by the week lies to the west of Kamloops, and thus all travelers in that territory could either get to Victoria or Vancouver. At the last meeting of the local council of the U.C.T., a committee was appointed to confer with a similar committee appointed by the employers and frame up a programme for Tuesday, June 8th, when a social and business meeting will be held. If the week is agreed upon finally at this meeting, the idea will be taken up at the Grand Council conference to be held in Seattle on June 10th.

On the mid-week half-holiday, the clerks and merchants of Chilliwack got together at a game of baseball. The merchants beat, with a score of 35 runs to 10, notwithstanding that one of the team, John Denholme, had not played for 23 years.

P. Burns & Co., has bought the wholesale and retail stores of J. Reichenbach Co., at New Westminster and Sapperton.

C. H. Hume & Co., Revelstoke, has installed a fine electrical coffee grinding machine.

MANITOBA MARKETS

(Corrected by Telegraph).

Winnipeg, June 10.—The summer weather that settled down upon the city for a few days gave the trade a lively aspect. Dealers are very much encouraged with present conditions and every merchant plans to have a heavy season's trade. The vacation period is approaching when many families leave the city for their summer homes. One grocer said that a good feature about this imigration was that customers usually paid their bills before they go. The seeding is almost all completed throughout the West, and wholesalers have been visited by many rural merchants during the past week, who are ordering heavy stocks of goods. The crop to be harvested next fall will be very large if congenial crop conditions continue to prevail. Rural merchants have no fear in ordering goods in anticipation of enormous crop returns.

The market situation is rather featureless this week. For several weeks the general tendency was advances in prices. Markets continue firm, but we cannot record any advances, except in canned apples. These have been selling above the price quoted in a few instances for some days. The advance is about 10c per case.

WHOLESALERS' CONVENTION.

Many Expect to go to Victoria—Arrangements Now Completed.

Montreal, June 9.—"We are going to have a splendid trip and a fine convention," said President L. E. Geoffrion, of the Canada Wholesale Grocers' Exchange, to The Canadian Grocer this week.

"That trip to Victoria appeals to our members. Many have never been to the coast, and this opportunity is one not to be neglected. I have been through all of that country myself, but, nevertheless, I am anticipating the coming trip with the greatest of pleasure. This month the golden West will be seen at its best. It is not too warm for traveling, either.

"Everything has been arranged so as to make the trip most pleasant for those making it. The Victoria wholesalers are preparing quite a nice programme for us. I understand that a trip has been planned to the exhibition in Seattle. This will be quite a feature.

"Arrangements which have been made with the railways will enable delegates to see quite a lot of new country in the going and coming.

"I sincerely trust that every member of the Exchange who can possibly get away will be on hand in Victoria for the first session of the convention, Thursday, morning, June 24."

Unsteady Condition of the Molasses Market.

Barbadoes Crop Shorter Than Last Year—Came to Canada on a Bear Market and Prices Have Been Maintained High—Conflicting Rumors as to Crops—Small Quantity Left.

St. John, N.B., June 9.—Not for many years has the molasses market been in such a state of turmoil as in the past few weeks. Conflicting reports sent out from Barbadoes have kept the dealers in a state of uncertainty as to what was coming next and a flood of correspondence has been kept up between the Canadian jobbers and the men on the island, who handle the output.

The atmosphere seems to be clearing now, however, though for weeks the newspapers in Barbadoes have been full of crop reports, statements, letters and contradictions.

Reliable estimates of this year's crop are to the effect that the quantity of "fancy" molasses would not exceed 45,000 puncheous and of "choice," not over 15,000 puncheous. This would make a total of 60,000. In 1907 the output was 61,569 and in 1906, 61,099 puncheons, but the supply from other sources was larger in those years especially in 1906 when quite a quantity of Porto Rico molasses was handled. This then would show that this year's crop was about the same as usual or a trifle less, and it should also be noted that this year's crop came in on a bare market.

The Changing of Prices.

The bulk of the output from Barbadoes goes to the Maritime Provinces, Quebec and Newfoundland. Coming on a bare market this year the price opened at 34 cents a gallon and shortly afterwards dropped off three cents. An advance of two cents then followed, making the price 33 cents. At that time there was a very heavy demand and it looked as if it were going higher, but just here the trouble started. One of the Barbadoes shippers started sending out cables to the effect that the market was weak and was going lower, accompanying his announcements with very heavy estimates of the crops.

It is also claimed by other shippers that he inspired an article in "The Weekly Recorder," Barbadoes, giving his crop estimates for the purpose of trying to break the market.

A Temporary Decline.

These papers were sent out to dealers in Canada and Newfoundland and had the effect of stopping the advance and the market went back one cent a gallon but has since recovered and is now at practically the high point of the season.

A letter received last week by one of the St. John, (N.B.) dealers from one of the largest and most reliable of the shippers says that the entire crop is now about sold or closed out. It also refers to a resolution adopted by the Barbadoes General Agricultural Society on May 11. The resolution is as follows:—

"That the Barbadoes General Agricultural Society are of the opinion that the statements made by the 'Weekly Recorder' in the article published on Saturday, April 24, as to the size of the molasses crop and the quantity already reaped, are altogether false and misleading, and considers the quantity of molasses now to be sold is a much smaller quantity than is there estimated. They are of the opinion that three-quarters is already sold and that the remainder unsold could not possibly affect the price of this commodity."

Another letter on May 15, says "estimates of unsold stocks in planters' hands would hardly exceed 2,000 puncheous, choice and 3,000 to 3,500 puncheons fancy and think present prices likely to be maintained as with present active inquiry stocks will soon be cleaned up."

The St. John dealer expressed the opinion that while the market was disturbed now, as soon as the crop is all in and shipments cease the price will go higher.

About 6,000 puncheous have already arrived at the port of St. John and other shipments are on the way.

ON THE WARPATH.

Portland. Ore., June 8.—C. J. Kramer, of Little Rock. Ark.. president. threw a bombshell into the National Association of Retail Grocers by declaring himself opposed to postal savings bank acts, as tending to removing money from circulation. In his address Mr. Kramer asked what the country was coming to and poured out vials of wrath upon the wholesaler posing in the guise of a retailer and endeavoring to obtain a rakeoff from both the public and the manufacturer.

Resolutions against the wholesaler who supplies short weight, and action by the convention against the manufacturer who sells to cut price stores were some questions discussed. One speaker recommended a boycott policy until the wholesaler was brought to his senses. declaring that in reality the wholesaler was superfluous.

CARSON DAIRY IN WINNIPEG.

The Carson Hygienic Dairy was opened about April 1, 1908, by a company under the management of W. J. Carson, formerly professor of dairying at Manitoba College. The chief business done is in bottled milk and cream, butter, and ice-cream. The equipment of the plant is of the most modern type.

FROM MAJOR TO COLONEL.

Promotion Given To W. H. Schneider, With Arthur P. Tippet & Co., Montreal.

It is not frequently that the Canadian Grocer has an opportunity of extending congratulations to one of its readers on his receipt of such an honor as has been the good fortune of W. H. Schneider to receive.

To be absolutely correct, the gentleman should be mentioned as Lieut.-Col. Schneider. He has just been promoted from the rank of major, in command of "C" squadron, 6th Duke of Connaught's Royal Canadian Hussars, to Lieutenant-Colonel, in command of the regiment.

The appointment is officially gazetted in G.O. 67, May 4, but dates from February 24 last. He succeeds Lt.-Col. J. G. Barr, who has been transferred to the Reserve of Officers.

W. H. SCHNEIDER.

Lt.-Col. Schneider is most favorably known in grocery as well as military circles, though in his connection with the former, he is not an outside man. He has been, for the past eleven years, with Arthur P. Tippet & Co., Montreal, and during that time has come in contact with most of the prominent grocery houses in Canada.

His connection with the militia demonstrates his love for military life. Ever since 1877, he has been interested in army matters. At that time he joined the Montreal High School cadets, and there learned the first rudiments of military procedure. He saw active service during the North West Rebellion and holds the medal won by the veterans of that struggle. He also has the Colonial Long Service Medal.

QUEBEC MARKETS

POINTERS—
Beans—Further advances.
Evaporated Apples — Advance in prices.
Syrups—Good demand.
Canned Fruits—Fair demand.

Montreal, June 10, 1909.—Beans continue to be the feature of the market, further advances having taken place since last week. Stocks are very scarce, and deliveries uncertain. Syrups are in good demand, considering the weather. Molasses is selling freely at old prices. New pack canned lobsters, haddies, and kippered herring are now on the market. Canned fruits are moving fairly well, while canned vegetables are selling satisfactorily. Sugar is steady. New Japan teas are arriving. Evaporated apples are scarce and prices are higher.

SUGAR—There has been no change in the sugar situation since last week, and chances are that the prices will continue as at present. Refiners are looking forward to satisfactory business after a period of dullness.

DRIED FRUITS—Interesting reports from California state that the outlook for all fruits this year, except apricots, is fairly satisfactory. This being an off-year for apricots, a large crop is, naturally, not expected. From present indications prunes will not be so plentiful, a yield not much above last year's being anticipated. As for raisins, everything points to a good crop and moderate prices. A considerable quantity of old raisins is held, but this stock is not reliable, and the better packers are not anxious sellers. In one or two instances prices have been made, but it is doubtful if much booking can be done at the figures quoted. Of course, the whole outlook in California may be changed by an unfavorable change in the weather. Last week's advance in currants stimulated demand somewhat, and further firmness was noticeable in the market as a result of reports from Greece, which were rather bullish in their nature. Stocks held in Greece at present are not supposed to be as large as they were a year ago.

TEA—Wholesalers are turning over particularly high grades in Japan teas to customers desiring supplies, as they have really nothing else in this line to offer. New Japans are now coming in, and are of very good quality. In Ceylons gunpowders are rather active. Otherwise teas are unchanged.

BEANS AND PEAS — Further advances since last week show the undoubted strength of the bean market. Prices quoted to retailers a week ago are not demanded for beans in the car, on track, and the figure asked of the grocer is 15c higher. Holders are not at all keen upon parting with stock, and as they can at present almost make their own price, they are inclined to keep under cover. Shippers have sold a considerable quantity to farmers, for seeding purposes. Wet weather resulted in a planting of less oats than usual, as the ground was given over to beans. Prices high, deliveries uncertain—thus could the market be summed up in a few words. Imported beans are just as firm as domestic and are higher.

Peas continue very firm, although no change in price is noticeable.

CANNED GOODS

MONTREAL.—Beans and peas are in small supply, but there are large stocks held locally of corn and tomatoes. French peas are in good demand and stocks are rapidly being reduced. In canned fruits demand is not so good this week. Peaches and pears are the chief sellers. Cherries are being sold in normal quantities. Strawberries are slow, while raspberries are moving out fairly well, though not as briskly as they should. New pack canned fish, including lobsters, kippered herring, and bloaters, is now on the market.

TORONTO.—Brokers and wholesalers are getting interested to know something about canned goods prices for future delivery. Some are already predicting.

Canned fruits are selling well although there as scarcities in some respects. One broker stated he had some enquiries for raspberries but the order could not be filled. Peaches, he stated, were also scarce. Some canned peas are still moving, a car load being disposed of by a broker last week. They are, however, getting into small stocks.

Canned salmon is beginning to be called for according to wholesalers as are also kippered herring and haddies. The arrival of the camping season has brought about this condition as retailers want to stock up in preparation for the summer migration.

ONTARIO MARKETS

POINTERS—

Beans—Prices advancing.
Figs—Scarcity locally.
Rice—Advance in Primary Markets.
Sugar—Demand improving.

Toronto, June 10, 1909.

There has been noticeable each week since the warm weather arrived, changes for the better in business according to the wholesalers. Most of them report payments by country merchants as improving and evidently they are in much better spirits with regard to the outlook.

The high prices of raw material is causing considerable talk about advances in breakfast foods although nothing definite has been decided upon. It is plain of course that manufacturers' profits are being lessened considerably now that they have to buy wheat at $1.40 and oats at 57 cents.

Sugar is a little steadier this week with no immediate prospects. Better demand is expected with the advent of the preserving season, which will soon be here.

Beans and evaporated apples are scarce and prices are firmer.

SUGAR.—Locally the demand for sugar is improving slowly. The fact that rhubarb has been on the market for some time is partly responsible for this. June is usaully a big month for sugar and more was expected so that wholesalers consider the season as somewhat disappointing. Strawberries, however, will soon be on the market and a better demand should follow.

Sugar is lower in Canada proportionately than in the United States and just at the present time is about 30 cents lower than this time last year. It is difficult to forecast what the next change will be. Wholesalers would not be surprised if there was an advance.

TEA AND COFFEE.—Brokers report the tea market as uninteresting. Wholesalers say that the "National Drink" is selling fairly well, prices being firm. Coffee seems to be making considerable headway in Canada.

DRIED FRUITS.—Stocks of prunes are getting low and odds and ends only are left in the storerooms of some wholesalers. The demand has been good but is now slackening. There are yet some good sales being made in apricots and dried peaches. Advices from Smyrna state that the fig crop is normal. Dealers here seem to have misjudged the demand and there are none to be had at present. They have been too conservative in buying. Currant prices are firm, corresponding to foreign markets. Samples received by local brokers indicate good quality. Raisins are somewhat quiet.

By Sheer Force of Quality

Red Rose Tea in the Maritime Provinces has been the leader for many years. It gained its position against keen competition. Gained it by sheer force of quality—intrinsic worth. When it was first put on the market it was the best tea that had ever been sold at the price.

To-day it is the Best Tea Sold Anywhere in Canada

This is a fact admitted by every independent judge of tea, admitted by every tea salesman who trys to sell a tea which he claims is "as good as Red Rose."

I have the same faith in good goods that I have always had. I have the same determination that shall be THE BEST. A tea without an equal.

Red Rose Tea

HINTS TO BUYERS.

Information supplied by sellers but for which the editors of The Grocer do not necessarily hold themselves responsible.

The vast majority of people regard lime juice as a medicine (and a particularly unpleasant one), and connect it merely with the Arctic regions and scurvy. As a mater of fact, this article, where great experience and care are used in the manufacture, can be converted into a particularly palatable as well as healthy beverage, especially suitable for hot weather when thirst is more pronounced. It is, moreover, eminently suitable for general consumption at all seasons of the year. All medical testimony points to the fact that purity of the blood is the chief element of health. It is in this particular that lime juice cordial is so valuable, as there is nothing which works so well or naturally in this direction as this article. It logically follows, that a steady and continuous use of it as a beverage has a wonderfully beneficial effect on the complexion. In hot thirsty weather, a glass of lime juice and water, or aerated water, not only satisfies the thirst, but is delicious, healthy. cooling, and recuperative, never producing flatulency, griping or fulness, as it acts as a gentle tonic to the stomach. It is an excellent table drink, as it materially assists the digestion and is practically invaluable to dyspeptic dispositions. To drink a wine glass of lime juice cordial in water every other morning is most beneficial. It is used extensively and gratefully in the sick room for rheumatism, gout, eczema, dyspepsia, nausea, pneumonia all fever, inflammatory and fever cases.

The first consideration in the manufacture is absolute purity and freedom from mineral acids, and the second, palatability. It is most essential that only the freshly squeezed juice of the finest selected fruit should be used, and even then all albumen substances and vegetable mucus must first be carefully removed before further processes are commenced. Only the best and most refined sugar can be used, as starch or other impurities would effectually nullify the benefits of the lime juice. All contact with metal must be absolutely avoided. It must be scientifically preserved without the use of any alcohol or foreign acids whatever, and finally bottled in glass, which is entirely free from lead or other poisonous ingredients.

Stower's Lime Juice Cordial was the first preparation of the kind ever introduced, namely, in 1862. They have been exclusively engaged in the manufacture of this article for over forty years, and have brought it to a state of absolute perfection, for purity, strength, flavor and complete absence of that musty taste which predominates in most, if not all, other cordials. They have the largest trade in the United Kingdom of Great Britain, and supply all the leading hospitals, the principal ocean steamship companies, both Houses of Parliament, and His Most Gracious Majesty.

The Montreal Canine Association's Dog Show, being held this week, at the Arena, Montreal, is being benched and fed by Spratt's Patent, Ltd., London, Eng., (Fred Hughes & Co., agents). The benches were specially imported from London.

New pack Thistle haddies are now on the market. As the season has been backward the pack has been restricted and supplies will not be large. Grocers should order at once.

The T. A. Lytle Co., Ltd., sent out from their large factory, Sterling Road, Toronto, this week their first shipment of catsups to England. The firm expect to make weekly shipments across the ocean from this out. Once more a Canadian made goods find a market in the Mother Land. "Sterling" relishes, judging from their popularity in Canada, will quickly take a first place in Great Britain.

Edward J. Nation, of E. J. Nation & Co., Ltd., Bristol England, who is at present visiting the various Canadian trade centres, was particularly pleased to note the progress the firm's goods, notably their custard powder, had made in this market. Mr. Nation mentioned that the demand for their custard powder had increased over 300 per cent. last year and at the recent grocers' exhibition at Bristol, the firm had by general opinion the largest and most attractive display which was devoted entirely to custard powder.

The specially blended tea of Cooper, Cooper & Co., London, Eng., for Canadian requirements is being received with much favor here. It is packed in attractive ½lb. tins, which are sealed airtight. The headquarters of Cooper, Cooper & Co's tea are Green & Co., commission merchants, Toronto.

RETAIL MERCHANTS TO BE HELD LIABLE.

The National Trust Co., which has had charge of the affairs of the Retail Merchants' Association of Western Canada, have completed their investigations and will shortly submit a report to the judge of the local court. The main features of this report will be, that in the opinion of the National Trust Company, each member of the association is liable for the debts of the organization, and in that case, a levy should be placed upon each member sufficient to raise the sum required to balance accounts. It is intimated that a levy of five dollars on each old member of the association would be the maximum required.

Produce and Provision Situation of the World

Canadian Bacon Prices Higher in England—Increase in Butter Receipts—Eggs Firm in Prices.

Hogs are still scarce, but packers have evidently come to the conclusion that it is unsafe to go any higher. Cured meats although in good demand, have reached the limit, beyond which it would be dangerous to venture for fear of checking the demand. There is a good export demand but all the output is required for home consumption. Canadian bacon has advanced from 55 to 66 shillings in England.

The receipts of butter are very heavy and as the kind is of the annual May quality, a mixture of fodder fed and early rank grass and dandelion, which is not desirable to hold in cold storage prices are considerably easier.

Complaint was made by one of the Canadian wholesale dealers about the misrepresentations of the quality of butter made by some of the country store keepers. One of them called him up by phone and asked him whether he wanted to buy any eggs and butter. He told him, he would like to buy the eggs, but did not care for the butter as he had plenty on hand. He said that whoever bought his eggs must also take the butter. When asked about the quality of the butter he remarked that it was all first-class. "I'll give you ——c for it" said the dealer. But the merchant wanted a half cent more and his request was granted. When it arrived, a merchant came in and after examining it, he bought three baskets. This left the dealer after paying freight just 1c a lb. When this merchant unpacked the butter he found that only the top few layers were good, and the bottom of very inferior quality. He at once returned it. When the whole lot was examined it was found that just about half of the whole quantity was of this lower grade, which he had to sell at 16c a lb. Business of this kind should be stopped. If a storekeeper has not backbone enough to tell the farmers who make such stuff, and pay them accordingly, he should not swindle those who buy it from him, by lying and by putting it in the bottom of the box. A good stiff fine would have a good effect.

Eggs are firm and the selling prices are well maintained.

A cable despatch from Liverpool, England, regarding the cheese market: "There has been a steady consumptive enquiry for choicest old colored and white Canadians and New Zealands, and quotations are well maintained. Trade in new is limited, and holders under the influence of easier cables are ready sellers.

"English cheese in free supply at declining values. We quote: Finest Canadian fall makes, colored, 68s to 69s per cwt., do., white, 65 to 66s.; finest new Canadian, white and colored, 60s to 61s, finest New Zealand, colored cleared white, 64s to 65s; new season's English cheese, as in quanlity, 48s to 66s per 120 lbs."

STORE KINKS FROM CLERKS.

The Canadian Grocer is pleased to see that clerks are taking advantage of our offer allowing them space to suggest means of raising the standard of the retail salesmen. Clerks should be anxious to take advantage of every opportunity to better their conditions and new ideas should be intelligently sought after.

Many retail stores throughout the country have undertaken new schemes which are proving profitable. These "kinks" would be interesting and educative to the trade in other parts and particularly to the clerks to whose ability many of them must be credited.

Clerks are therefore requested to let others know through The Grocer, of any of these unique schemes, and the best articles sent in will be published each week.

If, therefore, you know of a new advertising, selling, delivery, window display or interior convenience plan, tell us about it. If you send the notes on the story it will be written at The Grocer office and credited to you.

Interchange of ideas gives mutual benefit.

Discuss Pure Food Laws and Price Cutting

Wholesalers At Their National Convention Decide Upon Important Steps—Things As They Believe They Ought to Be—Cut-Throat Competition Methods Denounced By The President.

Detroit, June 8.—Pure food laws received due consideration at the annual convention of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association which was brought to a conclusion here last week with the election of officers. Douglas H. Bethard, Peoria, Ill., is the new president. President Judson's address was comprehensive and carefully prepared. He made an earnest plea for greater co-operation and the relegation to the commercial boneyard of cut-throat competition methods, and his sentiments met with hearty approval.

The report of the pure food and legislative committee was approved of. It summarized the work in the various States where legislatures have been in session within recent months as follows:

The result of the committee's legislative work for the year ending with this report is that all weight and measure branding bills different from the national law have been been defeated in every state in which they have been introduced, except in Nebraska, where the previously existing law was far more objectionable than the bill that was finally passed by the 1909 legislature; all bills requiring date of packing to be declared upon food products have been defeated in every state in which they were presented, and all bills propsing to set forth standards at length upon the statute books of states have been uniformly defeated, except in Wisconsin, where the bi'l is still pending at this writing, and in Ohio where a bill providing certain standards for flavoring extracts became a law.

These results should be a source of the greatest encouragement to the National Wholesale Grocers' Association. They afford a noteworthy example of the power of intelligent organization when directed toward reasonable legitimate ends.

Uniform Law Urged.

The convention strongly urged the adoption in every state of the Union of a uniform state food law identical with the national food and drugs act of June 30, 1908, with the exception only of those provisions relating to federal procedure and interstate commerce; also the granting by states to their food commissioners of broad powers of regulation like those given by the secretaries of the treasury of commerce and labor and of agriculture under the national act, and the adoption by such state food commissioners of regulations uniform with the federal food regulations.

The resolution further declared.

That the National Wholesale Grocers' Association reaffirms its opposition to all state or national laws requiring that the date of preparation or packing be declared upon the labels or containers of food products.

That we again endorse the policy of those manufacturers who recognize and adopt the wholesale grocers as the most efficient means and the most practicable and economic channel for the distribution of their products in the various markets of the country.

That the National Wholesale Grocers' Association welcomes the organization of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association and is in hearty accord with the plans of that organization for the guaranteeing of specialty sales and orders, thereby correcting a long standing unsatisfactory condition and practice in the taking of orders for grocers' specialties.

That this association reaffirm the provisions of its constitution opposed to free deals and yet, since the practice seems to be continued yet, since them seems to be continued by some manufacturers, we feel it our duty to recommend that members strongly oppose any manufacturers' plan which enables a retailer to obtain goods at less than jobbers' actual cost and to urge such manufacturers to change to a basis under which the jobber is protected to the full extent of his cost of handling such deal, together with a profit.

Condemns Price Cutting

F. W. Hannahs, of Newark, N.J., first vice-president, in his report dealt with the evi's of price cutting in vigorous style, and urged upon members the necessity of realizing the fal'acy of selling some of their goods at cost or less to obtain trade. He characterized the retailer who buys direct from the manufacturer as the worst enemy the wholesaler has and showed why the wholesale grocer is the manufacturer's most economical means of distribution.

A letter of felicitation was received from the National Retail Grocers' Association in session in Portland, Ore., and the who'salers replied with a telegram in the same vein.

Palermo Visitor Predicts Dearer Lemons

Says That Adverse Weather Conditions Will Bring About This Result—Pointers About The Growth of Lemons and Oranges—Olive Crop Short and Prices of Oil Have Increased.

Toronto, June 9.—That Sicily lemons will be dearer about the end of June is the belief of B. Follina, of Fratelli & Follina, Palermo, Sicily, packers of lemons, who has been for some time in Canada and the United States on business, and who just left yesterday for his home in the old world.

Speaking to The Grocer representative, Mr. Follina told of the destruction to lemons during the recent earthquake at Messina, where 300,000 boxes met a similar fate to the buildings and warehouse in which they were stored. This, as has been pointed out before by The Grocer had the effect of strengthening the prices of lemons at the time, but subsequently they receded to where they had been.

"The season has been a poor one on account of rain," said Mr. Follina, "and the verdelli crop is going to be short. This will cause the prices of these lemons which will arrive here about the end of June, to be somewhat higher. The quality will be good."

There are three crops of lemons produced in southern Italy and Sciliy during the year. The one producing the best quality of fruit is in November and December, these being known as November cuts. Then there is the January to April crop, and another one in the summer. The second named has been affected considerably this year by adverse weather conditions, while the harvesting of the third begins in June lasting on into July.

About the Lemon Tree.

Coming from the very centre of the European lemon district, Mr. Follina knows considerable about the fruit and the tree that bears it.

Five years growth is necessary before the lemon tree bears fruit and its life in Italy and Sicily is reckoned between twenty to thirty years. Many trees grow from 30 feet to 40 feet high, but the average height is only from 12 feet to 15 feet.

There are no thorns, as was generally supposed, on the lemon tree. But on the wild Sicilian oranges trees thorns are noticeable. The cheaper grades of lemons are those with no keeping quality and those are used for the manufacture of essential oil and juices.

"The orange industry is increasing in Italy and it is estimated," said Mr. Follina that it was twice as large as ten years ago, in spite of the fact that the market in the United States no longer exists. Germany and Russia are the principal markets for Italy oranges just now.

"The value of oranges is increasing too and the day will come, say ten years from now, when few lemons will be shipped to the United States. The dealers they will be getting them mostly from California."

Failure of Olive Crop.

Some interesting information was given on the olive industry in Italy and Sicily by Mr. Follina. As has been explained before by The Grocer, the olive crop last year did not amount to very much. The crop was destroyed by adverse weather conditions and vermin.

"In southern Italy it was a total loss and olive oil prices are now from 25 per cent. to 50 per cent. higher than they were a year ago.

"There is no doubt that olive oil is increasing in consumption. Its qualities are being better known and it is meeting with much favor in many countries.

Over in Italy the people use olive oil in much the same way as we do butter. They use it in frying eggs, meat, etc., and a favorite meal is bread, pepper and olive oil. To obtain the oil the olive fruit is crushed and then squeezed through heavy rollers. The first oil is No. 1 quality and to obtain the second and third qualities, it is passed through twice afterwards.

"There is a peculair custom existing in Italy, which is rigidly adhered to, and this that the manufacture of olive oil always begins at night. A little festival usually accompanies the event.

Mr. Follina could not say what the prospects for the coming year would be as it was rather early in the season.

"The weather of a night might change the whole thing," he declared.

Corn Cob Meal Manufactured in the United States—Called a Deception by Magazine—Rolled Oat Market in Canada Firm —World's Grain Markets Unsettled.

In some parts of the United States according to "Popular Mechanics" cob meal is extensively sold. In a recent editorial the above magazine says :

"Have you ever bought any cob meal? If so, you did it unintentionally. Cob meal is made by grinding corn cobs, and the industry is one shrouded in great mystery. Not that there is any secret of particular value in the process of grinding, but the ultimate purpose of the corn cob meal is not such as to make publicity desirable. Thousands of dollars have been spent in perfecting the grinding machinery, and the process is now reduced to a practical science.

"It is apparently reassuring to learn that it is necessary, of course, to have the cobs clean of husks, stones and pieces of chain, brick, etc.'; but investigation develops the fact that this precaution is taken not on account of the meal, but to safeguard the grinding machinery. Even so ignoble a thing as a corn cob grinder rebels at being fed on pieces of stone, chain and brick, and the machines are rather expensive.

"Where the cob meal goes finds a ready explanation in the fact that it can be made at a cost of $6 to $7 per ton, while ground feed brings $25 to $28 per ton.

"To such an extent has this class of deception developed that several States have already imposed severe penalties on the use of cob meal as adulteration. Inasmuch as the nutrition in cob meal is on a par with pine sawdust, it would seem a proper subject for national pure food legislation. The leading milling journals insist that the millers of wheat flour seldom are offenders, and that cob grinding is chiefly done by manufacturers of mixed and compound feeds, especially those composed largely of molasses.

"It's a mighty mean and contemptible man whose automobile is purchased with the stealings from the rations of a faithful, helpless animal."

FLOUR—The grain markets all over the world are unsettled with attempts here and there to gain control and corner the market. The feeling is very firm with an upward tendency, and in some places an actual advance of several cents a bushel has taken place. Winnipeg made a jump on wheat of 2⅛ cents and Liverpool is also 1½d. higher. Oats seem to be getting entirely beyond their value, and beyond the reach of horsemen to feed to their horses. There is a stray suspicion that an effort is made to corner the oat market. Flour will likely advance another 20c a barrel within the next few days. The prospects of the crops are very closely watched which largely govern the actions of the grain dealers.

Reader States Canadian Supply Comes From California and Oregon.

Editor Canadian Grocer—I have read with interest your weekly Grocer's encyclopedia and consider the department a very valuable one. At times, however, you make some very sad breaks in stating facts. In your issue of May 28, for instance on the subject of the apricot you say that "Canada uses an increasing amount of fruit, etc. she derives her supplies from Eastern Mediterraneam points."

I venture to say that not one wholesale or retail fruit dealer or grocer in the whole of Canada (except it be Wellwood, of Yonge St.), ever saw, tasted or sold a simple Mediterranean apricot. Every apricot imported and sold in Canada comes either from California or Oregon. Get busy and find out the real facts. We depend on The Grocer for absolutely correct information.

A Calgary Window of Starch and Syrup

Neat Display That Successfully Disposed Of The Goods—Fine China, Crockery And Glassware Carried—How The Store Is Laid Out—Necessary Qualities Of The Salesmen.

Calgary, June 9.—The accompanying photograph shows a recent window of the Calgary Milling Co.'s store, situated on Eighth Avenue. It will be observed that the window is dressed with starch and syrup and the large quantities shown indicate the growing popularity of these products in the Calgary district.

The display is a neat one and the store managers state was the means of making large sales of starch and syrup. The store-front is an attractive one and has considerable to do with the success of the business.

The Milling Co.'s store, as it is familiarly known, has few superior west of Toronto. It is under the management of John Irwin, who is a thorough grocer, a graduate of the old school, and the premises are admirably situated in the heart of the retail shopping district.

The ground floor is devoted to groceries, the second floor to china, crockery, glassware, etc. Nothing but the finest goods are carried, and almost every imaginable delicacy may be obtained. The stock carried, and it is a considerable one, is, of course, composed largely of Canadian products, although almost every country under the sun is represented. The fore part of the store is devoted to the exhibiting and selling of goods. The salesmen are all thoroughly-trained, courteous, neatly-attired men. In the central portion of the store the orders are put up by another corps, and then, at the rear the vans are loaded and despatched to all part of the city and suburbs.

The Milling Co.'s business is by no means confined to the City of Calgary. Being long established, and having earned a reputation for quality and reliability, the store numbers its customers in hundreds throughout Alberta and Eastern British Columbia.

FOUR-SQUARE FLOUR

What does it mean—to you?

QUITE recently, at Ottawa, one of our high-browed Government officials astonished his hearers with the fact that about forty millions are wasted every year in our Northwest—through bad seed!

¶ Just let this soak in awhile—forty millions lost! Not on account of poor soil, not on account of bad cultivation, nor through weather conditions unfavorable. Just through lack of the first essential for good results—on account of bad seed are lost annually forty millions of good Canadian coin.

FIVE ROSES

A Square Deal to All

¶ There's a moral herein concealed for our junior partner, the retail grocer of the alert brain. Your district is a big rich field ready to be planted, and your seed will sprout up quickly—if it be healthy seed. Every fiscal year, how many golden dollars are wasted through "small merit" goods, cheap flour that tears down the confidence it has taken you years of patient endeavor to build up? You know, for you are on the firing line of profit and loss.

¶ The past is dead, but the future will be what you make it. Since you realize the false economy of poor quality in flour sales, why not coax the good accounts with the right brand? We know positively that not for one moment would you even think of selling any other flour if you but knew the money there's in FIVE ROSES — a square deal on both sides of the counter.

¶ If you once tried FIVE ROSES even with your "crankiest customer," you would never again stand behind any other flour. We challenge you to do it, we defy you to prevent the "repeat" orders from taking care of themselves.

¶ Send your first order to-day that you may begin the harvest to-morrow.

Vanilla Flavoring Extract—Made From a Bean—Where It Is Grown And How It is Made—Its Various Uses.

VANILLA.—A flavoring extract that is much used by the housekeeper in the preparation of dessert dishes is vanilla, an extract from the vanilla bean. The word "vanilla" means "a small pod" and is derived from the Spanish "baynilla." It is one of the most popular of all the flavoring extracts, but before its value had been recognized by the cook, the chocolate manufacturer and the maker of sweetmeats, the perfumer had added vanilla as an odor in the making of combination perfumes. Its present varied uses encouraged the grower to extend its planting.

There are about sixteeen kinds of vanilla beans grown in different parts of the world, and the world's crop is estimated at nearly 1,350,000 pounds. The Mexican crop is about 220,400 pounds, but this is only half of the crop of Tahiti. Java's portion is only 6,000 pounds.

One of the oldest formulas for making vanilla extract contained Tonka beans; another good extract is produced from the South American bean. It is generally regarded, however, that the best extract is made from the long beans, though all beans are more or less affected some years by a species of rot. In fact, there have been in the past instances of poisoning charged against vanilla made from the very best beans, due to the presence of tannic acid, one of the natural properties of the bean. The vanilla bean is said also to contain from 4 to 11 per cent. resin.

Cloves Used In Preparation.

Pure vanillin is identical with the vanillin in the bean, without any of its objectionable properties, and is extracted by a special process. It is a very fine needle like crystal and the chief factor in its preparation is the clove. The use of this vanillin crystal in the manufacture of vanilla extract is said to eliminate all the injurious acids, and at the same time simplify the process, so that it can be made more economically.

Probably the most vanilla used is extracted from the Tonka bean, which bean may be divided into three classes: the Para, Surninam and Angostora. The first two are very fatty and are not very desirable as extract producers. This leaves the Angostra in a class by itself. The active principle of this latter bean, called coumarin, is produced synthetically, and, generally, is a very good article, although the synthetic article differs somewhat in flavor from the coumarin produced from the bean. Angostora beans which have not been purposely frozen and the coumarin taken out of them will yield over 100 grains of coumarin in each 7,000 grains of beans, or in each pound of beans.

One formula for the making of vanilla extract for flavoring purposes provides for one ounce of beans to every pint of extract. There are other formulas used in the manufacture of the extract for medicinal purposes and other ways of treating the bean for the making of perfumery, but the grocer is more interested in the flavoring extract he passes over the counter than in the other lines.

CATALOGUES AND BOOKLETS.

Manufacturers and wholesalers are requested to send catalogues, booklets, etc., to The Grocer in order that it may be announced to the retail trade that they have been issued. Retailers in sending for catalogues referred to, should mention this paper to show they are in the trade and they should be read thoroughly by them on account of their educative value. Often they may be able to secure new ideas.

Chas. Gurd & Co., Montreal, have issued a very neat and semi-humorous booklet on the occasion of the opening of their large, new factory, on Bleury Street. The contents form an adaptation of the old nursery rhyme, "The House that Jack Built." The title page reads, "The House that Gurd Built," and is illustrated by a photograph of Charles Gurd, founder and head of the firm, and framed with an outline of the new premises. Gurd's various aerated waters are treated of in interesting fashion. Illustrations are numerous. The booklet is neatly made up.

P. J. Pilon has secured premises at 805 Notre Dame Street, East, Montreal, and is now manufacturing his several lines of Canadian tobacco, including the firm's leaders, 4-11-44 and Big 5.

Carload of Watermelons Expected at Montreal—Nearing End of Navel Orange Season—Strawberries Coming by the Car Load —Onion Sales Large This Year—Good Demand for Fish.

MONTREAL

GRREN FRUITS—A report to the effect that a carload of watermelons was due to arrive in Montreal this week caused some interest in fruit circles. The lot is expected any day, but quotations could not be furnished at the time of going to press. They come from Florida. Another event of local interest was the selling of the small cargo brought to Montreal, via Boston, on the Fremona. It consisted of but a few small parcels of oranges and lemons, owing to the fact that the steamer was not a direct boat. The sale took place Wednesday. The first car of late Valencia oranges reached the city Monday. Dealers are quoting $3.50 to $3.60. Grape fruit is a little stiffer this week. Bananas are in good supply and selling freely at unchanged prices. Strawberries are arriving more freely, and are quoted at slightly more favorable prices. Dealers are now anticipating the arrival of the first of the California summer fruits, which will be coming in about the 25th inst.

VEGETABLES—Cucumbers and cabbage ran short the end of last week and the early part of this week, and dealers lost many sales as a result. Supplies are improving, however, as the season advances. A slight firming up in cabbage prices is noticeable as a result of the scarcity, but cucumbers are quoted at last week's figures still. Green and wax beans are arriving more freely and will be cheaper. The first lot of Mississippi tomatoes, small flats, selling at $1.30, arrived on Monday. Tomatoes will be lower from now on, the first drop being evident in the prices quoted to-day. Tennessee tomatoes will be arriving toward the end of the week, which will help to further ease the market. These latter tomatoes are not of quite as good quality as the other United States varieties, but there is a fair demand for them. Canadian tomatoes will be late this year, in common with many other vegetables. A drop in new potatoes is anticipated any day owing to larger receipts. About 5,000 bags of potatoes arrived from P.E.I. on Saturday. These were quickly taken up, and their receipt did not change prices at all. Bunch onions will be in shortly, and a good business in them is likely to take place. Local cucumbers will, of course, be late this year. To hasten their growth, rain, followed by heat, is necessary. Unseasonable weather, rains (without heat) and late seeding have been the contributing causes, ensuring late harvesting of cucumbers on the Island this year. Montreal district is somewhat famous for the expedition with which it can put new cucumbers on the market.

FISH—Gaspe salmon is arriving much more freely this week and a drop of 5c a pound is noted in prices. Further declines will be noticed as the season advances and these fish become even more plentiful. Quite a lot of halibut is selling at unchanged prices. B.C. salmon is no longer quoted. Flounders have advanced 2c, being quoted to-day at 10c. Fresh fish of all kinds is selling very well, but the approach of warm weather is causing the usual severe dropping off in package fish business. Dealers report offerings of gresh quite up to past years.

GREEN FRUITS—Pineapples are still the leading fruit on the market, with strawberries gaining rapidly. Apples are practically off the market, still some are held in cold storage for special customers. Navel oranges are about over, the last car is on the way but these will at once be followed by California late valentias, which will be the principal orange from now till October. Strawberries are from Maryland and shipped from Baltimore, and are of good quality. Several cases of strawberries are now sold daily.

VEGETABLES—Vegetables of almost every kind, are getting more plentiful from week to week. Tomatoes and cabbages are great sellers, and to supply the demand several cars a day are required. Tomatoes are now coming from Texas, Mississippi and Florida and are arriving in good condition. Cantaloupes for the first time this season have made their appearance and are selling at $8.00 per case of 33 in each. The sale of onions this year has far exceeded any former years, which is supposed to be owing to the superior quality now coming from Cuba and Texas. Potatoes are easier, and as the farmers are all done planting, the supply to meet the demand until the new crop, is considered quite sufficient and therefore prices are likely to rule easier. The prospects for good crops of all kinds of vegetbles are excellent.

FISH—"The fish business is splendid, with a good demand," remarked one jobber, "and the fish arrive in good condition, but the supply this week is not sufficient to meet the requirements."

"There are two reasns for this. In the first place owing to the warm weather the fish went out into deeper water, where they are harder to catch, and in the next place it has been very windy, and you know the fishermen can't run after their hats and catch fish at the same time." Mackerel have been added to the list for sale this week, which are sold at 25c each.

FRUIT CROP REPORT.

First Authorized Statement Sent Out by The Dominion Government.

The first fruit crop report sent out by the Department of Agriculture of the Dominion Government contains considerable information regarding the prospects in Canada.

It states that the backward spring has not been unfavorable for the fruit. The bloom was held in check until all serious danger of late frost was past. Spraying, however, has been delayed. The bloom is two weeks later in Ontario and nearly a month behind in British Columbia.

Apple trees everywhere give a good showing of bloom. Pears have blossomed well in all parts. The prospects for the pear crop in British Columbia is better in the lower mainland than in the interior valleys. A heavy bloom is reported from one district, but another the Bartlett, Clapp and Duchess suffered in some instances from severe winter forsts. The Anjou, Winter Nelis and Kieffer varieties are showing the best bloom.

All kinds of plums budded out remarkably well in Ontario. An exceedingly heavy bloom is recorded in the Niagara district, particularly of the Japan varieties. There is every prospect of a full crop in the commercial plum section.

Plums and Italian prunes have blossomed out well in British Columbia.

There has also been an abundance of bloom in the Ontario peach belt, and the prospect on the whole is very encouraging. Along the lake front, however, in the Niagara district from Stony Creek to within a short distance of Grimsby, peach buds were thinned in the lower branches by winter frosts. A short distance back from the lake to the mountain the peach orchards were full of bloom. This condition is reversed in the immediate neighborhood of Jordan Harbor and Port Dalhousie. The peach orchards nearest the lake show the best bloom. There has been very little wet weather during the blossoming season to interfere with the 'setting' of the fruit.

In several instances more or less serious damage to peach buds is reported from British Columbia, which will likely bring the crop below the average.

Cherries everywhere have blossomed heavily. At present the outlook is for an abundant crop throughout eastern Canada.

All varieties have blossomed well in British Columbia except in certain localities in the interior valleys, where sweet varieties are reported injured by frost.

Strawberries have wintered well in Ontario, especially where the patches made a good growth last fall. Small fruits of all kinds are doing well.

Raspberries, blackberries, currants and gooseberries give promise of an average crop in British Columbia.

PARIS COMES NEXT.

Merchants of That Town Want To Organize a Debt Collection System.

The following appeared in a recent issue of the Star-Transcript, of Paris, Ont., and indicates what a hold the collection system instituted by Guelph merchants has on their fellow men in other parts: The retail merchants of Brantford last week decided to advertise for a collector to act for that body in looking after bad pays and dead beat customers of that city. The list that had been in circulation among the merchants was found sufficiently well signed to warrant this step being taken. The result will be that a collector will be appointed and an effort made to put an end to "dead beating" in that city. Similar steps are being taken by some of the merchants in Paris, and a general meeting will in the near future be called. If a local collector of bad debts cannot be obtained, an effort will likely be made to have the Brantford collector act for Paris merchants as well. The general feeling is that a similar step should have been taken in both places years ago, and thus cut out the bad pay and dead beat individuals.

SELLING LOBSTERS—

What Does It Mean to You?

When a customer comes in and buys a tin of lobsters, what does it mean to you? Do you hand her a tin of lobsters that you know full well are the best on the market, or do you give her just "lobsters" without any individuality or "come back" quality. Lobsters are worth selling if they're the best, but they are best on somebody else's shelves if they are only "so-so."

Since your customers frequently judge you by the quality of the specialties which you sell, such as lobsters, do you not think it better to take no risks? When you sell Ice Castle Brand Lobsters you do not take any risks, for you are selling lobsters guaranteed by the packers, who are experienced in the business, and who will give you nothing which is not the best.

SODA CRYSTALS (WASHING SODA)

Foreign Soda Crystals—and some of English manufacture—are being extensively offered for sale in this country which are grossly adulterated with Glauber-Salts (Sulphate of Soda), a cheap product which is not only entirely useless for washing purposes, but is even likely to injure the fabrics with which it comes in contact. The Adulterated Soda-Crystals, although nominally lower in price than BRUNNER MOND'S PURE SODA CRYSTALS, are in reality much dearer owing to the large quantity of useless and injurious matter which they contain.

ACCOUNTS ACKNOWLEDGED, INSPECTED AND ACCEPTED AS CORRECT

All accounts carried by the McCASKEY REGISTER SYSTEM are acknowledged accounts.

Ledger accounts contain an element of uncertainty, as they are not accepted as correct until statement is rendered and comparisons made with invoices, which causes delays and oftentimes disputes and slow collections.

With the McCASKEY TOTAL FORWARDING REGISTER SYSTEM your customers get a complete bill and statement combined with every purchase, the acceptance of which is an acknowledgment of its correctness.

The McCASKEY handles all accounts with but one writing. It insures accuracy. It pleases your customers. It keeps accounts down to a reasonable amount. And as a collector it simply pulls in the cash.

Don't have a shadow of doubt. Don't give your customers a chance to dispute your accounts. Keep them in the right way—the McCASKEY WAY.

Ask us for information. It's free.

Getting Off to a Good Start Often Wins the Race

It's the same in business competition. The Western Canada market is a profitable one, the people were never more prosperous, nor the general outlook more reassuring. Thousands of settlers are taking up land every day.

The Western Market is growing all the time. Like a healthy, well fed youth it cannot help it—it's natural.

Have you something worth selling to either the retail or wholesale trade? Let us assist you in getting your share of the business. Our facilities are unequalled; our rates are reasonable.

Millionaire Wholesaler says Trade

Advertising is a Money-Maker

(London, Ont., Correspondence).

Thomas Martindale, a millionaire wholesale grocer of Philadelphia, and a native Londoner, was the guest of honor at the Canadian Club luncheon at the Tecumseh last week, and gave an address on "Advertising as a Money-maker."

In the course of his remarks he said that in the United States wholesale grocers confine their advertising to weekly or monthly trade papers.

"Trade paper advertising," he said, "is to be commended, as trade papers exist primarily to help in promoting the interests of the particular trades they represent, and they generally are filled with the latest trade news, advice, statistics, etc., pertaining to their respective fields. Besides, it stands to reason that such advertising ought to be profitable in thus being directed right at the wholesaler's prospective buyers."

Chocolate "Bordo" (formerly Bordeaux) will hereafter be sold under the new registered name. Many manufacturers are trying to make this specialty, but the nearest they have yet come to it, is to copy the old name.

Remember there is as much difference between "Chocolate Bordo" and these imitations as there is between Cucumbers and Bananas. It isn't the way they are shaped or wrapped, it's the way they are made; that inimitable flavor and consistency which has made Chocolate "Bordo" such an overwhelming success.

Remember this fact when the imitators offer you a substitute.

What "The Lancet" says:

"Cobra" Boot Polish has just been analysed by Dr. Ed. Nihaul, Professor of Industrial Chemistry at the University of Liege, and he has recognised that the Polish does not contain lamp-black or any acid substance. This is important so far as the preservation of the leather is concerned, but from the health point of view the Polish does not close up the pores of the leather, so that the feet keep fresh and cool.

—September 6th, 1905.

SHOE POLISH

from the health point of view

"COBRA" Polish instantly commends itself to those who appreciate the difference between health preserving, hygienic shoe dressing which keeps footwear in good condition, and the destructive compounds made of acids, oils, treacle and soot known as "Blacking."

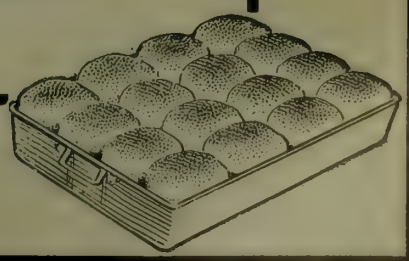
A Live Member

There are certain lines that sell so slowly they don't pay rent for the space they take up. And the more space a line takes up the more rent it eats up—therefore when purchasing a bulky line like flour you should be doubly careful to avoid the "slow" brands and select a "live member."



PURITY FLOUR

is well and favorably known from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It has a reputation for quality and uniformity second to none. Certainly, the sales for this brand have reached a record-breaking pinnacle and are steadily increasing. Grocers who realize the value of quick turnovers appreciate Purity—the "live member." That's why we expect to receive an order from you by next mail.

Brantford Grocers and Their Business Methods

One Maintains There are Too Many Grocery Stores in That City—Present Profits Smaller Than Formerly on Account of Competition—New Book Keeping Systems — Should Merchants Obtain Security From Creditors?

Staff Correspondence.

Brantford, June 16.—Are there too many grocery stores in Brantford? Are the profits now obtained more than they used to be?

J. T. Wallace, a Colborne St. grocer answers the first in the affirmative and the latter in the negative.

"Thirty-five years ago about the time I began business here," he told a representative of The Canadian Grocer," I was making better profits and more money than I am now."

"What is the reason for this?" was asked.

"Competition. Brantford has too many grocery stores for her population. The newspapers have all been telling about what a gold-mine there was in Brantford and the result is that dozens have flocked in here and opened stores. We have been overrated."

Mr. Wallace in giving figures stated the estimated population was 20,000 and to supply these people with the necessities of life there were 60 grocers. Calculation shows that the grocery stores supply an average of about 333 persons or about 50 families with an average of 6 persons.

"For instance, about 30 years ago we sold tea at $1.25 which cost between forty and fifty cents; now we sell the same tea for fifty-five cents and it costs us thirty cents. We used to sell eight lbs. of granulated sugar for a dollar now it's eighteen and 20 lbs. for the same money.

"Package goods have taken the place of bulk to a great extent and of course it means less work. We had more work to do years ago, but our profits were larger."

"But the assortment has extended," was ventured.

"Well, yes, but not very much," said Mr. Wallace. "There is probably a better assortment in breakfast foods which aids our sales but otherwise I don't think there is any great improvement.

"It's a good thing to advertise our city, but the papers shouldn't overrate it. A large number of those who were attracted here by rosy prospects have failed," was his passing comment.

Mr. Wallace's remarks are indeed interesting in comparison with those of some of the United States Senators, who complain that retailers now-a-days are the cause of any unreasonable prices to consumers.

New Bookkeeping Method.

Brantford is blessed by being a first-rate manufacturing centre in addition to being the hub of a good farming district. Eagle Place is practically built up of mechanics' residences and factories and several corner grocery stores are located there to catch that section of the trade.

J. Peachy is the proprietor of one of them and is modern in many particulars having three large show windows and handsome new bin fixtures equipped with several mirrors.

Mr. Peachy for a long time was troubled with delays inside the store in the payment of accounts by the mechanics on and after pay days in the factories. He had in vogue the "pass-book" system which meant that every purchaser from a family who had an account, had to bring the book every time a visit was made to the store. The purchases were marked in it and were also kept track of in the store.

"This got to be an awful trouble," explained Mr. Peachy. "Often they would neglect to bring the pass-books and we had to be careful in making out their accounts. The store used to be filled with people waiting to pay and besides several complaints were heard.

"The system I've got now, practically eliminates this. I use counter-check books, having one for every credit customer. The balance is always carried over to the next page when a new order is taken and totalled up with the amount of that order. In that way every customer knows exactly what he owes before coming to the store and if he doesn't have the paper with his last order the amount can easily be obtained from the duplicate in his check-book."

The counter-check books are arranged alphabetically in a large rack and little trouble is occasioned in looking after them. Mr. Peachy claims to be the first in Brantford to adopt this system. There are a few conservative customers who will not comply with these regulations and he allows them to do as they wish, but he finds the majority are well satisfied.

Favors Ontario Association.

Another enterprising corner grocery in Eagle Place is that of Huffman and Craig. The present proprietors have been there about three years and have worked up a good trade despite the fact that prior to their entering the store the business had changed hands three times in a year.

John Craig, one of the firm, is an advocate of the carrying of confectionery in suburban districts—districts that are located some distance from the exclusive confectionery stores. He is also a believer in associations, and thinks that a grocers' association for Ontario would tend to produce better trade systems and to procure more intelligent legal arrangements.

That little trade goes past Brantford grocers to the large mail order houses is the opinion of John Kew. Although young in years he has a splendid grocery and meat business in Eagle Place and it is all the more creditable since it has been built up through his own energy and enterprise.

He told of an incident connected with the mail order business which should be of interest to all retailers and which goes to show that service is sometimes lacking.

Recently a friend sent to the mail-order section of a Toronto departmental store for a coat ordered from the catalogue. The cash of course accompanied it, but for some days there was no sign of the coat. A "stirring-up" letter was dispatched, and the excuse mailed back that the order had been filled but that it had gone astray, presumably somewhere in Quebec. Eventually a coat did arrive, but it was not according to catalogue and was promptly returned with the request that the mail-order house do the same with the money.

Mr. Kew declares that Brantford grocers can sell just as cheaply as the Toronto department stores and that they do.

Are There Fools Among Grocers?

"I was talking to a banker the other day," remarked Geo. Bickell, another local grocer," and he happened to ask me about collections. I told him they were slow.

" 'Grocers are fools,' " he said " 'to give goods without security. Send them along to us and see if they can get money from the banks without the best of security,' and I think he is right.

"He maintained that the best course for grocers to follow was to give no credit to any who looked suspicious.

"This new collection system," said Mr. Bickell, "is scaring a few of the slow pays and a number have already paid old accounts to prevent a visit from the official collector."

Mr. Bickell carries soft drinks during the summer season and as his store is located some distance from the city's centre he does a good trade in these. He has a neat corner grocery with modern equipments in the manner of scales, book-keeping system, meat slicers, etc.

A Yearly Half-Holiday.

A half-holiday every week all the year round and constituted by the government is a proposal made by James Demming, manager of the grocery department of J. C. Struthers & Co. He claims that if such were in force universally just as much business would be done and a little respite from work would be secured. This would be appreciated by clerks who have to work to all hours on Saturday nights and tend to produce better service from them.

"Municipalities sometimes make laws to this but they are not binding," said Mr. Demming. "The government would have to pass the law."

Besides a grocery store J. C. Struthers & Co. carry dry goods, boots and shoes and meats. Mr. Struthers aims at giving good service to his customers and is always obliging. These he believes are necessary qualities to the successful salesman.

Every morning the delivery men of the Struthers' store take orders from their customers and the goods are sent in the forenoon. This is appreciated by many who do not care to visit the store and who have no telephones.

A. Coulbeck, president of the Brantford Retail Grocers' and Butchers' Association is much interested in the new collection system. He points out that the money is beginning to come in even before the collector commences his duties. The knowledge that an official had been appointed to do the work was no doubt the cause.

Selling by Weight Becomes Law in Some Plac e

Measures Discarded by Grocers and Scales Only Allowed to be Used in Selling Specified Articles—A Few Articles Struck Off the Original List at Jobbers' Request.

By John W. Lux, President Minnesota R. G. A.

Selling by weight is a proposition which the grocers of the Twin Cities, St. Paul and Minneapolis, have for some time considered and have felt to establish such system would prove desirable and useful. Retailers have in the course of their transactions found that buying and selling by measure afforded opportunities for certain annoying impositions, for which the only cure that seems practical is to change the system; to no longer buy or sell various commodities by measure, but in place of that to adopt a uniform method of using weights.

It is realized that "selling by weight" may have a tendency to very materially change the fabric and foundation of commercial enterprises, and that a movement to produce such changes and instal a different system ought not to be undertaken without serious and careful consideration. It has been suggested and agreed that a State law be secured, if possible, for the reason that a few dealers or communities would be powerless to effect a change from measure to weight that will reach and remove the evil. The general feeling has been found to be in sympathy with a movement that will not ask a procedure so radical as to demoralize or upset the course of the markets nor trench upon the rules and laws laid down to regulate inter-state commerce.

The assistance of our Minnesota State Association was invited and committees appointed from the local associations to confer upon the preparation of a bill for a State law to require selling by weight. After conferences by this committee a form for a "selling by weight" law was agreed to and given publicity through the newspaper. The first section of the bill is as follows:

Section 1. The following named vegetables, agricultural products, articles of food and other goods, wares and commodities, to wit: dry beans, dry peas, green beans, green peas, spinach, beets, carrots, parsnips, Irish potatoes, sweet potatoes, white turnips, rutabagas onions, tomatoes, butter, lard, sugar, tea, coffee, green apples, cranberries, bananas, wheat, oats, corn, hay, straw, mixed feed clover seed, broom corn seed, sorghum seed, rye, buckwheat, hemp seed, rape seed, barley, millet, Hungarian grass seed, timothy seed, coal, charcoal, blue grass seed, orchard grass seed, redtop seed, plastering hair, lime and cement, shall hereafter be marketed, bartered bargained for, vended and sold in the State of Minnesota by avoirdupois weights only; and no person, persons or corporations shall hereafter market, barter, bargain for, vend or sell any vegetable or vegetables, agricultural product or products article or articles of food or either or any of the goods, wares or commodities hereinbefore mentioned and described, in the State of Minnesota, in any other manner than by avoirdupois weights. Provided, however, that fresh vegetables with green tops may be sold by the bunch or count and shall not be required to be sold by avoirdupois weights.

Another section provides, as the penalty for violation of the act, $100 fine, or imprisonment not exceeding ninety days.

Wholesalers Favorable.

A number of the wholesale produce men were asked to give opinions on the idea of the "selling by weight" law and its classification of commodittes. All spoke favorably of the "selling by weights," saying that it was right in principle, but all the jobbers insisted that four of the items of the classification should be taken from the bill, these being green apples, cranberries, sweet potatoes and tomatoes. With those commodities stricken out of the State law, as national legislation could only deal with those articles, they were ready to co-operate with the retail dealers.

At the time of writing this statement the proposed "selling by weight" bill has not become a law, but there is the expectation that it will, with the omission from the classification of green apples, cranberries, sweet potatoes and tomatoes. At all events, the agitation in Minnesota for the adoption of the "selling by weight" system has called out responses which have come to our State Association headquarters, an incident showing that New York, Ohio, Wisconsin and other States are ready to accept the system as a relief, if it may be adopted under conditions that will benefit and impose no hardships.

It is evident that what has been done in Minnesota is practical as well as progressive; a movement that is welcomed as a relief from existing burdens, shutting the door against practices savoring of dishonesty and carrying into effect, by the law of the land, "the square deal" as a business maxim of the highest worth. That is what "selling by weight" will give the grocers of our State and everywhere it may be adopted, a chance will be afforded to live and do unto others as they wish to be done by.

None of the wholesale grocers of Toronto will be attending the convention of the Wholesale Grocers' Exchange in Victoria this month. The distance they claim is too far.

TO MAKE PRICES UNIFORM.

Grocer Suggests That Manufacturers Invoice Goods at Retail Prices.

By M.M.

As was announced recently, owing to the advance in wheat and flour, biscuit manufacturers have raised their prices one cent a pound. This means a good deal to the manufacturer, but how does this affect the retailer? Such little advances steal so quietly on the grocer that he may scarcely notice it, and yet this has recently occurred in so many of the goods he is handling, that he cannot afford to overlook them.

The difficulty the retailer meets with is the fact that it looks small to his customers to charge 1c more on a sale, and in many cases rather than do this he loses the 1 cent. These 1 cents, however, in a month's sales amount to considerable money and at the end of the year the profits are disappointing. Many articles which used to sell to the retailer at 80 or 90 cents a dozen, and which gave him a fair profit by selling at 10c each, are now costing him $1.00 a dozen and he still sells them at 10c.

Some of the retailers may raise the prices of biscuits 1c a pound, but others may continue to sell at the same prices, and unintentionally force his competitor to drop to the old figure. Would it not be better if the biscuit men, as well as other manufacturers would invoice their goods at retail prices and take off 20 per cent. discount for the retailer's profit. This would give the retailer a profit of 25 per cent. all round, and all would sell the goods at the same price.

This is a matter that might be considered by the retailers.

ANOTHER CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY

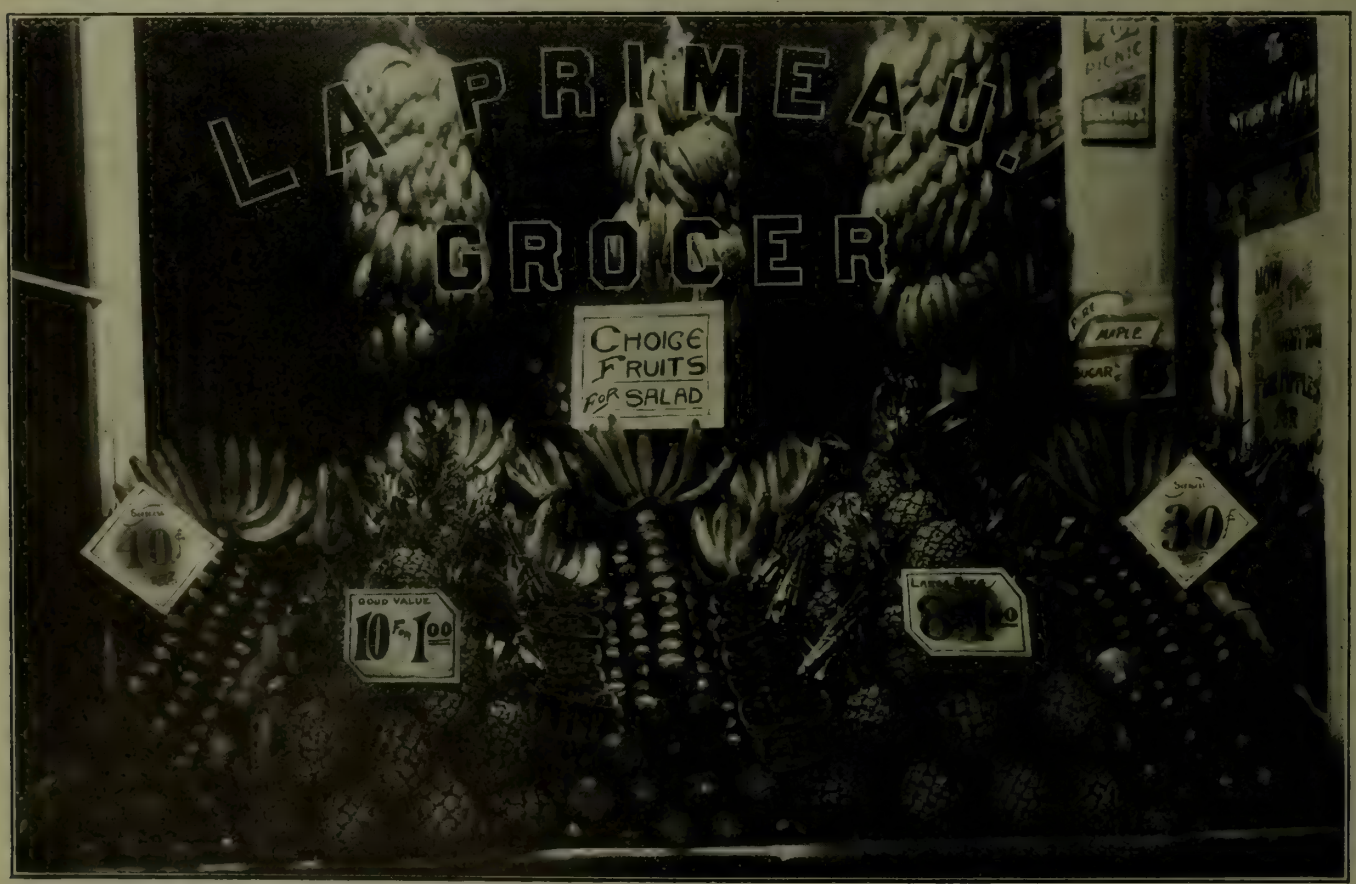
The Canadian Provident Co-operative Society, with head office in Toronto has been given an Ontario charter to do a general merchandising business. The provisional directors are: John Douglas, laborer; Alexandria Easton, plumber; George Wylie, and Alexander Hope, teamsters; Walter Atkins, stoker; Andrew Law, tailor; William Worthington, carpenter, and James Nelson, mechanic.

CORN EXCHANGE BUILDING SOLD.

Robert Meighen, president of the Lake of the Woods Milling Co., Montreal, confirmed the story published in The Canadian Grocer recently, to the effect that the company had purchased the old Corn Exchange Building, on St. Sacrament Street, opposite the Board of Trade Building, for which $50,000 was paid. Mr. Meighen stated that another storey would be added to the building. The company will use the entire third floor for the accommodation of their office staff, but the rest of the building will be rented to business firms, and, perhaps, one portion of it to some business mens' club.

Increased Business from Price and Show Cards

Seldom is Anything Displayed in Lindsay Grocer's Store Without Them—Written Chiefly by the Clerk — Newspaper Space Used to Advantage—A Fruit Window Which Sold the Goods.



That price ticket and show card writing is rapidly taking hold of the present day merchants is a claim that needs no big demonstration to prove. The value of window and interior cards as selling assistants is becoming widely known and converts are being made every week.

"I honestly think that those cards are one of the best features I've got in my business," is the way that L. A. Primeau, a Lindsay grocer, describes their use.

For fruit displays in the window, Mr. Primeau always uses them and he does a splendid business in that line. Every Saturday in the fruit season he makes a special display and price tickets occupy prominent positions.

"You see," he said opening a drawer, "we keep all we write in there and replenish the lot whenever it is necessary to establish a new price. We have show cards which are handy for Easter, Christmas and other seasons of the year and they are always on hand. I find that passers-by invariably stop to read the show cards ; of course they look at the price tickets too and in that way I'm sure we get considerable trade which otherwise would pass by the door."

A show card which he recently showed in his window and which is here reproduced shows the ability of Mr. Primeau and his clerk to think out bright, catchy compositions. "Every cent counts if you buy your groceries at Primeau's," reads the card and at the same time the "saved coins" are dropping into the money bag. This card is easily made from ordinary card board and coarse screened cloth. The latter is pasted on over the rectangular hole in the card and the coins glued onto it. The lettering is done with paint in two colors—black and white—the hand and money bag being yellow.

Fruit Display in L. A. Primeau's Window, Lindsay, Ont., Showing Value of Price Tickets and Show Cards.

These tickets as the illustrations indicate are made at little cost. Mr. Primeau's clerk attends to providing them and all that is necessary are cardboard, some small brushes and different colored paints. The ability to write the tickets well can only be acquired with practice. Development comes rapidly and by comparison between some of the cards written recently and others a short time ago the development can easily be seen.

Mr. Primeau believes that price tickets should be used on nearly all goods displayed in the window and as many as possible inside the store.

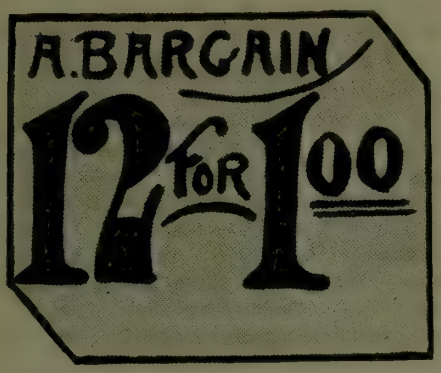
Uses the Newspaper.

Mr. Primeau does not pin his faith entirely to price tickets for the development of his business. He uses newspaper space regularly and he finds that advertising there pays well.

He attends diligently to store equipment and contemplates adding silent salesmen for confectionery, etc. He recently added pastry and is working up a good trade in that line.

Window dressing is another feature of the Primeau store. Fruits are often displayed and the work is accomplished neatly and attractively, always resulting in increased sales and as this is the object to be obtained the right idea must have been secured.

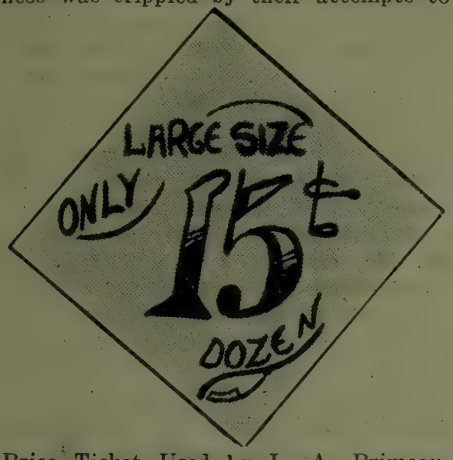
TO CHECK PRICE CUTTING.



Limit the Minimum Selling Prices Says Convention Delegate.

Portland, O., June 15.—The claim that slashing of prices made retail failures was forcibly advanced at the convention here of the Retail Grocers' Association. Frank B. Connolly, chairman of the committee on "Maintenance of the Retail Selling Price by the Manufacturer" severely critized the average price cutter, stating that he was a creature of short life who leaves behind his failure many anxious creditors.

His report in part was as follows :



"Realizing that this plan is one of immense proportions and very far reaching in its effects, both immediate and because of possible resulting complications, your committee decided to proceed cautiously in explaining to the manufacturer the necessity of his protecting the legitimate retail grocer against the piratical price cutter.

"The price cutter in most instances enters a community and after a tempestuous existence of a few short years, goes out of business leaving behind as a remembrance of his foolish methods an atmy of anxious creditors and hundreds of retailers whose business was crippled by their attempts to save their trade by meeting his dishonest competition.

"With that idea in mind we sought to educate the manufacturer as to his rights and obligations to the retailer who distributes his products each day, sometimes without enough compensation to cover the cost of doing business.

"As chairman of that committee I took an opportunity while in New York after the Boston convention to call upon several of the leading manufacturers of staple articles handled in many communities by the retail grocery trade at a loss, when the cost of doing business is considered and found them interested.

"The recent conference in New York city of representatives from the retailers, wholesalers and manufacturers accomplished a great deal as a preliminary towards bringing about a mutual understanding between all. It must be all understood that a manufacturer who makes a pretense of protecting the retail selling price on his goods is worse than the manufacturer who is not doing anything towards it, on account of the fact that he was misrepresenting his position to the retail trade and should be so notified.

"Price protection along these lines presents the only general, legal and practicable plan yet presented to the trade for insuring profits. It does away with illegal conspiracies and depends on business principles and not on good fellowship and mutual promises that are never any stronger than the weakest member of the association. Our national association can devote its efforts to no better cause for the benefit of the retail grocery trade of the United States than to urge its State and local associations in every section of the country to educate their members to make it worth while for the the manufacture to give them this protection."

ANOTHER FALLS IN LINE.

Penetanguishene Merchants Adopt Collection System Similar to One in Guelph.

Penetanguishene, June 15.—The retail merchants of Penetanguishene have found for some years that they have been called upon to carry accounts and give credit to customers who make no aim to pay their accounts when rendered. During the winter months especially, these applicants for credit became numerous and the general result was that the merchant has been called upon to grant what is in many cases nothing more or less than charitable donations. While recognizing that "Charity covereth a multitude of sins," the merchants here have decided for the future to cultivate a deeper commercial instinct and endeavor to surround themselves with a more thrifty class of customers and it is believed that by doing away with the present wide open system of giving credit that in time the laboring man especially will become more thrifty by not having his weekly wage practically spent before it is earned as is now too often the case.

After holding several meetings which were well attended by all the most prominent merchants it was decided to invite D. A. Scroggie of Guelph, to come here and assist in forming a local organization. This gentleman came and on the evening of June 9th gave an instructive address on what was being done in many other places along the lines of merchants organizing for protection in the matter of giving credits.

As a result of this meeting it was resolved that an association be formed to be known as the Penetgnguishene Retail Merchants' Association, organized for the purpose more especially of regulating and curtailing of credits. The usual officers were elected and a systematic method will be adopted whereby it is hoped to minimize the loss the merchant has hitherto been put to by the unsatisfactory methods of giving credit in the past.

Chaput Fils & Cie., Montreal, will close their business place on Thursday, June 24, it being St. Jean Baptiste Day.

PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY

INSIDIOUS FORM OF BLACKMAIL.

In a recent issue of a trade newspaper there was a report in one column, of a meeting of retailers at which a committee was appointed to wait upon the wholesale trade for donations to a picnic, which was to be held this summer. In the very next column of the same paper was a report of a meeting of retailers in another town in which strong exception was taken to the demands which were from time to time made upon them for donations to various organizations, which was designated as being "absolutely obnoxious."

What is sauce for the goose should be sauce for the gander. The whole system is wrong. Every tub should stand upon its own bottom. It is nothing but a species of hold-up. When a customer, be that customer either consumer or retailer, attempts to obtain donations to picnics and other social functions from those from whom they buy their supplies, the practice is an insidious form of blackmail.

With the retailer largely lies the remedy. Let him refuse either to hold up or to be held up.

THE RETAILER AS CULPRIT.

Under the above caption the Literary Digest in its issue of June 5, gives a summary of the discussion in the United States Congress, as well as in some of the newspapers on the question as to who is responsible for alleged high prices of commodities to consumers.

A few weeks ago Senator Hale asserted that "it is the jobber, the retailer, who puts up the price," and that "we are at the mercy of the middlemen and retailers." Senators Flint and Smoot and others later returned to the charge, asserting that the retailers and department stores of the country are making exorbitant profits.

In the face of the facts that the retail trade have no organization in which to fix prices and that competition is so strong, these statements by the Senators are nonsensical. It is plain that in order to establish unreasonably high prices for any line of commodities, combination and suppression of competition among sellers are absolutely necessary. Neither of these at present exist, so that little reasoning power is necessary to understand that the retail trade is not responsible for any undue prices that may from time to time be in vogue.

During the recent presidential campaign in the United States, both parties favored tariff reduction, but it seems that it is now a case of "drawing a red herring across their paths" by blaming the retailer in order to obtain excuses for increasing the tariff.

The retailers of the country are indignant, and are justified in being so, at this effort to make them responsible for conditions occasioned by the tariff, and as the Los Angeles Express points ont, "about to be made additionally unjust by an increase of 10 per cent. in its average ad valorem rates."

No one doubts that competition continues to rule with unabated force in the retail trade, making statements to the effect that this section is the cause for any unreasonable price, appear ridiculous.

THE MERCHANT AS BENEFACTOR.

In these times when retail merchants have to compete with the large departmental stores continually receiving favors from public officials and with the co-operative stores trying to push their way to the front, there is every reason for an educational campaign among the farmers and mechanics.

In former years when the country was in its younger days, when the pioneers were hewing houses from the standing forests and planting grain among the stumps, the merchants were their mainstay. Such is yet the case particularly in the northern districts which settlers have just begun to populate. One of the first men on the scene is the retail merchant. He supplied in the olden times and now supplies in these districts the necessities of life.

For years the retail merchant has carried the farmer and mechanic. Whenever a year of depression came and the farmer through failure of the crops had little money to spend he went to the merchant for credit. This is true in the present as well as in the past. If the grain yield this season should by any mischance become a failure merchants everywhere would again have to carry thousands of farmers. During the recent trade depressions many would have starved had it not been for the help of the retailers.

The retailer is the go-between, the money lender who gets no security on his loans. People to whom the bank or ordinary money lender refuses to lend, obtain credit from the merchant. He is the charity institution on the street corner. Yet when these same people have a little money they send it to the mail order houses leaving their benefactors in times of trouble and depression to obtain what they need to meet their accounts, the best way they can.

These same people will, when any co-operative store promoter comes along, spend their cash in taking stock expecting impossible dividends.

Unfair as this appears, yet it is actually the case and the only remedy lies in the merchant himself. Some have tried and triumphed. Every retailer has got to boom his own business by thoroughly acquainting the public with the quality and assortment of his goods. He must watch the competitor in the big city instead of the one across the road. He can educate by quiet talks where he knows the seed will fall on fertile ground. He has some splendid talking points and must make the best of them all.

In these days of competition he has got to be on the alert.

ST. JOHN IN BOASTFUL MOOD.

St. John, N.B., is in a rather boastful mood these days. It is over the result of the winter port trade for the season of 1908-09. This boastfulness is not without reason, for the winter port season, which ended in May, is a record one. According to a statement just issued by the Board of Trade the exports for the six months ending with that month were $24,546,840. This is not only over $1,000,000 larger than any preceding year, but it is about $14,000,000 in excess of the same period ten years ago.

No one begrudges St. John its success. The people of that city are enterprising and have not been satisfied with the assistance which the Federal Government gave them in order to improve the facilities of their port to accomodate ocean steamers, but they have put their hands in their own pockets and put them in deeply in order to bring about the desired end.

Business men who, like those in St. John, help themselves, are entitled to the assistance of the Federal Government, for the nation as well as the immediate locality derives benefit from a port like that of St. John.

ESTABLISHING FOOD STANDARDS FOR CANADA.

The Canadian Grocer learns upon highest authority that food standards are about to be established in Canada.

Consideration is being given to the whole matter at present by the Department of Inland Revenue, of the Dominion Government, which has charge of such affairs.

Chief Analyst A. McGill, who has been working upon the new standards for some time, is at present in Europe, but the work has advanced sufficiently to ensure its being carried through, and upon Mr. McGill's return, further definite action is likely to be taken.

Undoubtedly the idea of the Department of Inland Revenue in making this move is to protect the honest manufacturer and dealer, and the consumer, and the newly made standards will be very slearly defined, so that there can be no doubt as to what they mean.

Realizing the serious nature of the work undertaken, the Government worked, and is proceeding very cautiously in the establishment of the standards.

No changes which might be called radical in the extreme will be introduced, but, without a doubt, unscrupulous manufacturers will be forced to retire from the field, or to market goods of purity and honest value.

In short, the new standards will call for food products up to certain well defined, established tables. Practically all food stuffs is use to-day, will be covered, including meats, fresh, salted, pickled, smoked; oysters, canned meats, vegetables, fruits; dried fruits, sugar, molasses, syrups, teas, coffees, spices, lard, extracts, condensed milk and all other milk products, ice cream, dried vegetables, evaporated apples, jams, marmalades, jellies, pickles, catsup, maple syrup, maple sugar, confectionary, honey, cocoa vinegar, fruit juices, wines and liquors.

The objective of the Government is to secure for the honest dealer and the consumer, honest goods. In the past, any attempt at deception through various methods has been ever frowned upon, sometimes punished, but not always. In the fututre deception of any kind will be severely dealt with.

The danger which might be done to commerce by too strenuous action in the arranging of standards has been an ever-present thought with the Government, and with the idea of precluding any such disastrous consequences, the Department has been in close touch with the leading manufacturers in various lines. While the opinions of these business men will carry weight, they will not influence the Government in establishing standards which will accomplish the desired effect —the ensuring of honest goods.

One result of the new standards will be the dropping of the word "cream" as a name for evaporated milk, which will be forbidden, and "Evaporated Cream" will no longer be sold. Provided the milk product is properly labelled—"Evaporated Milk" it may be offered for sale.

Tea standards, in the sense they are understood by tea merchants, will not be established. The new ruling will provide that teas conform in kind and country of production to the names under which they are sold. Standards for individual grades from various places of growth will not be arranged, which is regrettable.

The use of standard preservatives will be allowed, but any which are at all injurious to the health, or which have not been proved beyond doubt to be harmless will be strictly forbidden, as will any preservative tending to deceive one as to the quality of the food.

The experience of other countries having food standards will be employed to the advantage of the Canadian People, and drastic changes which may have worked havoc elsewhere will be avoided, or very seriously considered, before action is taken.

If everything can be prepared in time, the law establishing the Canadian Food Standards will be enacted at the next session of Parliament.

AWNINGS AND WINDOW DISPLAYS.

Present-day retail merchants are few who will claim that window displays have no place in the modern store. They are recognized by those who have made a feature of them to be among the best advertisements possible, and no grocer can afford to neglect this portion of his publicity scheme. Examples can be supplied by the score relating to the successes merchants have made with their windows. They must be attractive and clean and if possible original. Selling power is the mark to be aimed at.

The complaint frequently is heard, especially from merchants in country districts, that window displays cannot be made use of on account of damage done by exposure of goods to the rays of the sun.

They are probably justified in not dressing their windows under these circumstances but they have an available remedy which should not be over-looked in view of the fact that window trimmings is practically a necessity. These merchants claim that the trouble lies in the fact that they have no awnings with which to protect their goods. But if window displays are going to give a prestige to the store, if they are going to improve its appearance and if they are going to enhance the sale of goods, there is only one course to follow—get an awning.

In addition to allowing windows to be dressed with goods that may be affected by the sun, an awning produces a more inviting appearance, especially on a hot sultry day, as it aids in keeping the store interior cool and refreshing.

The cost of an awning would be more than met by the benefits above mentioned.

A WIDE-AWAKE GROCER.

That readers of The Canadian Grocer benefit from our market reports is evidenced by the following from one of our correspondents:

> One of the subscribers in reading his Grocer noticed a forecast on the currant crop and at the first opportunity placed an order for a heavy stock. Needless to say the advance in price occurred and the subscriber, who reads his paper wore a broad smile that hasn't worn off yet. His profits on that one deal were well up in the three figures dollar column.

Market reports as they appear in The Grocer are secured from the best authorities—from those who are constantly in touch with both the foreign and home markets, and they can be relied upon. The greatest care is exercised in obtaining quotations and giving the market conditions. That these are correct is shown by the fact that our figures have been on various occasions used in the law courts as authentic and also taken by the governments. We advise a careful perusal every week.

MAINLY ABOUT OURSELVES.

During several years past The Grocer has found its circulation in South Africa increasing steadily, without any effort on our part. Now our readers form quite a considerable number of the most progressive class of merchants, and we have decided to open a subscription campaign very shortly that will cover this field systematically and thoroughly. The extension of The Grocer's circulation into South Africa, and many other countries as well, carries with it very material benefits for the firms doing an export business.

Potatoes Cheaper in Lindsay—Peterboro Society Decides to Discontinue Soliciting Prizes From Merchants for Picnics—Grocers' Association in London Enter Protest Against School Book Contract Going to The T. Eaton Co.

PETERBORO.

June 16.—Sergt. Walter Moore, of the 57th Regiment, has had a varied experience since he purchased a small grocery shop a few months ago. He is an employee in the C. G. E. works, and in the early spring decided to go into the grocery business. He purchased a little business in a suburban part of the city and during the day his wife attended to the customers, who now and then came in, gradually more frequently. Then came an enticing offer to go with the Canadian team to Bisley. He had made the trip on a former occasion and came to the conclusion that if he went this year, it would mean the loss of his grocery business. He decided to give it his best attentions and to forego the trip to England. He has been progressing favorably, until one day during the past week his little son came home from school rather ill and it was later found to be rather serious. He himself is home from work. Circumstances of this nature would destroy the ambitions of the most optimistic, but it is likely that Mr. Moore will continue to conduct his small grocery business.

The price of potatoes on the market last Saturday was down to $1.00, practically its old price. It is likely that it will remain there until the new samples are received.

The merchants of Peterboro are pleased with the action of St. Peter's Total Abstinence Society in determining not to solicit prizes for their annual excursion. In former years the T.A.S. always received a large number of donations from the merchants, who generally have had to bear the brunt of excursions. The result was that their long list of sports was made possible by the generosity of the store proprietors. This picnic is undoubtedly the largest of the year, and is held on Dominion Day. There will be a change this year. The committee know that the soliciting is a practical holdup and have acknowledged it such. They will discontinue it, but will accept any gifts the merchants or business men wish to offer. The society has many friends and they do not want to refuse anything that may afford the donor a pleasure in giving.

Jas. R. Bell received the announcement of the convention of Retail Merchants to be held in Brockville this week. Mr. Bell was one of the most energetic of the local merchants to form an association in Peterboro, but for some reason his efforts have not been accompanied by permanent results. It cannot be attributed to his work, however. A spirit of apathy has been apparent in the attitude of many of the most influential business men.

Although Ald. Gillespie, of White & Gillespie, grocers, has not stated it directly, The Grocer's representative has the best of grounds for believing that the firm has made a success of their dairy supplies, which they handle extensively. This is really a sideline and yet it is considered a good one. The other day Mr. Gillespie stated that he had disposed of a large number of cream separators throughout the country and that this year there has been a tendency among the farmers to improve their dairy equipment. This has been very marked, and for that reason the firm has met with splendid success this year. They have depended upon their experience in the past and upon the good name they have won among the dairying section of the farmers by former business relations.

The confectionery season is now entering. It arrives with the lemon, banana, lime juice and other summer specials, which are now beginning to be largely demanded.

Capt. A. F. Holmes, representing E. W. Gillett Co., Limited, was in the city on Monday paying his regular business visit to the grocers.

The wife of H. J. Mountjoy who conducts a grocery store at 209 Stewart St., died suddenly on Saturday night. She had been in usual good health during the day but between 5 and 6 o'clock took a hemorrhage, passing away shortly afterwards. The family has been in Peterboro about a year. The remains were taken to Hampton for interment.

Olive C. Bissell, son of W. H. Bissell of Brockville, was united in marriage to Miss Irene Mallory, of Brockville, on June 3rd. Mr. Bissell is at present living in Peterboro, where he has his headquarters as the representative for the Ogilvie Flour Mills Co.

LINDSAY.

June 14.—Potatoes have been a strong feature lately on the local market. Prices eased this week and the farmers are now bringing their potatoes into town by the waggon loads to sell. Previously the farmers were too busy seeding, etc., to bring the "murphies" in, but they are not so busy just at present and the potatoes are plentiful. The result is that the price has dropped 15c and 20c per bag.

This has been a banner season for pineapples, and one merchant stated that he has sold more pineapples this season than any other season in history. The prices have been reasonable, and the quality of the pineapple the very best.

Thos. Brady has a window-full of various kinds of pickles, sauces, etc., which is attracting the eye.

Butter has taken a big drop during the last few days and is very plentiful.

Your correspondent asked J. E. Adams, of Adams' Bros., what he thought of the idea of weighing eggs and selling them by the pound. He did not commit himself, as he was aware of the fact that sometimes the merchants and also the customers had to pay the same price for small eggs as they did for the larger ones but at the same time did not know whether it would be feasible to inaugurate the method of selling eggs by the pound.

Hay by the bale is very scarce.

LONDON.

June 14.—Trade is fair in both wholesale and retail lines and there is not much change in prices. There is a little more demand for refined sugar, which will further increase with the advent of the strawberry season. There is a good wholesale demand for seeded raisins and prunes, both of which show an advancing tendency.

The matter of the new school readers was taken up at last week's meeting of the Retail Grocers' Association, and a motion was unanimously carried instructing the secretary to write the Minister of Education and the member for London, Hon. Adam Beck, protesting against T. Eaton & Co., being allowed to use the school books as an advertising medium, and declaring the association's opinion that the readers should not be used for advertising purposes. Certain wholesale houses being accused of selling to consumers, it was decided to advise them to keep out of the retail business. It was also decided to advance the price of lard 1 cent, which was fortunate, seeing that next day the wholesale price went up ¾c.

Robt. Tait, who for many years has been "on the road" for the McCormick Manufacturing Co., has been appointed manager of that company's Ottawa branch establishment. In view of his leaving this city, a number of his friends assembled in the rooms of the Western Ontario Commercial Travelers' Association, Masonic Temple, on Saturday and presented him with a handsome traveling bag. Wm. Turnbull presented and read an address, the presentation being made by Secretary Alf. Robinson. The address was signed by the following names: J. T. Green, F. E. Harley, R. E. Davis. W. Smithson, C. W. Nichols, A. J. Bean, Wm. Lind, E W. Hannah, A. E. Ferte, Wm. Pegler, Wm. Turnbull, H. J. Collamore, Wm. H. Harding, M. F. Irwin. W. L. Underwood, Wm. Gray, W. R. Grant, R. A. Brown, S. P. Allen, G. M. Adams, W. J. Taylor, Chas. H. Firth, J. T. Johnson, E W. B. Eardley, A. E. Barbour, P. M. Millman, Alf Robinson.

Fruit growers are looking for an immense crops of strawberries this year and the first instalment will be in the grocery stores this week. Dealers say the berries now coming in from the United States are up to the average for this season of the year, but housekeepers seem to prefer the home-grown article. The vines are loaded and the fruit will be ready for picking any time this week. Give us not too much dry weather, with a sun not too hot, and there will be an overproduction of strawberries, said one dealer. It might be that berries would in some cases be found not worth picking, because of an oversupplied market.

Ed. and Wm. Masuret were tendered a complimentary banquet at the Grigg House on Wednesday night of last week. Col. A. M. Smith presided and on behalf of the Wholesale Grocers' Association of the city presented Ed. Masuret with a handsome traveling bag, and William Masuret with a gold-headed umbrella. The Colonel expressed his regret that they were retiring from business in London, and he hoped that wherever they located that they would be successful.

Flour went up another ten cents per cwt. wholesale, this week.

The game of baseball on Wednesday of last week between the grocers and policemen resulted in a tie. The peace preservers strengthened themselves for the occasion by ringing two old-time experts on the diamond—Harry Fowler of the Advertiser, and City Treasurer Bell. But for that the game would have been easy for the grocers.

TORONTO.

June 15.—Wrigley Bros., grocers, corner Bloor and Markham Sts., have sold their building and transferred their grocery stock to the store at the corner of Simcoe and Richmond Sts.

Vasey and Wilcox, grocers, have removed from the store they recently occupied on Bloor St. to 1102 Bloor St. West.

C. L. Dean, 496 Bloor St. has bought out Mr. Graham and with his methods is bound to have a share of the trade in that locality. A number of new stores are going up which, when all are occupied will make that a busy part of the city.

J. L. Casey who moved from Yonge St. to 638 College St. is pleased with his change. Business is coming his way and he knows how to take care of it.

Alex. Davis 462 Bloor St., thinks a great deal of good could be done just now if the Retail Merchants Association would send circular letters to every house in the city urging them to be more prompt in their payments to the retail stores, to enable them to meet their shorter terms of credit with the wholesalers.

B. A. Belyea, a veteran grocer of 38 years' experience, accompanied in business by his accomplished daughter, has come from Southampton and is now in possession of the store lately occupied by McLeod & Son, 698 Spadina Ave. Although ripe in experience, and not young in years, his alertness and active movements show that he is in the prime of his life and quite in his best to swing business his way. His great activity, cheerful disposition and his "Know how" will no doubt make him one of the leading grocers in that part of the city.

D. H. Dobbin has bought out G. H. Cooper, corner of Huron and Sussex Sts. Mr. Dobbin is a thorough grocer, having received his early training in the retail store with his father and afterwards spending eight years with the boys on the road representing Balfour, Smye & Co., of Hamilton, wholesale grocers. This gives him an excellent qualification to do a first class grocery trade, which will soon be appreciated in that part of the city.

There are still a few grocers who are so far behind the times that they actually, without seeing how others see them, with some degree of pride say that they have no time to read the "Canadian Grocer."

W. L. Brown, Sorauren Ave., is one of those who think the retailers should start a wholesale fruit business of their own.

J. Coad, 100 Sorauren Ave., is a new comer to the city and he may well congratulate himself in securing a store in that growing part of the city. His store is up-to-date in every respect, and with the push and skill which he is able to command, his business will soon measure up with any of his competitors.

A. Newland, is one of the lucky grocers who secured one of the new stores on Roncesvalles Ave. He comes from Church St. with three years experience and with his natural ability and pluck is bound to push to the front. He has every good quality required to make him a winner. He will keep choice groceries, fruits and confectionery with an ice cream soda fountain as an extra drawing card.

W. J. Snell, 2165 Queen St. East, known as "Snell's Grocery" is a marvel of excellence and beauty. Before you enter the store you are attracted by the taste displayed in arranging the window. Inside from the manager down to the smallest article everything seems to wear a smile, and dresses in its very best. With an ambition for higher attainments he has contracted for a new and elaborate electric sign, which will attract the thousands of people on their way to the park.

J. Skelton, 2012 Queen St. East, one of the east end grocers, thinks if he did not get the "Canadian Grocer" the "cob web would be over his door." With the help he gets from it, he can easily hold his own with any and all of his competitors and do his share of the business.

P. M. D. Whitelock, 1961 Queen St. East, claims to be the pioneer grocer of the east end. He is doing well and prides himself in allowing his name to go on the black list intentionally as a matter of principle. He is opposed to the blacklisting plan, he says.

Pizer & Smith, Queen St. East, have no time to read the "Canadian Grocer" as they are too busy looking after their own business. Up-to-date grocers know that this is not wisely looking after one's own interests for it is neglecting the most important needs in business.

B. G. Bell, 691 Broadview Ave., comes from Trenton, and secured his corner at a bargain. He has since been offered $500.00 advance, but he wants to make it his home. He spent his boyhood days behind the counter and the last 20 years on the road. He has had plenty of travel and now feels contented to stay at home, and do his best to give good service to his customers.

Furniss Bros. are opening a new store with entirely new goods at 747 Broadview Ave. These young men have had experience with several of the leading grocers in the city and therefore enter upon their new under taking with good prospects. They intend to handle groceries, provisions and flowers.

BRACEBRIDGE.

June 16.—Saturday the stores all looked tempting with large displays of fruits such as strawberries, pineapples, bananas, oranges, etc. Every indication points to a bumper crop in strawberries this season in this section.

Farmers throughout Muskoka are badly in need of rain and unless it comes soon the hay crop, which the farmers in this district greatly depend on, will be a failure.

The staff of Hutchison Bros., grocers, were entertained on Friday evening last on the lawn of D. T. Hodgson. One of the pleasing features of the evening was the solo rendered by George Hole, the accountant for that firm.

Prices on Saturday for farm produce were: butter 17c per lb.; eggs, firm at 20c per doz.; potatoes showing a reduction in price, selling at $1.00 per bag.

GUELPH.

June 16.—The annual excursion to the Ontario Agricultural College, which arrive daily during the month of June, are now in full swing; but as to whether the influx of visitors, which these excursions pour into the city, materially assist the trade or not is a matter for opinion. Of course the resturants do a flourishing business as also do the small ware stores. On Saturday, the ordinary buiness was augmented by the three excursions from Toronto and surrounding destricts and naturally a big day's business was the result. In fact some of our merchants go so far as to say that Saturday's turnover was the largest this year. The day was fine and some very pretty fruit displays were noticed. Geo. Williams, with California cherries, did a good business. He also had an effective window of preserved fruits and jams.

A. Groom and W. H. Fielding are each showing a good selling line of toilet soap. A. Groom has also a very nice array of lime juice, which he reports as selling well.

J. A. McCrea has an attractive window display of china.

CHATHAM.

June 16.—The urgent need of the recently inaugurated debt collection scheme is emphasized by the fact that accounts against over 400 different debtors have already been placed in the hands of the collector. Against many of these there is more than one account, the highest record against any single debtor being 11 accounts. This was the report presented at the R.M.A. meeting last Tuesday evening, after the collection scheme had been only a few weeks in existence. Though listing the accounts, mapping the city into routes and other incidentals have taken much time, the collector is already making regular calls, and has dates with 54 debtors, while about $30 has already been collected, in addition to amounts paid direct to merchants which will total far more. Some difficulty has been experienced in convincing debtors that the association is really in earnest, but this is only a temporary trouble. A difficulty in connection with disputed accounts was referred to the association, many debtors having claimed that the amounts were incorrect. It was recommended that in such cases the collector instruct the debtor to show his bona fides by calling on the merchant with a view to adjustment within a week. At the end of that time, if the debtor doesn't put in an appearance, the matter will be once more in the collector's hands. The feeling is that most of these "disputes" are merely devices to gain time. A means of effectively handling country collections was another difficulty. In many instances 75 per cent. of a merchant's bad debts will be outside city limits. It was ultimately decided to experiment with a mail system of dunning, though the point was effectively raised by Peter Cunningham that monthly dunners were useless, and that to show the debtor that business was meant, would require a series of probably seven letters, steadily increasing in sharpness, at intervals of about a week. President Westman was inclined to favor personal calls, and thought that by mapping out definite routes in the country the time and trouble involved could be reduced to a minimum, while the expense of horse hire, otherwise an insurmountable item, could be eliminated by individual merchants lending the collector the use of their horses and rigs time about. It was felt that the additional expense inevitable in any case would justify the charging of a small percentage on country collections. If the mail system doesn't work, further methods will have to be devised. A committee comprising Peter Cunningham, Paul Blonde, A. D. Westman, Harry Andrew and Wm. Anderson was appointed to take charge of the entire matter.

The past week has not been as busy as many grocers expected, owing to the failure of home grown strawberries to arrive. While late, the crop looks good. Though the handling of the berries is largely a matter of "turnover," the profit comes in the sale of sugars and jars. Incidentally, most of the imported berries have come in in boxes fitted with "false bottoms," and market vendors are protesting, claiming that owing to this fact the imported berries are not full measure, while the law requires them themselves to sell nothing but full boxes.

Ship Orders Groceries From Halifax Retailer by Wireless Telegraphy—Ontario and Manitoba Flours at Same Price in New Brunswick.

HALIFAX.

June 15.—Business conditions are reported in a satisfactory state throughout the Province, and the prospects are excellent for their continuance. Enormous quantities of mackerel have struck in along the coast, and the fishermen in some districts are reaping a harvest. With fish plentiful lots of money is put in circulation and good times follow, as the fishermen spend their earnings liberally. So far this week nearly 200,000 fresh mackerel have been landed at Halifax and thousands of barrels have been iced and shipped fresh to the United States market. Besides large quantities are being put in cold storage for the fall trade. On the Cape Breton coast the fishing is also good. Besides large quantities of mackerel, the boats are bringing in good catches of haddock. The Lunenburg bank fleet have nearly all returned and the spring catch totals over twenty thousand quintals. Codfish are in better demand and the price has advanced. Last year codfish sold for $3.50 per quintal, while this year they are bringing $5.00, and may still go higher.

The Norwegian fishery this year is also reported to be good, the catch being much larger than last year.

The first big lobster shipment of the season to London and Havre, will go forward this week on the Furness line steamer Shenandoah, which will take from 15,000 to 20,000 cases.

Probably the first order for groceries ever received in Halifax by wireless telegraphy came to Hentzell's Limited, last week, when they received an order by the Marconi system for ships stores from a steamer inward bound, which at the time was several hours from Halifax, The goods were quickly hustled to the pier, and the steamer sailed again on the following morning with the supplies on board.

MONTREAL.

June 15.—The first annual meeting of the Dominion Orchards Company took place June 9, on the farm of the company, at Rougemont, Que. An encouraging report was presented to some twenty-eight of the shareholders who were present from Montreal. It was shown that the acreage in strawberries and raspberries had been materially increased. Fifty acres were now planted in these berries. Besides, seven acres were planted in tomatoes, four in celery and seven in wax beans. The strawberry patch was reported as being large enough to yield a carload a day during the height of the season, the first two weeks in July. It was decided to increase the size of the hothouse, which at present covers about an acre. Officers were re-elected by acclamation as follows: President, J. M. Fortier; vice-president, J. F. McLean; secretary, R. S. Bell; directors, Wm. Bell, J. P. Choquette, S. M. Luke.

Jas. B. Campbell, sales manager American Can Company, Montreal, was in Ottawa last week.

Fred Hodge, with Chase & Sanborn, Montreal, was in Ottawa and Collingwood the latter part of last week.

Wm. Galbraith, Montreal, was in Ottawa last week.

C. W. Gregory, sales manager W. D. McLaren, Limited, Montreal, makers of Cook's Friend Baking Powder, was in Three Rivers and other Quebec points this week.

S. T. Nishimura & Co., Montreal, recently renovated their offices, at 55 St. Francois Xavier Street, and are now in possession of handsomely fitted, modern quarters.

Robert Meighen, president of the Lake of the Woods Milling Company, Montreal, who has just returned from Europe, expresses the view that the business men of the Old Country are too prone to neglect business for the sake of sport, and he notices a tendency in the same direction among the youth, and even the older men, of Canada. Mr. Meighen thinks that while the old proverb: "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," may be true, there is, nevertheless, such a thing as overdoing the playing.

Lt.-Col. W. H. Schneider has gone to camp with his regiment, the 6th Duke of Connaught's Royal Canadian Hussars.

ST. JOHN.

June 15.—For the first time in the history of the grocery business in New Brunswick, Ontario and Manitoba flours have been selling at the same price. An advance of fifteen cents in Ontarios on Monday put the price exactly the same as Manitobas, $7.15 a barrel, wholesale, or $7.40 to $7.50 retail. Most of the local jobbers had pretty good supplies on hand before the advance started some time ago and they are consequently reaping a reward for their foresight. The price of biscuits, of all kinds, was advanced by the local manufacturers on Saturday, the 12th instant, the reason assigned being the increase in the price of flour and mixing ingredients.

In view of the proposed tariff changes in the United States, among which is said to be under consideration a proposal to increase the duty on potatoes, the announcement made a few days ago that the steamship service between this port and Havana, Cuba, will be resumed about September first, is of considerable interest. William Thomson & Co., shipping agents have announced that the steamer Mantinea, which is much larger than the steamer formerly on this route, will be put on the service and it is expected that trade between this province and Cuba will be given quite an impetus. Dr. E. S. Kirkpatrick, Canadian trade commissioner to Cuba, in writing to merchants here states that there is a good opening there for trade in potatoes, hay, oats, etc.

Short Weight Butter Discovered at the Coast — Potatoes go Higher Than Ever—Fifty-Pound Butter Packages in Export Form to be Exhibited in Winnipeg.

VANCOUVER.

June 15.—Short weight in one pound butter bricks has been discovered by the executive of the Vancouver Retail Grocers' Association, and James Roy the secretary, has sent out letters to the members of the Association, acquainting them of the fact and putting them on their guard. Over 60 different lots of butter, put up by creameries and grocers who brick their own butter, have been carefully weighed in about 20 different stores. They were weighed in three and four pound lots, and only two lots came up to the requirements. The worst cases were one of three pounds, which weighed two pounds, twelve ounces, and another of four pounds, which weighed three pounds eleven ounces. It is the intention of the Association to use every means to stamp out this injustice to the grocer and the consumer, and co-operation is asked. "I knew before we were up against it," a grocer remarked, "because it was impossible for any man to sell in three pound lots at the prices quoted unless he were losing money. Customers have stated that they could get butter at other places at a better price, and though I have hinted at short weight, they thought I was objecting only because I could not do as well. Now, I have this letter to show them."

Potatoes are up, away up. Asherofts are now quoted at $60 per ton, and locals at from $50 to $55. That is higher than any one thought they would reach, and even at that high figure, they are almost unobtainable. One grocer said that he went to the commission men and managed to get two sacks, when he had orders for many more. And these retailed at $3.50. This is something unheard of in the local market. What's more, it will be a month before good new potatoes are in at a price to even equal the high price of the old ones. A month or more ago when it was stated that new potatoes were behind their time, The Grocer was doubted, but the price now is almost double what it was then. New potatoes were as low as six pounds for 25c, and now they are retailed at three for 25c. Warm weather has now set in, and growth will be hurried along.

McLeod & Clarkson is the name of a new commission firm who have taken over the confectionary end of the business of the Standard Brokerage Co., which has several angencies. It is the intension of McLeod & Clarkson to make specialties of olives, jams and old country mustards and catsup, representing Farrow, of Peterboro, England.

A recent visitor was E. D. Morton, of E. and D. Morton, pickle and jam manufacturers, of London, England. On his way east, he was accompanied by the representative here G. A. Stone, who is now in western Alberta.

Wes. Moffatt, until recently a clerk in the grocery department of W. R. Megaw's store, Vernon, has left for Calgary, where he will remain a short time before proceeding East.

There is a very large call for British Columbia strawberries from the prairie provinces, but there is not enough fruit to supply the demand. Orders have been received in Revelstoke for 1,000 boxes from Calgary and Edmonton, while the Victoria Fruit Exchange has contracted for three carloads. Prices to-day are high, the lowest retail figure being 25c per box or two for 45c. Last year the local growers averaged about ten cents per pound, and this year much higher will be netted, though the final returns may not be more, since the amount is not so large.

J. B. MacEwan, cheese and butter exporter of Wellington, New Zealand is on the coast, with a view to increasing the trade between Canada and New Zealand. As pointed out in these columns before, what is first necessary is cold storage accommodation in the boats, but this cannot be secured without a subsidy to the operators of the steamship line Mr. MacEwan states that New Zealand could supply Canada with mutton, butter and cheese, as well as beef products, but development of the trade is prohibited, since proper shipment facilities are not obtainable. Mr. MacEwan is a Canadian, hailing from Stratford, Ontario, and will revisit his old home. He settled in New Zealand fifteen years ago.

WINNIPEG.

June 15.—An interesting exhibit in the butter department at the Winnipeg industrial exhibition, to be held from July 10 to 17, will be that of two packages of creamery butter of not less than fifty pounds each, to be put up in export form. This butter is to be shipped to Winnipeg from outside points to arrive not later than June 18, when it will be placed in cold storage until July 11, then moved to the grounds and judged. Special consideration will be taken as to the condition of the package, and a first prize of thirty dollars is offered. It is obvious that this prize is given in order that the standard quality of export butter might be raised. Considering the fact that much damaged butter has been delivered on foreign markets, and also, that many creameries have been built all over western Canada during the past two years, it is timely that such a contest as this should be inaugurated. It is hoped that many butter exporters will take advantage of this exhibit, and that the worthy purpose of the donor of the prize will be realized.

A business deal of importance was consummated at Rapid City, Manitoba, on June 9, when the grist mill formerly owned by George McCulloch & Sons, of Souris, was taken over by a company from Brandon. The purchase price was in the neighborhood of $25,000, and in future the firm will be known as W. J. Lindsay & Co. The new proprietors contemplate making considerable improvements. In addition to the flour milling they propose to establish an oatmeal mill and general elevator business, and may build a spur from the railroad to facilitate shipping.

Winnipeg, June 17.—The local trade was never in a more flourishing condition. Wholesalers have been pressed with orders for several weeks and they are preparing for a heavy seige during the exhibition when it is expected that many merchants will come in from various points in the west. The beautiful weather has been a splendid asset to the retail trade, and the counter custom has greatly increased. Green fruits and vegetables have been selling heavily during the past week, and the market prices are slightly changed. We quote an advance in some pork and beans which is the second advance within ten days.

QUEBEC MARKETS

Montreal, June 17, 1909.

Beans continue to be the feature of the market, further advances having been recorded since last week. Prices have now reached the level which puts beans among the luxuries of life. Peas are steady this week. Tapioca is slightly firmer, but no advance has occurred locally. Black and white peppers are reported as being higher abroad, but no changes have been made by local houses. Prices submitted to agents by California packers would indicate that the trade will be supplied with apricots this year at higher figures, while peaches will be lower. Butter has advanced. Canned goods are being cleared up gradually, tomatoes, strawberries and raspberries being practically the only lines now held in quantity. Some nominal figures have been quoted by salmon packers, but prices are not yet out. Sugar is steady the local market not having followed recent New York fluctuations. Molasses is quiet.

Trade on the whole is not as brisk as it should be at this time of year. With navigation open everywhere, good roads, and indications of a fine crop, business should be much more satisfactory than it is. It is difficult to account for the present state of affairs, unless through the fact that prices are high on almost all lines.

SUGAR. — Changes in the United States markets have not been followed by the Canadian refiners, prices having been quite steady. Business being transacted, while not up to expectations, is satisfactory. A considerable quantity of Scotch and beet sugars is being disposed of among the trade at present.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES—Jobbers report fair business in syrups. Recent advances, some say, have resulted in a falling off in business. Other houses do not find sales lower, but larger, on the contrary. Old orders for molasses are being filled from recently arrived cargoes, but thee is not a great deal of new business passing. Price slaughtering which was so common a few weeks ago, resulted in everybody becoming well supplied, making present transactions small.

DRIED FRUITS.—Some house have sent quotations, to local agents, on California apricots and peaches. Apricots, according to these figures, will be higher this year, while peaches will be very low. It is likely that quotations will be made to the trade next week. Other lines are quiet, dealers being anxious for the opening up of the active season, in August.

TEA.—The first arrivals of new Japans, small though they were, were quickly taken up. Jobbers, in some instances, did not feel interested, owing to the prices asked being too high, but, on the whole, no trouble was encountered in placing the quantities which came in. A fair volume of business is being transacted in all teas.

The Increase of Home Consumption of Cheese

Insufficient Curing Claimed To Be The Cause Of The Slow Demand From Canadian Consumers—Difficulties To Overcome To Remedy Conditions.

By J. W. Wheaton.

Canadians are not cheese-eaters. Cheese with them is more of a luxury than a staple article of food. The average consumer in the city buys cheese in small quantities, a pound being considered a pretty large portion to secure from the grocery at one time. If the family is not large and its members are not fond of cheese, this pound of cheese will often become dry and unpalatable before it is eaten. This lessens the desire to buy more cheese, and in other ways the consumption of cheese is not encouraged.

In Great Britain, where the great bulk of Canadian cheese is consumed, it is used as a staple article of food by many people, chiefly the working classes, though the lower prices for meat, consequent upon the large importations of dressed meats from the United States and other countries, has induced more consumption of this food by the lower classes, which is taking the place of cheese to some extent. There is still, however, a good demand for cheese, as is shown by the high prices that have ruled for the past year or two. Though meat prices have been lowered, it is doubtful if they are sufficiently low to place meat on a par with cheese, if the food value of the two products are compared.

A quart of good milk is claimed to be equal in food value to a pound of meat, and one pound of well-ripened cheese contains as much nourishment for the human body as two and one-half pounds of the best beef steak. On this basis, milk at 12c a quart and cheese at 20 cents a pound are among the cheapest of foods. And yet the average consumer in Canada will cheerfully pay 18 and 20 cents for a pound of steak and grumble if he has to pay 15 or 16 cents for a pound of cheese. If the food value of the two products were considered in the buying, a pound of cheese should be worth 50 cents, when good beef steak sells at 20 cents a pound.

Home Consumption Slow.

With these facts as to the food value of cheese before us why is it that its consumption is not increasing more than it does in Canada? There has been some increase during the past few years, due to increase in population and the immigration of so many people from the old land, who have been accustomed to use cheese in large quantities. But the amount consumed by the average Canadian has not increased very much.

It is estimated that we consume in Canada in the shape of milk, butter, cheese and condensed milk over two-thirds of our total dairy production. The amount of cheese consumed is hard to ascertain, but we may conclude that it is only a small proportion of this estimated total. It should and can be greatly increased. Moreover, it is important that it should be increased. Had Canada's exports of cheese during the past couple of years kept up to the same level of a few years back, it is safe to say that the market would have been overdone and more or less demoralized.

The consumption of cheese in Great Britain is not increasing and excepting, perhaps, the past year, Canada has been sending over as much cheese as can be well taken care of. Any large increase in the make, therefore, means more cheese than the export market can handle to advantage.

Dairymen are looking to the home market for an outlet and if the consumption of cheese were what it ought to be, they should not look in vain. By increasing home consumption of cheese an industry is being fostered that is bringing in millions of dollars every year in to this country.

Improper Curing One Cause.

Aside from the average Canadian being naturally not a cheese-eater, there are other reasons why home consumption has not largely increased. One of them is the class of cheese that is placed on the home market. One general fault that it has is that it is not efficiently cured. The average age of the cheese found on the consumer's table, is from one to two months. It is often newer than this during the summer months, when only a few weeks elapse between the time when it is made and when it is sold out in small quantities over the grocery counter.

Such stuff does not deserve the name of cheese. It is tough, curdy and hard to digest. No matter how well made it may be, it is not a wholesome food at this stage. A well-made cheese, properly cured and cared for in the interval, is not at its best till it is at least a year old. It then has that fine mellow texture and is in a condition to be eaten by even a chronic dyspeptic without doing him any harm. Its nourishing qualities are at the best and cheese at this age becomes an article of food that the more one consumes the more one wants to consume.

Many people have a wrong impression about old cheese. They have bought cheese that was old and were almost overcome by the sharp taste and strong flavor it had. The trouble has been that much of the cheese sold on the home market, has been the "culls" of the factories, or cheese that had some defect and were not suitable for the export trade. This cheese, if too moist or made from bad-flavored milk will often develop a rank, strong flavor when old. In the past there has been much of this class of cheese on the home market and many consumers have the impression that all old cheese has the same characteristics. A well-made, well-cured cheese properly cared for will not have a strong rank flavor or taste. It gets better the older it becomes, up to two or three years. In fact, many cheese con-

WHEN YOU HAVE MADE A BAD INVESTMENT.

One of the hardest things a business man is called upon to do is to accept a great loss when he has made a mistake without trying to get his money back by the same means that he lost it. He says to himself, "Well, I am going to keep that thing up long enough to get my money back, and then I'll quit." But as a rule it is a mistake to continue in a thing which your judgment condemns.

When you are convinced that you have made a mistake, that you have entered into some business relationship or have gone into something which you should have kept out of, cut it off as quickly as possible.

Many a man has made the fatal mistake of continuing in a bad venture trying to get his money back. Most business men find that when they make a mistake, no matter how great the loss or how unfortunate, the best thing to do is to apply the heroic treatment, amputate the diseased limb, not try to palliate the symptoms with medicine.

A New York business man told me that he made an investment outside of his own business a few years ago, and that it did not turn out well, but that he was so determined not to lose any money, and to make it win, although it was a business which he knew practically nothing of, that he kept putting in more and more until he found that he had over two million dollars in the venture. He had made this money in his own business, which he knew all about, and after he found he had made a mistake in the new venture, when people laughed at him for his failure, his pride was touched, and he determined to show them that he could win out even in a business which was foreign to his training.

He said that his experience had taught him two lessons: to keep out of things which he knew nothing about; and when he found he had made a mistake, no matter how great the loss, to take his medicine and quit immediately.—Success Magazine.

noisseurs consider a cheddar cheese not at its best until two years old. It then has a fine rich taste and mellow texture that makes it one of the most palatable and nourishing foods on the market.

Improvement Noticeable.

The quality of the cheese offered on the home market has, however, very much improved of late years due to improved methods of making and the fewer inferior cheese that are being produced in the factories. One rarely finds in the grocery to-day the bad-flavored and badly made cheese of a few years back. The general quality is much better. One thing it lacks and that is sufficient curing. If it were kept in the factories a few months longer or better still, if it were cured under proper conditions in the factory for a month and then boxed and placed in some cool storage for six months or a year before using, the average cheese retailed over the counter to-day would be much more wholesome and palatable. But the trouble is, who is to bear the expense of holding the cheese for several months until it is ready for market? The average factory is not in a position to do so excepting it be the last month's make of the season, which can be kept for considerable time providing conditions are favorable, which they are not in many factories. During the making season, most factories are obliged to ship cheese when a month or two old to make room for the new product, which is continually being made.

The solution of the difficulty seems to be with the wholesale produce dealer. But will it pay him to buy cheese and hold it for six months or a year before distributing it to his customers? On April 30, cheese was quoted on the country cheese boards at 11¼c to 11 5-16c per lb., on the same date dealers in Toronto were quoting new cheese to the trade at 13c and 13¼c per lb. Is this margin of 1¾c to 2c, between the buying and selling price, sufficient to enable the wholesale distributor to hold cheese in storage for several months till it is properly ripened? Measured by the margin which the middleman in Great Britain gets, it is. Of course, he handles much larger quantities, and, therefore, can do it on a smaller margin of profit.

Then there is the question of the ups and downs of the market. Cheese bought to-day may cost a cent or two more than it will a few months hence, and then again it may cost less. There is a chance about it that may work both ways.

There is this to be said, however, that if some system of holding cheese until it is properly cured were devised the consumption of cheese on the home market would be largely increased and the dealer would, in the long run, be able to handle much larger quantities. It is true that many people, prefer new cheese, due largely to their experience with the so-called old cheese that has been on the market, not being satisfactory. But this prejudice would soon be overcome if the right kind of old cheese were put on the market, and a permanent and increasing demand for this class of food would gradually be developed. The time seems opportune for some enterprising dealer to take up this proposition. By being first in the field he would eventually command the trade.

Relative Values of Cheese.

It has been the custom in the past to buy fall made cheese for holding for the winter's trade. While cheese made during September and October is always of good keeping quality, it usually sells at a higher price than any other month's make of the season. June cheese is invariably of good quality, and if properly cared for can be held for considerable time. The cows are on full grass, there is the largest flow of milk of the season, and the price, considering the quality is usually lower than for any other month's make. When the hot weather of July and August comes, clean flavors are hard to get. April and May cheese made largely from fodder-fed cows has not the good keeping qualities of the other months. But well-made June cheese, properly cured, can be stored to good advantage and would be in its prime about Christmas time.

We know more about curing cheese and holding it for future use than we did a few years ago. With proper storage facilities there is not much risk in the undertaking. Cured under modern cool-curing condition, the percentage of shrinkage is reduced to a minimum, and the quality of the product improves with age. If more cheese of this character were put upon the market, there would be less consumption of fancy imported cheese, and an important home industry would be strengthened.

SALES BY MEASUREMENT.

United States Paper Considers This An Ancient System.

In view of the article which appeared in the special number of The Grocer, on the substitution of the weigh scales for measures, the following from the Toledo Blade will be read with interest:

"It is remarkable that commerce, ordinarily so sensible and so ready to welcome savings of time and energy and money, should stick so closely throughout the centuries to the ancient systems of measurement. To sell articles by the bushel when solemn court rulings are necessary to define what a bushel is, by the barrel when trade associations have heated discussions before they can agree on the proper size of a barrel, by the basket when a city inspector must watch the baskets in the market place with suspicion—all this seems not merely ridiculous, but wasteful and unbusinesslike.

"The sellers of this State—and doubtless of all the States are agreed that the commodities of the food markets, with the possible exception of berries, should be sold by weight. This is the only reasonable method of sale, saving that constant fluctuation between the purchases of yesterday and those of to-day, between the bushel of Jones and the bushel of Smith. The inconvenience of an alteration in method could be only temporary. The benefits apparent ought to make market people and commission men, farmers and consumers, eager to accept the momentary confusion and have it over with."

Wm. Nimmo, general merchant, Ravenswood, Ont., is advertising his business for sale.

Produce and Provision Situation of the World

Hog Prices Again Higher and Products Advance — Butter Plentiful and Prices are Easier—New Cheese Coming on the Market.

The slight decline in the price of hogs didn't last long and the figures have again returned to their former height. Hogs are firm at $11.00 for dressed and $7.75 live weight f.o.b. at country points. The farmers hold the situation and the moment packers drop the price, they hang on to their pigs. The local demand, as well as for export is active with a very firm feeling. Liverpool quotes lard 3d. and bacon 6d. higher. By all appearances the lovers of the favorite breakfast bacon, and for ham and eggs will have to pay long prices for some time. There is nothing cheaper in sight.

Butter is plentiful and one thing at least that can be bought at a reasonable price. Large quantities are going into cold storage. This has the effect of regulating the market, and from causing a slump.

Eggs are keeping firm, with no sign of a decline in sight.

The new make of cheese is coming on the market, but it trickles in very slowly and is not sufficient in quantity to affect the firmness in prices.

MONTREAL.

PROVISIONS.—A very strong feeling in the provision market is evidenced by the advances which are recorded this week. Hogs continue scarce, and the receipts being so light makes it difficult for packers to fill orders for all the products of hogs, hence the advanced quotations.

A LOSING GAME.

Investigating Wall Street, Gov. Hughes' committee found plenty of difference of opinion about remedies, and even about facts, but some of the testimoney to which they listened has a decided general interest for the country. A Stock Exchange member of 40 years' standing stated that every one who enters Wall Street, except as a broker, loses. In a partnership contract to preclude a junior's speculating, this man made a bona fide offer of $5,000 for the name and address of every verified wining customer of any Wall Street house —provided only that the customer had so traded for two years as to make his account an "active" one. Another, for 12 years a member of a prominent brokerage house, stated that in all this time, after very broad operations, not a single customer ever took out a dollar of net winnings. An ex-broker stated that a 10-year search covering scores of trading friends and acquaintances, as well as the records of five brokerage houses and one bucket shop, failed to find a single net winner. Most brokers estimate that betweent 90 and 98 per cent. of customers lose. As practicallv every marginal trader loses, every bucket-shop and Wall Street house has a complete new list of customers in from three to five years.—Collier's Weekly.

APPRECIATION OF THE SPECIAL GROCER.

The annual spring number of The Canadian Grocer has just been published and has been received by the many Peterboro customers of this popular trade journal. From the cover through to the last pages this number is entertaining to the average reader and particularly profitable to the grocers for whom it is intended. The cover design has been chosen with taste and is very effective. The articles in the spring number are nearly all of a special nature, and in most cases are stories of how grocers have made successes of their business, or of some particular lines of it. There are two stories of Peterboro men, Messrs. R. C. Braund, White and Gillespie. Peterboro grocers have expressed themselves as much pleased with the special number.—Peterboro Examiner.

Western Travelers Seek Lower Railway Rates

Several Reforms to be Requested by the British Columbia Knights of the Grip—Baggage Rates, Hotel Accomodation, Including Fire Escapes, Discussed and Resolutions Passed.

Vancouver, B. C., June 11.—This was commercial travelers' week, the first time that the wholesale houses have given their men seven days off at the same time. It was inaugurated on Monday with a luncheon tendered by the wholesale men and returned with a smoker by the travelers, at which many matters of mutual interest were discussed. On Thursday, nearly all the travelers and many others took the steamer Makura to Seattle to attend the Fair, returning on Sunday.

H. A. Stone, of Gault Bros., Limited, President of the Board of Trade, occupied the chair at the luncheon, when about 150 were present. Speaking as an employer, he stated that the Commercial Travelers' Association had done much good for the wholesale men. The cause of the traveling men in nearly every case became the cause of the wholesalers, and when unity was effected, strength came also.

R. E. Jamieson, of the Canadian Rubber Company, introduced the first resolution, calling for the appointment of a committee to secure lower transportation charges for British Columbia travelers. He pointed out that Toronto travelers coming westward could go through to Victoria at two cents per mile, ordinary tariff, while the British Columbia man had to pay three cents. On a trip of 6,000 miles, the Ontario traveler had a $60 advantage over the Coast drummer, the Manitoba man $45, and the Alberta and Saskatchewan traveler, $30. Taking into consideration the fact that there were 1,000 travelers doing business in British Columbia towns, this meant a large financial difference. Moreover, in six months of the year, the Eastern man had a special advantage in the tourist rates and could travel at 1¼ to 1½ cents per mile. Besides, he had full stop-over privileges, an added advantage over the Coast traveler, who is without this benefit. A. R. Macfarlane seconded the resolution.

The question of excess baggage rates was brought up by E. B. McMaster, of McMaster & Sons, wholesale clothiers. This also threw the eastern and western men into comparison, much to the advantage of the former. Mr. McMaster stated that the excess rate on baggage was 12½ per cent. on a first-class fare, that is to say the Eastern man pays 12½ per cent. on a two cent rate, while their western confreres are assessed the same percentage on a four cent rate. His resolution was to the effect that the wholesale men be asked to lay the question before the Railway Commission, in conjunction with the Vancouver Board of Trade. F. J. Lumsden, was seconder.

Hotel Accommodation.

E. F. Gerster proposed that the Association name a committee to draw up a progressive policy regarding hotel rates and accommodation. The objection in this case was that in some of the outlying towns third-class accommodation was given, but the rates were for first-class or even higher. This committee could receive the complaints from the men affected and then deal with the hotels. He hoped the wholesalers, who were also affected, would assist.

In seconding the resolution, E. J. Stollard dealt with the fire escape question, showing that while the licence act expressely called for their instalment, in very few cases was it obeyed. Fire escapes were made compulsory in Saskatchewan and Alberta, and he would like to see the same done in British Columbia.

Livery and transfer charges were handled by A. R. Macfarlane, who moved a resolution calling for action by a committee with a view to remedying the evil. J. R. McIntosh was seconder. Mr. Macfarlane gave instances of excessive charges in Greenwood, where a charge of $7.50 was made for a drive of four miles to Phoenix, and $5 for a trip down the hill. In Cariboo, $10 a day was charged for a single rig, and in Ashcroft $1 was charged for taking a trunk across the street and back.

These resolutions went over to the evening session, when they were unanimously adopted after short discussions, and will be handled by the following joint committee: W. J. McMillan, wholesale grocer; R. P. McLennan, wholesale hardware; Henry A. Stone, wholesale dry goods; travelers, William Burke, H. M. Burritt, E. B. McMaster and R. E. Jamieson.

The smoker proved enjoyable, among the items on the programme being: comic songs, T. Jones; recitation, H. McKelvie; song, J. Collins; costume song, E. Dwyer; blindfold boxing, A. R. Kelly and R. Douglas; song, H. M. Burritt; Chinese monologue, H. McKelvie. A bread race, participated in by several of the travelers, was a feature of the evening. At the conclusion of the smoker, supper was served to the hundred odd present.

Flour, Cereals and Confectionery Department

Confectionery Season in Full Swing—Cereals Firm in Price—Advantages Gained in Maintaining Proper Storehouse for Flour.

The confectionery season has now arrived in earnest and as most grocers are now handling it they should make hay while the sun shines. Those who feature it in their business are just now displaying it in their most attractive methods using handsome showcases and selling quality goods.

The cereal market is again on the verge of an advance. With scarcely half a dozen car loads of wheat in Ontario and a scarcity in the west there is little wonder. Oats have reached the phenomenal figure of 62 cents (Toronto), so that rolled oats are firm.

Those grocers who deal in flour and cereals will be interested in advice given by a professor in the Iowa State College on storerooms. He says: "In your warm, damp storerooms and cool, damp storerooms your best floor deteriorates at the rate of 1 to 2 per cent. per month. Your poorer flour deteriorates at the rate of 3 to 4 per cent. per month. Flour stored in such places becomes sourer as time goes on, and the rubbery nature becomes dead, or the dough is rotten in texture. It is not the miller's fault this time, but the fault of your storehouse where too much acid is formed, and increased acid breaks down the quality of your flour by destroying the proteids of it. The effect that storage under such conditions has upon the starches of flour has not yet been satisfactorily determined, but doubtless these important components of flour are equally affected. But what does this actually mean to the baker? It means that where he should get 320 sixteen-ounce loaves to the barrel of flour he gets only about 300 loades. Such a state of returns will materially reduce his net profits out of a quantity of stored flour.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR—Although no advances are quoted in flour this week the market is strong in view of the figures at which wheat is standing. Wheat during the week was an uncertain commodity. Last Friday in Winnipeg it opened at $1.34¾ going up to $1.39 and closing at $1.35. On Monday and Tuesday similar up-and-down conditions prevailed so that millers scarcely knew where they were at. The local demand for flour is keeping up well although sales are made in small lots. There is some demand from the old country but little from the Maritime Provinces. Millers say there is not much money in flour these days. Wheat is scarce in Ontario and one miller believed that there couldn't be scraped up five car loads in the whole province. Prospects for a good yield this year are splendid.

CEREALS—On account of manufacturers being practically unable to obtain wheat in large quantities prices of rolled wheat are likely to advance. One manufacturer advanced prices on Monday 10 cents a barrel and more may be expected. Oats have reached the high price of 62 cents delivered in Toronto so that rolled oats are firm at prices quoted with the prospects for an advance. Demand for both these products is good but for oatmeal it seems to have fallen away somewhat with the warm weather.

HINTS TO BUYERS.

The vast majority of people regard

Information supplied by sellers but for which the editors of The Grocer do not necessarily hold themselves responsible.

An industry which while not new is yet in its infancy in Canada is the manufacture of those waxed papers which are used in the wrapping of candies, gums and confections. Most people hardly give the wrappers a second glance when unravelling them from purchased sweetmeats, but the making of the paper is quite an interesting and intricate process, and commands as much attention as the manufacture of the sweetmeats themselves. There are but three factories making these papers in Canada, and all of them are located in Toronto. Probably the largest is that of I. D. Bradshaw & Co., who claim to supply 75 per cent. of the waxed papers used in the Dominion. Waxed papers are made from the best qualities of tissue, imported from Britain, because the mills of Canada and the United States do not as yet turn out such high grade stock. The tissue comes in webs like the stock for a newspaper. Formerly it was the custom to employ a number of girls to do the waxing by hand, but now an almost lifelike machine does the work automatically. The paper is fed through the waxer much similar to a printing-press. From the web the tissue passes through two rollers which straighten out all wrinkles; through a pan of hot wax, in which it remains for five seconds, through a set of cold steel rollers, which crush out the superfluous wax and at the same time cools and hardens it; and then over an air roller which thoroughly hardens it. At the other end of the machine the waxed paper is rolled in a web exactly as when it entered the waxer. The paper is now ready for the printing press, which is a combination web and Gordon. The paper passes off the web, halts a moment to get the impression and then passes on. Another machine takes the printed webs, cuts them into cross sections; and a third machine cuts these sections into the small squares ready for the candy wrapper. The enormous capacity of these machines may be judged by the fact that a couple of them turn out at a very low cost a million of these little printed waxed sheets in a day.

HOME OF OLIVE OIL.

Editor Canadian Grocer,—Referring to the issue of The Canadian Grocer of the 7th ultimo, we notice on page 30 a paragraph referring to olive oil under the heading of "Dishonest Macaroni Labels." From the statement made a reader might conclude that olive oil which cannot be legitimately labeled "Lucca" is of an inferior quality but this not a fact although it may be quite true that in the remote past the oil produced at Lucca was better prepared than at other places but for many years it has been considered that the very finest olive oil made is the "Huile de Provence." In support of the claim to superiority of this oil, we may point to the fact that many well known producers quote higher prices under the description of "Huile de Provence" than for "Lucca."

When is Flour Efficient

From the Retail Standpoint?

AN EFFICIENT man must do more work than he is paid for.

¶ If a man does $2,000 worth of work a year and earns $1,000, he is efficient. If he only does $800 worth, he is an inefficient machine and will come to grief—likewise the store that employs him.

¶ You see, it is not the price of a man, or of a flour, or of anything else that matters. It's the dividends earned on the price paid.

¶ The real cost of a flour is not merely what you pay the miller. It is that plus selling expenses and other fixed charges often lost sight of. Therefore, a flour brand that only clears cost is not good flour. Its efficiency is z-e-r-o, its consumption being equal to its output.

¶ If FIVE ROSES takes a trifle more a barrel to reach your counter, but once in your store pays in profit and good-will 50 per cent. additional in the annual turnover—is it not a better investment than "near good" stuff, which, in spite of lower first cost, barely clears actual cost, while failing uterly to realize the mighty claims of the seller or the expectations of the buyer?

¶ Which, think you, is the more efficient?

¶ Believe us, it is not a question of price nowadays—it never is. Price may bring a "one-time" customer to your store, but there's only one magnet to draw that customer back—value received. And when she gets to know FIVE ROSES' excellence, the keenest bargain hunter in your district wouldn't take any other flour, not even as a gift.

¶ Just as a stitch in time saves nine, FIVE ROSES in time will save nine times its cost — and the time is now, isn't it, Mr. Grocer?

Troubles Experienced in Debt Collecting

Lack of Promptness The Outstanding Abuse—An Actual Instance of a Collector's Series of Visits To Secure Payment on a Small Undisputed Account—Value of Co-operation in Settling Trade Disputes.

By M. Moyer.

In my last article I made the statement that lack of promptness was the chief abuse of the credit business. The actual losses through uncollectable accounts amount to comparatively little when compared with the loss of time, which is wasted through this depraved and infamous habit.

I will now give an instance of a retail merchant as it actually happened in Toronto.

The bill of an account less than $5.00 was handed to a grocer for payment. He took it and made the promise that he would attend to it. In about three weeks after, the same account was presented again. This time he made an apology and requested the collector to call on Thursday the following week. Promptly on time the latter was there. With an innocent smile, the grocer made the excuse that he had forgotten about it, and that he should call the following Tuesday. Again promptly on time the collector made his appearance.

This happened to be a day after a holiday and for that reason he decided that the collector must call again; he was then asked to call any time he happened to come around that way. The next visit was on a Saturday morning, and he found the grocer sitting on a box with apparently nothing to do, and not a customer in sight. As soon as he entered the door the grocer called his attention to the fact that this was Saturday, and therefore too busy to pay an account.

The next trip happened to bring the collector there on the following Friday at about 5 o'clock P.M. This time he was a little ruffled and told the collector that he should know better than to come at that time of the day when grocers were always busy. He was therefore indignant and somewhat annoyed and quite naturally the collector who had made six trips already begged his pardon for trespassing on his valuable time and left to call again. The account is not paid yet but it is promised to be paid next Monday.

Causes Immense Losses.

Now this man is not a dead beat, he does not dispute the account. He is not a poor man; he has the money to pay it, and he is willing to pay it at some other time, but not now. How much of that small account is left after the time is considered during which he spent in calling for it? But this is only the first loss. This man who was trying to collect this account may have owed somebody else and not being able to collect it, had to disappoint his creditor as well. When one comes to figure out the losses through this detestable practice it runs into figures beyond comprehension.

Why then should such a state of affairs continue? Is the Toronto Wholesale Fruit, Produce and Provision Association right in taking action against this expensive monster and adopting stringent methods to put a stop to it? It must be admitted that they were justified in attacking this evil, but it is possible they may have made a mistake in antagonizing those who were prompt in their payments. We shall leave that with themselves.

Business men, however, should learn that where two interests are concerned, both parties should be consulted, especially when they are dependent on each other. If this were always done there would be less trouble experienced in the trade in general.

Enforcing of Promptness.

The difference between cash and credit is simply the difference in the method of enforcing promptness. In selling for cash one takes no chance but enforces promptness on the spot before he allows the goods to leave the store.

Some sell on credit, but in order to force the buyer to be prompt he holds a lien on the goods. But with decent people this is not necessary. Their word is taken as sufficient. If a man therefore obtains credit on his decency, he should be voluntarily prompt, or he has no right to that privilege and his credit should immediately cease. Disappointments may happen, that a man may not be able to meet his obligation, but that does not prevent him from being prompt to meet the case in a businesslike manner.

California Fruits Auctioned in Montreal — Seventy-Two Carloads Arrive in Toronto in Three Days—First Canadian Strawberries on the Market—Potatoes Easing off in Price — Fish Trade Good.

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS. — New California fruits are the feature of the market this week. A couple of cars, the first of the season, arrived Monday and were auctioned off to the wholesale fruit dealers. Prices were not high, considering that the fruits were the first to arrive. Peaches, apricots and plums made up the cars. California pears are not yet in season, but should be here about July 1. Lower prices on California cherries are expected next week. Half a car is due to arrive at the end of this week which should result in a drop of 50c or 75c in prices, as this supply will be on the market for next week's demand. Those watermelons which were awaited for so anxiously have arrived and are moving out satisfactorily. Bananas are a little firmer this week. Home strawberries will be shipped into Montreal, beginning on Monday. These will come from all points in the Niagara Peninsula and as far west as Windsor. Grape fruit is scarce and high. Georgia peaches are now quoted, $4 a crate. Oranges are steady. Lemons are still quoted at old figures, with demand slow, owing to the weather being too cool.

VEGETABLES.—Texas tomatoes are now on the market, replacing Floridas, the last of which have arrived. The quality and price of the Texas ranges about the same as for Mississippi. Tomatoes, cabbage and cucumbers are occupying chief attention. The price of cucumbers has declined very considerably, as will be noticed. Increased receipts of Bermuda onions has resulted in a drop in the price of them. New carrots, Montreal, are now on the market. Rhubarb, lettuce and radishes are very plentiful. Canadian spinach is quoted this week. 50c a box.

FISH. — Fresh mackerel is arriving very freely and lower prices, by 2c, rule this week. This is the season when they are most plentiful. Gaspe salmon is also coming into the city in quantity, and the market for it also is easier. Among the other lines which are easier in price might be mentioned shad and brook trout. Brook trout is coming in quite freely these days. Dressed bullheads and perch are very scarce, owing to the fact that the season for them is practically over. Perch is not quoted now. Halibut is still arriving in quantity and the market is steady. Haddock and cod are low, too. Plenty of lake fish are offering. Grass pike and sea trout are up in fresh fish, and live lobsters and soft shell crabs have also advanced. All frozen salmon is higher.

GREEN FRUIT.—The fruit market is certainly humming. The days are not half long enough in which to do the business. Five cars of fruit are sold to every one last year at this time of the year. Seventy-two cars arrived in three days last week, and all were handled and disposed of. Never were pineapples so cheap and this accounts for the enormous consumption. Cars and cars of strawberries have been sold before ours are ripe. From 1½ to 3c a box is paid to the Government for the privilege of eating "American" berries. A few baskets of Canadian berries have arrived, for which 25c a box was asked, but they were not sold at that. Within a week or ten days our own strawberries will be in abundance. A car of California pears, peaches, apricots and plums is on the way and will arrive here within a few days.

VEGETABLES.—Vegetables of every description are ariving in large quantities. Tomatoes and cabbage are the principal lines. Lots of new potatoes are here which on account of the abundance of old potatoes are selling slowly at $5.50 to $6.00 a barrel. Old potatoes are a little easier, but the market is unsettled. Dealers are trying to find out what quantities are still held by the farmers, on which depend the prices until the new crop comes in. One of the strong indications that potatoes will be lower, is the fact that the cars which are contracted

HIGH PRICE AGITATION.

Winnipeg Press Blames Wholesalers and Retailers For Existing Fruit Prices.

Winnipeg, June 15.—Considerable agitation has been aroused by the local press during the past few weeks, over the high price of fruits and vegetables on the western markets.

It is to be regretted that the press did not use its valuable space to better advantage than to attack wholesalers and retailers for making an undue profit on these lines. The press had an excellent opportunity to agitate for lower transportation rates and a reduction in duty, but such a thing was not attempted. The wholesale fruit men of the city have been negotiating for some time to have the duty on strawberries reduced during certain months of the year, and it is expected that this will be effected next year. It is expected also that cheaper transportation will be brought about for next year and if these two reductions are made strawberries may be cheaper to the consumer in future years. At present it will be impossible to get cheaper berries. On Saturday they were jobbing at $3.50 per case of 24 quarts and the quality is the poorest that retailers handle.

The Hood River berries will shortly be on the market and these are the best berries grown on the continent. It will be surprising if these berries sell for less than $4.00 on the local market. British Columbia berries will soon be coming, but the quantity produced is so limited that very few will reach Winnipeg, and certainly not at a lower figure than the southern grown. Neither is the quality of the B. C. berry tempting enough to warrant any competition among local buyers in order that a cheaper berry might be put on the market.

It is surprising also that the press did not refer to the successful attempts made to grow fruits in this province. This is the real secret to the cheaper fruit problem. It is not impossible to grow strawberries in this province as many people think, and reports from the horticultural societies throughout the province show that a good crop of strawberries will be harvested this year in Manitoba. As the science of fruit cultivation advances it will be possible to produce berries much earlier in the season than they are being produced at present. However the market for southern grown berries will always be good in the early spring months.

Another reason why import berries or fruits of any kind will not be easily cheapened, is the fact that consumers here demand the very best fruit that is produced. It is possible to get southern berries that will job at three dollars and less, but the consumers would not lift them. The same is true of bananas. Local retailers will not handle anything but the very best bananas grown. It is certainly a credit to the trade that this is so, but the point remains that if the consumer wishes the best he must be willing to pay for it.

It is safe to say that there is a better quality of fruits and vegetables on the Winnipeg market, than in any other city in Canada, and it is doubtful if the same quality of fruits which are handled here would be cheaper on any other market in this country.

TRADE NOTES.

The assets of J. A. Plourde & Co., grocers, Montreal, are advertised for sale.

Gray Bros., Lakefield, Ont., have sold their grocery business to D. Cain formerly of Bobcaygeon, Ont., who took possession on June 16th.

The American Sugar Refining Company last week sold its coffee business, known as the Woolson Spice Co., to Herman Sielcken, of Crossman & Sielcken, coffee importers, New York. The Refining company had taken over this business 12 years ago to compete in the coffee trade with the Arbuckles who had entered the sugar business.

AN ENTERPRISING GROCER.

Peterborough Merchant Pleases His Customers and Makes Good Money Out of Sprouting Onions.

By J. M. Donovan.

If it may be any advantage to retail merchants I shall explain a scheme that I have more than doubled my money on and while it may not be timely for this year it may, nevertheless, be interesting and of some value to those in the grocery business. At any rate I wish some one had told me of it some years ago.

We all have more or less loss from onions sprouting early in spring, if in a warm or damp place and many are piled together. They become soft and mushy and are not saleable and, of course, must be thrown away. Now how the idea came to me is that I have a small garden in rear of my shop property and last spring as usual I threw out many onions. A little latter on as the weather got fine enough, so as to permit putting anything in the ground I put out some of my sprouted onions, and to my surprise in a week or two, I had some delicious and tender young green onions.

The large part of the onions peeled off easily, and the larger the onion the more prolific. I have got as many as six nice green onions from one and they were far superior to the first green onions on the market, they being too tough. The next to follow are the green potato onions, that are not in it with the ones I speak of for tenderness.

The value to me is easily understood when how I came by them and the money I made is taken into consideration. Three or four large onions make a nice 5c bunch, which otherwise is a total loss.

I had these onions two months ago and my customers were delighted with them, they being a treat at that time of the year. I still have them, but wound up my last box this week it holding about half peck of the sprouted onions and netted me about 40c. I have replanted them four or five times and have kept three boxes on the go since I started.

I now come to the most interesting part of the scheme. You might ask how it would be with a person having no garden. I claim he doesn't need any. I did not use mine this spring for that purpose. I think they do better inside at a window. Last fall before the frost set in, I put inside a box full of garden earth to try the inside plan this spring. I thought last fall that onions were going to be scarce, the season being so dry. I laid in a large supply and they proved to be a better crop than was anticipated. Not having a good place for onions, I had more than ever sprout, having a larger quantity. I started cutting the sprouted tops off the more firmer ones and planted the softer ones. They were sprouting so fast I had to get the third box. I find the marmalade boxes best, they not being very deep, and about the time the third box is planted the first is almost ready to pull and when all is out of the first box and I have more onions to go in, I fill it up again after taking out some of the earth first to throw around the onion after it is set on the loose earth.

By doing this I have not lost one onion and now wish I had more sprouted ones to put in as they come up very fast after they are sprouted and my money comes back quicker and more of it than if I were obliged to sell them at 25c per peck, which was the case the first winter.

EXCELLENT FOR MANUFACTURERS.

(From Printers' Ink.)

For those manufacturers who sell only through jobbers, however, there is a most excellent way to assert their individuality,—by advertising to the trade through good trade papers, as well as to the consumer. This method is bound to be used more and more. It is a business-like co-operative plan which the jobber cannot but welcome.

Talking to the Point

CLASSIFIED WANT ADS get right down to the point at issue. If you want something, say so in a few well-chosen words. Readers like that sort of straight-from-the-shoulder-talk, and that is the reason why condensed ads are so productive of the best kind of results.

CLASSIFIED WANT ADS are always noticed. They are read by wide-awake, intelligent grocers, who are on the look-out for favorable opportunities to fill their requirements.

The Canadian Grocer,

Dear Sirs:

We have been advertising in the Canadian Grocer for a number of years but never realized the good work you are doing until last Fall when the writer took a business trip through the North West and British Columbia.

Your journal seemed to be well thought of by the retail grocers, and many of them, especially in Vancouver and Victoria, took the trouble to mention that they had seen our ad in the Grocer.

This was appreciated by us as it is rather difficult to know just what class of advertising is giving us results. However we are now satisfied that your journal is an excellent medium for any manufacturer to use who wants to talk business to the wholesale or retail grocer of Canada.

Yours truly,

COMMON SENSE SAYS

A man wants credit. If you think he is good give him a $10 Allison Coupon Book. Have him sign the receipt or note form in the front of the book, which you tear out and keep. Charge him with $10—no trouble. When he buys a dime's worth, tear off a ten cent coupon, and so on until the book is used up. Then he pays the $10 and gets another book. No pass books, no charging, no lost time, no errors, no disputes.

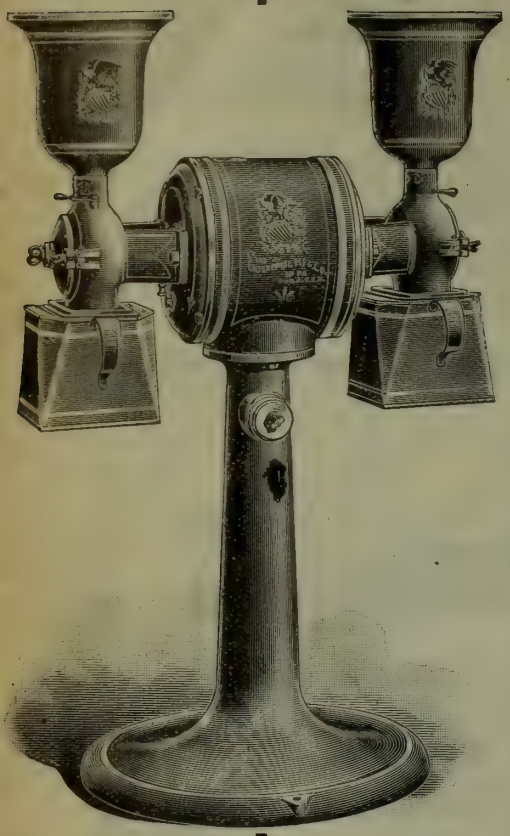
A Bunch of Hotness!

Sunshine attracts—except in the warm days of the "good old summer time." Then it is shade that draws one.



If you have a neat awning shading your store front the cool, inviting appearance of your place will attract trade. A dealer who is up-to-date in matters of this sort will be particular about his groceries. That's how people reason.

The LATEST "Enterprise" Electric Mill

New ideas applied to rapid grinding of coffee by electric power make these new "Enterprise" Pedestal Mills by far the best on the market to-day. They are Direct Connected. They lose no power in transmission. The grinders are on the motor shaft. The double Mill shown here, No. 0852, is for alternating current; can also be furnished for direct current. One Mill is fitted with tooth grinders which cut the coffee, the other mill fitted with ribbed grinders for pulverizing. Each hopper holds six pounds. The Mill will granulate 3 pounds of coffee per minute, and pulverize ½ pound per minute. The cans or receivers are enclosed as a protection against dust. The Mill is self-cleaning. This compact, graceful 1 H.P. Mill is already in great demand. We invite correspondence and will send facts, illustrations and prices of our 45 sizes and styles of Rapid Grinding and Pulverizing Mills on request.

We supply grocers also with Meat and Food Choppers, Self-Measuring Pumps and Faucets, Smoked Beef Shavers and other "Enterprise" Specialties. You should have our latest catalogue. If you haven't it, write.

Friends—Not Growlers

RISING SUN Stove Polish in Cakes never comes back to you with growls from the housekeeper. It is always made up to the same high standard, maintained for forty years, and it is always just right. That's why we have the thousands upon thousands of grocers pushing it everywhere. Grocers don't wish to run the risk of losing a good customer by passing out an inferior stove polish, which is wrong more often than it is right. RISING SUN makes friends for you and for us in every household where you put it.

Chocolate "Bordo" (formerly Bordeaux) will hereafter be sold under the new registered name. Many manufacturers are trying to make this specialty, but the nearest they have yet come to it, is to copy the old name.

Remember there is as much difference between "Chocolate Bordo" and these imitations as there is between Cucumbers and Bananas. It isn't the way they are shaped or wrapped, it's the way they are made; that inimitable flavor and consistency which has made Chocolate "Bordo" such an overwhelming success.

Remember this fact when the imitators offer you a substitute.

What Mr. Kramer Says

The best mill in the world at the least cost to you

C. J. Kramer, of Little Rock, Ark., former president of the National Association of Retail Grocers, is the owner of a ROYAL electric coffee mill. He says:

"We would not part with our mill for double its value. Have seen a great many coffee mills, but I have not come across one that gives the service the ROYAL does, and I do not see how any well-regulated store can do business without a ROYAL."

The steel knives that cut the coffee, the self-cleaning attachment, and the flawless construction of ROYAL mills have won them first place everywhere.

ROYAL mills are sold on easy monthly payments.

Advantages of Profit Sharing in Business

How the Principle Works Out and Benefits Both Capital and Labor—A Leading Toronto Firm Reviews its Experience With the System—Merchant Who Conducted Exhaustive Inquiry, Tells of the Strength and Shortcomings of the Plan, Which, on the Whole, He Strongly Favors.

A number of Canadian firms have for some years adopted the system of profit sharing. The plan is growing in the extent of its operations and in the measure of appreciation and confidence with which it is viewed by capital and labor. After giving the method a fair, impartial trial business and industrial concerns, with but few exceptions, have found it of mutual benefit and advantage. The principle has been pronounced sound and stable while the plan is generally conceded to be an improvement in the mode of remunerating labor, and to have a good moral, helpful and stimulating effect generally, promoting economy, thrift, goodwill and a spirit of unity and harmony among employees. It establishes a joint responsibility of interest and welfare between employers and employes, and the interdependent relations of capital and labor, making for advancement, expansion, unity and aggressiveness in business.

In connection with the sixty-fifth anniversary of W. J. Gage & Co., publishers, and manufacturing and wholesale stationers, Mr. Gage took occasion to refer to the plan of profit sharing which has been in existence in his company for some years. The system is a simple one in which every employe who has been continuously in the service of the company for over a year, participates. It is direct and easily operated. In 1902 the directors decided to set apart a certain percentage of the annual profits in the interest of the profit sharing plan. This sum is distributed among the men and women, boys and girls, the amount being divided on the basis of wages that each person receives.

System Was Extended.

This arrangement worked so well and the outcome was so encouraging, that three years ago another progressive step was taken and the plan extended, whereby the heads of various departments or employes in positions of trust and responsibility were permitted to purchase stock in the company. Twelve of the oldest servants of the house now hold stock ranging from ten to one hundred shares. They were allowed to buy their interest outright or to pay for it out of the dividends, being charged only a nominal interest on the remaining or unpaid portion of their shares. By this means the stock held by a number of them will pay for itself in a few years and will practically involve no expenditure on the part of the holders, being in addition a profitable and safe investment in a well managed concern. The heads of departments, who have acquired financial representation, do not, of course, participate any longer in the profit sharing scheme as applied to the rank and file of the employes.

Speaking of the plan in detail Mr. W. P. Gundy, General Manager of the Company, said they were well satisfied with the way the system had worked out and they would, under no circumstances, care to revert to the former order of things. "We have found," he said, "that the principle of profit sharing in its practice and application to be an admirable adjunct in every respect. We believe that the steady advances which our business has been making and the position which it now holds, can very largely be attributed to the loyal support and hearty co-operation of every one connected with our establishment. We are also convinced that this was to a great degree secured by the system of profit participation."

Why the Plan Was Adopted.

"What led you to adopt the plan?" was asked.

"Well! we had learned of its helpfulness in other lines of manufacture and the directors, after due consideration, thought, if rightly applied, it should work out as well in our own case. We decided to give it a fair trial—not as a benevolent or philanthropic undertaking or anything of that character, but on the ground of mutual interest, united assistance and earnest co-operation. We have found it helpful and the good opinions, we had previously formed of profit sharing, have been justified in every way. I will give you one illustration. At the time of the big fire in April, 1904, we lost our warehouse, plant and everything else. It was a month before we were able to resume any part of the business and six months before we were again in full operation and in shape to take back all our employes. Of all those who were thrown out of work by the fire, not one left us. They secured temporary employment elsewhere and were tempted by contracts, higher pay and in various ways by other concerns who held out all sorts of inducements and promises. Although, as I have said, it was six months before we were running again at normal capacity, one of the most pleasing things we remember is, that there was not a man or a girl but held to the company and all eventually found work in the old house. Yes! I am a firm believer in the principle, plan and practice of profit sharing. I could tell you of other instances and the good effect of the system which we inaugurated seven years ago, but I have given you a pretty fair outline of its working as it applies to our own company and an indication of what has been accomplished by its operation with us."

An Impartial Inquiry.

A few months ago Fred C. Lariviere, a hardware merchant of Montreal, concluded a thorough and impartial investigation into the working of the profit sharing plan, not only in Canada, but in foreign countries. The result of his exhaustive inquiries extending over a year were communicated in a series of excellent articles which appeared in Busy Man's Magazine. Mr. Lariviere carefully weighed all the points in favor of and those raised against profit sharing and his summing up of the situation is interesting and instructive.

Some Objections Heard.

The arguments chiefly heard against the system were:

Profit-sharing will never be a substitute to salary.

Unequal gains will always exist in the same industry.

Antagonism between capital and labor will always subsist.

The shares to each individual are too small to be appreciated.

The generalization of profit-sharing will have the effect of reducing profits.

The prosperity of an industry depends on its management, consequently the application of profit-sharing is an unjust departure.

Piece work or high wages are the only just substitutes to ordinary salary.

It is impossible to have employes share in the losses.

It is very difficult to establish the proper proportion of remuneration between capital and labor, especially in manufacturing industries.

Profit-sharing with no share of ownership in the industry is based on unsound principles.

Profit-sharing forces an employe to stay under penalty of loss of share of profits for the full term fixed by rules and regulations.

To be just, a profit-sharing system must give to the employes the right to be represented for stock taking and for the balancing of accounts, which is a very serious objection, inasmuch as it makes known the results, and, if favorable, will encourage others to start in same line of business, and, if reports are unfavorable, can cause very serious financial difficulties.

Many Favorable Points.

The points in favor of profit-sharing and the conclusions of the writer, who is a thorough believer in the principle, are:—

It is a more logical and a much fairer way of remunerating the wage earner.

It promotes economy amongst the laboring classes.

To a certain extent, it prevents the possibility of strikes.

It gives an employe a chance to apply the full force of his physical and moral energy.

When properly applied, it helps to promote the employers' interest.

It spreads on the largest number the care and responsibilities of the management.

It decreases the antagonizing influence of labor against capital.

It facilitates more intimate and friendly intercourse between employers and employes.

It gathers money to be distributed amongst laborers during dull time and scarcity of work.

It does not bring about the meddling of employes with the management of enterprises.

There is nothing known that will make disappear inequality of salaries and profit-sharing has never had this result in view in any of its applications.

I desire to state that it will be seen that the application of the profit-sharing system has been in operation in various industries, if not in the whole world, at least, in the most progressive and aggressive business countries as an improvement in the mode of remuneration of labor with good moral results for the working class.

Profit-sharing must not be considered as an innovation with infallibly good results, as a cure-all of all labor troubles, but as an amelioration over the old wage system, and its good results have conferred, when the nature of the enterprise permitted its application, benefit on both employer and employes.

The various results described prove that each case has its own solution, and rules and regulations first adopted have oftentimes been changed. It must not be forgotten that profit-sharing imposes on each sharer, to obtain good results, more duties and a better knowledge of the industry.

To make a success of the application of profit-sharing the following will be useful:

Profit-sharing should be organized in such a manner as to establish a joint responsibility of interest between employers and employes, also a capital and labor.

The salary question should not be mixed with profit-sharing, but be considered separately and be based on the general fluctuation of wages.

The industrial production and business management should be seriously considered in adopting a profit-sharing system as well as the relation of labor and capital.

Salary seems to be the basis most generally adopted, although some add the consideration of the number of years spent in the factory.

The amount set for profit-sharing should be sufficiently large to really interest the staff.

Profit-sharing should extend to the largest possible number of employes, and be well defined at its inauguration, not left to the good-will of the employer.

All firms adopting profit-sharing must necessarily be in very good financial circumstances, especially if results are to be made public.

Shares of profit-sharing should not be paid in cash, but placed to the credit of each employe with an allowance for interest, and to determine a number of years, during which the owner cannot dispose of his earnings except in case of death, purchase of house, or out of work.

The principal object of profit-sharing should be the creation of a savings department for each employe, to enable him to become a property owner or a co-proprietor of the industry.

Some Interesting Curios Among Crackers

Different Meanings In Different Countries — "Biscuit" in French Means "Twice Cooked."

Some curiosities in the way of foreign crackers or biscuit are described in The Bakers' Weekly (New York, May 22) by Mr. L. Lodian. He reminds us in the first place that biscuit is French for "twice cooked" and is etymologically the same as the German zwieback. The Italians make all their crackers in this way, the varieties familiar to us not being in common use with them. Italian bakers, Mr. Lodian tells us, save all their old bread and convert it into "biscuit" of this kind. For this reason the bread largely used in Italian and Sicilian restaurants is so made that pieces may be broken from the loaf without leaving a jagged end. From the Italian biscuit the writer passes to another Latin delicacy —the meat-biscuit of South America. He says:

"This is called hallaka, and is a kind of tamal—made of maize flour, small white beans, and chopped poultry flesh . . . the whole mildly and appropriately spiced. It is made up in a couple of big banana leaves, tied, and boiled intact thus. Is much used as a stand-by in Latin America by travelers and tourists on the Orinoco and Amazon and in the interior. It is apetizing, a simple pure food, will keep for months in a cool place and is imported for the use of many of the Latins living in Gotham; also for transients from Ibero-America putting up at our big hotels. Is preferably eaten cold as sold, but may sometimes be advantageously warmed up in cold weather in oven, or by immersion for three minutes in boiling water."

Of the tree-grown flour and biscuit of the tropics Mr. Lodian says:

"There are a dozen different bread-fruit trees scattered through tropical regions. One of the flours made from the bread-fruit tree of tropical America, known as the yuka, is a regular article of commerce on the Manhattan market. It is only sold in cartons at elite groceries, is quite a pure article, of dingy grayish-white color, and a slightly alkaline and hardly an agreeable taste. In cooking, the alkalinity and acridity are mostly driven off. . . . In its fresh-fruit form it is in shape elongated like a giant plantain, and, for drying and conversion into flour, is cut down long before ripening, so that it has (like a green banana) not a semblance of sweetness. But the same fruit, allowed to fully ripen, then sun-dried, becomes almost as sweet as a Smyrna fig. . . . This tree-grown cake-bread is eaten dried thus; and, along with the tree-growing flour, forms the chief food of millions in the tropics.

"The comprest fig-coffee of the Teutons, which has been used by them for over a century, is . . . also used here as a light cake or soft cracker, on account of its agreeable caramel flavor—just as many persons like the flavor of the semi-burnt skin of a well-baked apple. Is a sustaining, pure food; and is the only coffee extant which can be used both as a beverage or as an article of food. . . .

"The 'kasabi' torta (we get our word 'tart' from torta) of Hispan America is the biggest regularly made cracker on earth—bigger than the special matzoths of Manhattan's Jew-side (which, however, are only made for a short period in the year). It is made from the kasabi root, and lightly fired in cakes about the size of a small parasol.

Another queer cracker is the pulley-shaped hardtack of Sicily. The origin of this, Mr. Lodian tells us, is not known, nor is its meaning. He says:

"It is always circular, hole in middle, and has the approximate form of a pulley. A high-grade hardtack, in which egg always enters and the highest-priced hard-bread among the Sicilians, retailing at a nickel and dime apiece (only two sizes made). . . . .

"The Teuton bread-biscuit is a sliced pumpernickel, of very fine grain, and probably represents the highest development of this kind of rye bread. It always comes in tins, keeps soft for years, if kept closed, and is in much demand by those folks who do not care for the dry crispness and hardness of crackers, which are often a task on the salivary glands.

"Almond-meal biscuits are obtainable in Manhattan (where you can obtain all things unobtainable in other American cities. Gotham is only surpassed in this respect by Paris). They are made solely of almond debris after the oil has been exprest, only sugar being added as a binder—and baked to a fancy brown. The bitter-almond debris is preferred; but the biscuit which is quite hard, while having the aroma of the bitter-almond, has not an iota of its intense disagreeable bitterness. This is because, in the oil expressing, the kernels have been subjected to live steam to increase the yield, which dissipates every particle of acridity from the nut (now crushed to powder). We have a homely realization of this in our own kitchens, in onions, which, by boiling, lose their acridity."

Lastly, Mr. Lodian introduces us to the "massed" crackers of the Sicilians, which correspond somewhat to our gingersnaps and are always sold in higgledy-piggledy jumbles or masses. He says.

"They are massed together with a sprinkling of streaming white-sugar sirup poured over them. As required, one or two-pound masses are broken off for customers from the main mass exposed for sale, which may weigh from thirty to forty pounds."—Literary Digest.

Business Men Discuss Business Principles

Associated Boards of Trade of Western Canada in Annual Convention—Many Resolutions Passed Relative to the Production of Better Trade Conditions Throughout the Prairie Provinces—Unselfish Spirit Displayed—Building up the West—The Predominant Theme.

(Staff Correspondent.)

Saskatoon, June 22.—The sixth annual convention of the Associated Boards of Trade of Western Canada, comprising a delegation from one hundred and twenty-five individual boards in cities, towns and municipalities in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, was held here on June 15 and 16. This was the first convention held by the asociation since Manitoba Boards of Trade affiliated with the other two provinces. As a consequence it was the largest convention ever held by the association, and the most important gathering of its kind ever held in Canada to discuss ways and means for the development of the growing industries of Western Canada.

The business of the convention was to discuss the various resolutions which had been submitted to the general secretary during the past year, from various boards throughout the country. This year resolutions had been sent in by boards from Calgary, Lethbridge, Edmonton, Medicine Hat, Moose Jaw, Swift Current, Prince Albert, Raymond and Wolseley, and these occupied the time of the convention. These resolutions were all printed in pamphlet form and distributed to each member of each Board of Trade, some weeks before the convention, in order that the members might be prepared to intelligently discuss the questions when they were introduced.

On Tuesday morning, June 15th, the meeting was called to order by President K. W. Mackenzie of Edmonton. He expressed regret that all the delegates had not arrived, and after naming a resolutions committee of nine delegates present, and a credential committee of three members, the meeting was adjourned until the afternoon.

Tuesday Afternoon Session.

An address of welcome was read from Mayor Hopkins, of Saskatoon, who was not able to be present. He assured the delegates of the hearty sympathy and encouragement they would receive in their deliberations for the public good.

After M. Isbister, president of the Saskatoon Board of Trade had welcomed the delegates and invited them to the entertainments, which had been prepared for them, and which were enthusiastically taken advantage of by all, President Mackenzie rose to deliver the annual address which was as follows:—

"Gentlemen: As retiring president of this association I have now the honor to present to you my annual address, and in doing so desire again to express my keen appreciation of the honor you conferred on me a year ago, when you asked me to preside over your deliberations, and of the unfailing courtesy extended to me in the discharge of my duties in that connection.

"I am gratified to find so large a number of delegates assembled at this the sixth annual convention of the Associated Boards of Trade and take it as evidence of a sustained interest in the work. By a resolution of the convention held at Medicine Hat a year ago Manitoba boards are now entitled to representation in the annual convention on the same basis as those of Saskatchewan and Alberta, and on behalf of the older members of the association I now welcome them to this fuller participation in our work.

WILLIAM COUSINS, MEDICINE HAT,

President-Elect of The Western Board of Trade.

"The problems we have to face in these three provinces are similar, if not the same; our interests are inseparable, if not common, and though under three distinct govenments our welfares are so bound together that almost every pulsation that affects the one is felt by the other. It is hoped therefore that by well directed and concerted action we shall derive the largest measure of a common benefit.

"During the past two years our western provinces have felt with the rest of the world the strain resulting from the financial stringency, but recently there are many indications that this condition is passing away and that the onward march of general progress and development has been resumed.

"It is satisfactory to note that during the past year a distinct impetus was given to the settlement of the west by the Dominion Lands Act of 1908, which permitted the taking up of a homstead and pre-emption within a certain area and made available for homesteading all undisposed of odd numbered sections. It is also gratifying to note improvement in the class of settlers seeking homes in our midst.

"Following instructions given at last year's convention your executive on the 19th of December last apointed John T. Hall, of Medicine Hat, as permanent secretary of the Associated Board, who under their instructions inaugurated a very satisfactory follow-up system. For the purpose of interesting every Board of Trade in the work of the association, invitations were extended to thirty-one Boards of Trade in Manitoba, forty-eight in Saskatchewan and forty in the Province of Alberta, and for the purpose of giving the fullest, possible effect to the resolutions of the convention there were forwarded to the proper authorities and were followed up with a persistent correspondence impressing upon the various bodies to whom they were referred, the fact that these resolutions had received the most mature thought and careful consideration of the association before being presented to them and endeavoring to see that so far as practicable action shouldbe taken in connection with each of them.

"The machinery of this system is not yet in full perfect running order, but we believe that the foundation has been laid for very effective work along the lines proposed. I beg to refer you to pages 54 and 58 of the report of the last convention, where you will find a brief synopsis, of the year's work. I beg also to refer you to the mass of correspondece which now lies upon the secretary's desk, and to invite your inspection of same, or of such parts of it as may interest you. One of the resolutions to be presented to this convention suggests a further extension of this work. I am of the opinion that the association has now reached that point in its existence when it has become a strong factor in the upbuilding of Western Canada.

"It is with regret that I have on this occasion to refer to the death of an estimable member of our association, R. S. Cook, of Prince Albert, who took so prominent a part in the work of the association during the past two years. I am sure that those who were privileged to visit Prince Albert when the convention was held there two years ago will long remember his genial hospitality.

"In closing, I wish to express my appreciation of the able and effective services rendered by John H. Hall as secretary for this association. He has brought into the work a large fund of practical experience and has applied himself with commendable energy."

The financial report submitted by Secretary, J. T. Hall was encouraging in every way, and a substantial balance was left on hand.

The election of officers for the ensuing year was the next item of business, and resulted in the election of William Cousins, of Medicine Hat, as president; E. W. Saunders Moose Jaw, vice-president; John Hanbury, Brandon, second vice-president.

President Cousins was called to the chair and warmly thanked the convention for the honor they had done him.

K. W. MACKENZIE, EDMONTON,

Retiring President of Associated Boards of Trade of Western Canada.

Townsite Supervision.

The discussion of the resolutions was then taken up and A. E. Cross, of Calgary, introduced the resolution regarding the government supervision of the location of townsites. He stated several complaints had been made from citizens in the smaller towns that the railways exercised no care in the selection of suitable or healthy points, which were surveyed as townsites. The question was chiefly a sanitary one, and this was enlarged upon by William Georgeson (Calgary), who seconded the resolution.

Several towns were mentioned which were selected in extremely unhealthy places and without regard to the people who will have to live there. He thought the Government should compel the railways to select sites in suitable places. The resolution was favorably considered by a few other speakers and carried.

Extension of Trade.

The Canadian trade agencies in other countries, was the next question introduced by the Calgary delegates. The resolution aimed at the appointing of agents from Canada in other countries, and more particularly in Mexico for the purpose of extending the export trade of Canada. It was pointed out by A. C. Fraser, of Brandon, that the Dominion Government had a commissioner in Mexico, whose business it was to serve the country in the way the resolution indicated.

Disatisfaction was expressed by other speakers of the lack of information which they had received as to the trade conditions with other countries, and it was moved and carried that the resolution be re-drafted and submitted next year.

Bulk Sales Act.

The next resolution as moved by W. Georgeson (Calgary), is as follows:

"Whereas there is at present in existence in Manitoba and British Columbia an act governing the purchase, sale and transfer of goods in bulk, known as The Bulk Sales Act, the result of which has been beneficial to trade.

"Therefore it is resolved by this convention of the Associated Boards of Trade of Western Canada that the governments of Alberta and Saskatchewan be requested to enact without delay similar legislation in the respective provinces."

He stated that the general trade had suffered in Western Canada because merchants were allowed to sell out their stock in bulk at so much on the dollar and leave the wholesaler without any opportunity to exact any returns. It is only fair that the wholesaler should have the stock that is left, and that it should not be sold in bulk. There are many states in the union, he said, where this act was declared Constitutional. The older United States wholesale houses have felt for many years the absolute necessity of the protection of this Act. It is a reasonable request of the creditor, he claimed, to restrict, the debtor who sells goods in the assets of which he has no interest.

H. D. Gordon (Winnipeg), seconded the resolution, which carried.

Conservation of Natural Resources.

H. M. E. Evans (Edmonton), made an appeal for the preservation and development of the resources of the country, citing several instances in United States and Canada, where splendid service has been and can be rendered.

C. N. Bell called the attention of the delegates to the association originated in the United States, which had for its objects the ideals embodied in the resolution, stating that any Canadian could become a member for a fee of five dollars and have the privilege of receiving ten volumes of literature on the subject of conservation of natural resources.

"It behooves us," he said, "to show as much enthusiasm as the Americans in this endeavor."

The resolution was heartily supported.

The convention approved of the idea of the resolution to have land holders set aside a reasonable area of land in every ten acres, being sub-divided into lots, for parks and breathing spaces. Mr. Smith, of Regina, was the chief supporter of the question.

Fraud Under Exemption Ordinance.

The first warm debate of the session came when the following resolution was under discussion.

"Resolved that in view of the frauds which have been practiced by traders under the cloak of the Exemption Ordinance in force in the Provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, legislation should, in the opinion of this association, be passed in these provinces making that ordinance inapplicable to any property included by any trader in any statment upon the faith of which he obtains credit, or such extension of time for the payment of his

J. T. HALL, MEDICINE HAT,

The Board of Trade Secretary.

debts, unless in such statement the property claimed as exempt is distinguished as such."

The mover was Mr. Smith, of Edmonton, and the seconder Mr. Georgeson, of Calgary. In his address Mr. Georgeson said he regretted very much that he had not had time to prepare any particular material on this question, but he would say that the exemption law as it stands gives entirely too much advantage to the debtor. The act provides a great exemption in the case of homesteaders, and houses in cities are exempt to $2,500. It also exempts all tools and implements of trade, and further provision to farmers to assist them against executions but does not provide for traders. In the case of a debtor it leaves him all food and other things sufficient for six months. The creditors are under the obligation of leaving their goods under depreciating influences while the debtor goes free. The act was certainly wide in its provisions in favor of the debtor. There seemed to be no restriction of the amount which a debtor should claim. He quite agreed with Mr. Smith that it was time the creditor should not be asked to do more than he has done in supplying the goods to the debtor. There had been a number of decisions in Manitoba courts where the debtor got every favor rather than the creditor. The act should be amended so that the creditor should be protected.

The discussion was continued by E. A. Mott (Winnipeg), Hugh Aird (Saskatoon, and H. D. Gordon (Winnipeg), when the Hon. T. H. Maguire, of Prince Albert said that as the poor debtor did not appear to be represented there, he would take his part. One would almost be convinced that the meeting was approving of the principle of the resolution, but if he was the only one to voice an objection, he would voice it. Surely every business man and particularly every wholesaler knows what is the record of the man he gives credit to.

Discourage Credit System.

"Why," said the speaker, "was the law passed at all that there should be any exemptions? Surely for the obvious reason that in this country we do not want to have people thrown upon the municipality or the Government for their support by having their stoves, beds and other household goods taken from them. If such were done they would be paupers and the country taxed to support them. This is why this exemption law was placed on the statute books. I would like to see every trader discourage the credit system. It is not in the interests of the merchant, retail or wholesale, nor in the interests of the country to extend the principle of credit. You should extend the principle of cash. If you wipe out this exemption then dealers will be more reckless in obtaining credit. It would be a calamity if we encouraged people to come here without the protection the exemption law gives to honest people."

W. Georgeson replied by stating that it was against the dishonest dealer that the creditor wished to protect himself.

"The creditor should be allowed to mortgage the farm or property of a dealer who wilfully neglects his duties. And if the debtor is bound to be a chage upon some one, why should it not be the community as well as the wholesaler?"

J. A. Aiken, Saskatoon, stated that it was for the purpose of bringing to time the dishonest retailer or debtor that the resolution was framed. The creditor believes in the debtor's business and it is their own business they want to develop and get returns from and not the property and effects of a debtor.

The resolution was referred back to the committee.

Wednesday Morning Session.

Letters were received and read by Secretary Hall from the premiers of the three provinces from which the delegates were assembled, and from Lieut.-Gov. Bulyea, of Saskatchewan, expressing regrets that they were unable to be present on account of parliamentary duties.

E. M. Saunders, Moose Jaw, moved that the Dominion Government be memoralized to embody in the Railway Act, a clause compelling railway companies to settle claims within a fixed period from the date of filing such claims. Several towns and villages had requested the Moose Jaw board to inquire into the question which had been a vexatious one for some time. Hugh McKellar, Moose Jaw, in seconding the motion stated that conditions of freight traffic were much better in places where there was competition between railway companies. Not only was there a delay in the payment of claims on the part of the company but the general freight transportation was unsatisfactory in points where there was no railway competition. He pointed out further that Montreal and Winnipeg

F. M. SCLANDERS,

Secretary of the Saskatoon Board of Trade.

had remedied the difficulties somewhat by appointing a superintendent of the shippers' department of the Board of Trade, but all towns in the west were not able to support such an official.

W. B. Lanigan, Western Freight Traffic Manager of the C. P. R. was present, and took part in the discussion. He said, "No railway can afford to be arbitrary in any work of transportation. The railway company is a business firm selling transportation, and the good-will of its customers cannot be sacrificed. The question of claims was an intricate one, but was receiving attention at the present time by the C. P. R. officials."

F. W. Peters, assistant to the first vice-president of the C. P. R. was also present, and assured the convention that the company were glad to hear them on the question of defective transportation, and delay in claims settlement. He stated that often the railway agents were incompetent and dishonest and were responsible for delays and losses in shipments, but the company was always willing to pay claims under two hundred dollars.

George H. Shaw, western traffic manager of the C. P. R., stated that they always sought to dispose of claims within three months after being filed.

T. W. Green (Moose Jaw) stated that the rural merchant did not receive the same recognition which the city merchant received.

The resolution was carried.

Exorbitant Freight Rates.

A resolution to the effect that the Western Boards of Trade consider that the time had come for a general reduction on freight rates, brought out a very full discussion on the question. In moving the adoption of the resolution, Thos. Millar, editor of the Moose Jaw Times, based his remarks on the fact that Moose Jaw was charged an exhorbitant rate on coal from Lethbridge to Moose Jaw and from Regina to the same point. At the end of the long haul in each case a rate of three cents per mile per ton was charged, which was actually higher than the passenger rate.

The motion was seconded after a lengthy discussion in which delegates from Lethbridge, Brandon, Edmonton and Saskatoon took part. It was further resolved not to approach the Railway Commission but deal directly with the railway companies. Messrs. Lanigan and Peters of the C. P. R. denied some of the statistical reports which some of the speakers made use of, regarding the rate on coal in different parts of the west. F. W. Peters also strongly resented the intimation that the C. P. R. owned the Bankhead mine, and that special rates were issued from it.

The delegates retired to the Canadian Club luncheon where brief speeches, eulogistic of the Town of Saskatoon and the country generally were made by A. C. Fraser, of Brandon, and W. B. Lanigan, Winnipeg.

Wednesday Afternoon Session.

The meeting opened with a discussion as to where the next convention should be held. Invitations were extended by delegates from Brandon, Lethbridge and Moose Jaw. By a unanimous vote Brandon proved the choice of the convention.

The Selkirk Centennial.

In view of the opportunity which would be presented to exhibit the resources of the western country, and in view of the advertising which would be given to the various resources in reports which would be published the world over, the associated boards heartily endorsed the Centennial for 1912. They further recommended that the Dominion Government give a cash grant toward it; and that the railways be asked to give special rates and privileges to the visitors

Judge Maguire (Prince Albert) introduced a very important measure relating to the opening of one of the largest rivers in the west for navigation, which, it was affirmed, would greatly facilitate transportation in Western Canada. Ex-President Mackenzie supported the resolution because of the opportunity it would afford Edmonton to distribute her coal throughout the West. The resolution was a request to the government for two snag-boats to clear out all obstacles from the river. These boats would cost about $4,500. The resolution was briefly discussed and carried.

Coal Miners' Strikes.

This resolution, which emanated from Moose Jaw, read as follows:

"Whereas the supply of coal from the mines in the western provinces is always limited to a few weeks, often a few days consumption; and

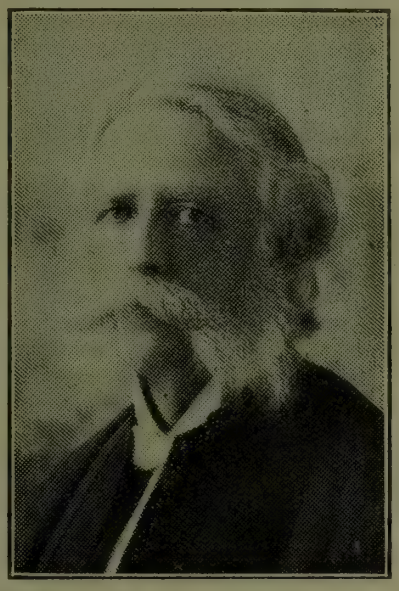
"Whereas, the prairies now dotted with farm homes depend entirely upon the coal supply for fuel; and

"Whereas any stoppage in the supply may occasion serious deprivations and possibly loss of life to those who are innocent and helpless;

"We urge upon the Dominion government the importance of further action in preventing miners' strikes. To further insure an adequate supply we further recommend that railways be asked to give a low rate on coal during the slack season before the grain movement commences, in order to encourage dealers and consumers purchasing their winter supply early."

Hugh McKellar (Moose Jaw) introduced the motion and said that the question had been so thoroughly discussed that nothing new could be said. It was regrettable that such conditions exist as is the case in Canada to-day. He was not going to discuss the Lemieux Act, further than to say that it seems to fail in its object in stopping coal mine strikes. It was serious that not only settlers generally may be left without fuel, but that railways might be tied up for want of coal.

The motion was seconded by T. Millar (Moose Jaw) who said it was necessary that the matter should be brought before the Dominion Government. He objected to our natural resources being retained by foreigners as was the case when the miners' strike was at the command of the American Federation of Miners.



After a discussion in which many took part, the resolution was amended to read: "That this convention urge upon the Dominion Government the importance of further action to ensure an adequate and continuous coal supply."

A resolution was introduced relative to the difficulty experienced in many places in securing a through ticket from the C. N. R. to points where a transfer was necessary to the C. P. R. or other lines. This resolution was carried.

Sam. Moore (Swift Current) brought in the motion that the Boards of Trade urge upon the Government of Saskatchewan the necessity of penalizing all debtors who remove goods which are under lien notes or chattel mortgages. The object of the resolution was to have these people advise the holders of the lien when they removed to another district. The motion was criticized by several speakers and finally withdrawn.

Wednesday Evening Session

It was decided by the convention that the various Boards of Trade should sympathise with any individual board in any special grievance. This was brought out in the case of Raymond, Alberta, whose board complained of the excessive express charges on the Alberta Railway and Irrigation Company's Line. A. M. McDuffee, of Raymond, claimed that they paid a 4 cent rate while other railways paid a 3 cent rate. The motion that the association request the railway commission to investigate the conditions and if possible have the rates reduced was carried.

JUDGE T. H. MAGUIRE, K.C.,LL.D.,

Prince Albert Delegate Who Defended The Retailer in the Debtor and Creditor Discussion.

James McGeorge (Edmonton) moved, seconded by M. Isbister, (Saskatoon) that the railway companies be required to provide traffic facilities on their bridges across all streams and rivers, the additional cost to be borne by the municipalities in which they are constructed. This was carried.

Wrong Use of Name.

K. W. Mackenzie (Edmonton) said the name "Board of Trade" was used more freely than it was intended. A statute of the Dominion clearly outlined what a Board of Trade should be, and many boards did not meet the requirements. The statute stated that only manufacturers, merchants, traders, brokers and bankers could be members of a Board of Trade and in many instances, men in other callings of life were members. He also pointed out that other organizations such as the "Printers Board of Trade" in Winnipeg were using the name without being authorized to do so. The motion was lost owing largely to the fact that there were lawyers and printers present in the convention.

At the conclusion of the above discussion President Cousins declared the convention closed to meet in Brandon next year.

THE MARKET FEATURES

Among the market features of the week is the attention given to canned goods. A few prices have been quoted by canners and it looks as if prices will be low. Canned strawberries, on account of the splendid crops, will be low and retailers will probably be able to sell fifteen cent berries this year.

Advices from California state that new apricots will open higher while raisins may be a shade lower. The currant crop in Greece will not equal that of last year by ten to fifteen per cent., and prices will be firm.

Hogs have advanced again during the week and a firmer market exists in lard. Butter is also a shade higher but egg prices are easing off on acount of so many deteriorating with the hot weather.

Beans have advanced to such a figure that will not tempt buyers and sales are diminishing.

MARITIME BOARD OF TRADE.

The fifteenth annual meeting of the Maritime Board of Trade will open at Charlottetown, P.E.I., on Wednesday, August 18th. Secretary Chas. M. Creed is already busy making arrangements for the meeting. He has sent out calls to subordinate boards of trade throughout the three provinces for subjects to be discussed.

The meeting was held last year in Halifax, when 109 delegates were present. The influence of the board is gradually extending and it is to be hoped that the meeting at Charlottetown will be even larger than that at Halifax.

That a great deal of good to the business interests of the Maritime Provinces has been accomplished by the Maritime Board of Trade is beyond question. Bye-and-bye boards of trade in other parts of Canada may be wise enough to follow in the footsteps of the Maritime Board of Trade and form provincial organizations.

CANADA'S NEW WATERWAY.

Great interest is being taken by United States citizens in the proposed Georgian Bay Canal which, while it has apparently been given a set back until next year, has every indication of becoming an accomplished fact before many years.

In Chicago, for instance, the municipal authorities are planning to make their port second only in tonnage to London and a charter has been given a corporation to build a sea wall about a mile out in the lake, the inner side to be covered with warehouses and sawtoothed with wharves. Incorporated in the plans is a tunnel running under the lake to the city and making connections not only with the freight tunnel already constructed but also with every railway entering Chicago. Harriman, the railway magnate, is said to be the man behind the new harbor corporation having in hand the working out of these plans. It is claimed that the lakes to gulf waterways will, in conjunction with the Panama canal make Chicago nearer the Orient than New York, while the new Georgian Bay canal will bring Chicago almost as close to London as New York, while Chicago will have a deep waterway for the full route and New York will have only the comparatively-shallow Erie canal and its railway connections.

The Georgian Bay canal, if it will do so much for Chicago, ought to do as much or more for Port Arthur and Fort William. It is designed to be a 22 foot canal throughout, the route being via the Georgian Bay, French and Pickerel Rivers, Lake Nipissing, and the Ottawa River, the total distance being 440 miles. Although there will be a total of twenty-seven locks, it is estimated that there will be a saving of a day or more in time over the present route for steamships through the lakes. The saving in distance on the route via the canal from Lake Superior to London, as compared with the route via the New York barge canal, will be 806 miles. The topographical features along the canal are such that 332 miles of the distance will consist of natural waterways, upon which no work of excavation need be done. Of the remaining 108 miles, 80 miles will consist of submerged channels, on which there will be only a limited amount of excavation in the removal of rocks and shoals. This leaves about 28 miles of canal in which the full prism must be excavated in cuts that vary from 200 to 300 feet in width. The summit level will be 99 feet above Georgian Bay and 659 feet above Montreal. The estimated total cost of the canal is about $100,000,000, and the estimated time to complete the work is about ten years.

It would be fatuous to close our eyes to the important bearing which this scheme has upon the Erie Canal from Lake Erie to the Hudson, says the Scientific American. The one, with its limited draft, can take nothing larger than a 1,000-ton barge; the other, with its minimum draft of twenty-two feet, will be able to pass ocean-going freight steamships from ports on the lakes to the Atlantic. The advantages of carrying freight in large bulk and without rehandling are well understood. There is a saving both of time and cost. On the other hand, the opening of a ship canal from the lakes to the ocean would not render the whole fleet of lake steamers available for coastwise traffic between the lakes and the ports on the Atlantic seaboard, or service in the transatlantic trade. It is urged by the commercial interests which would be affected that the average lake steamer is not suitable for deep-sea service; the type of ship that is adapted for service on the lakes being in some respects unsuited for oversea voyages. This may be true of some of the smaller craft; but we doubt if it would apply to the ships of larger displacement, which constitute the bulk of the more modern lake fleets. After all is said and done, it is certain that, with the completion of the Georgian Bay Canal, vessels suitable for combined lake and ocean voyages will be constructed.

CAMPING GOODS TRADE.

Now that the Summer season is on, retail merchants should look to the advertising and displaying of the goods that go with the camper. In order to get hold of as much of their trade as possible during the hot weather an energetic campaign must be waged persistently.

Window displays of canned goods, breakfast foods, tea, coffee, biscuits and all kinds of ready made and prepared foods are now in season. These are the things the camper and cottager need and where he sees them or knows where they are, that's where he is going to do his purchasing.

An advertising campaign along these lines should be beneficial especially to those grocers and merchants who reside in districts near summer resorts. Besides using newspaper space it might be well to circularize all probable investors, giving a list of articles that are useful to the camper.

OFF-SETTING MAIL ORDERING.

A Brantford merchant, in talking to a representative of The Grocer a few days ago, made the statement that Brantford grocers are selling just as cheaply as the Toronto departmental stores. This is absolutely true and in many cases they are selling cheaper than the department stores. Tests have been made which show that this applies not only to the grocers of Brantford, but to other places as well.

The only thing, therefore, that remains to be done is to educate the public that such is the case. This education can be best consummated by advertising. That is the secret of the successful inroads of the department stores. They persistently advertise to keep their names and goods in the public eye. The retailer does not always do this, but where he advertises and does so intelligently he need have no fear from the mail-order houses. He is in a position to meet successfully the competition of the department store by educating the public to the assortment, quality and price of goods he carries.

BUTTER PRICES LOWER.

As may be observed from correspondence from various parts of the country butter prices are easier and in some cases declines of two or more cents have taken place.

This is nothing unusual for this season of the year. Butter is now being made in larger quantities on account of the dairy cows having been on grass for some time and the increase in the make has naturally produced a decline in prices.

Butter prices however, do not drop so low in this month as they did some years ago. This is due to the better facilities for packing brought about by the introduction of modern cold storage methods. The fact is packers are at the present time storing considerable butter and although the supply has been increased the prices will not go down to those of years when storage plants were unknown or of crude construction.

CUT-THROAT COMPETITION.

Evolution in business methods has not done away with the bane of modern merchants—cut-throat competition. This ogre of the trade is not peculiar to groceries, but, owing to the narrow margin of profit on most foodstuffs, its results are perhaps a trifle more disastrous in connection with the grocery business.

That up-to-date grocers, who have been trained as their forefathers never were, should persist in their endeavor to outdistance their competitors by selling under cost—and yet expect to continue in business—seems ridiculous. Yet this is what hundreds are doing every year.

Competition is hard to meet, but it is foolish to try to overcome it by cutting one's own throat, for after all, that is what a merchant does who tries to successfully conduct a business without profit.

Because the man across the street sees fit to sell canned goods at prices which cannot be met without loss, should not influence the grocer to follow suit. One would not follow a suicide in a leap off a bridge, but how many will slaughter prices because somebody else is doing so.

Legitimate prices, good values and square treatment will hold trade that is worth having. Those customers who are with one to-day and away to-morrow are not worth having. It is the substantial trade that pays, and it is a noticeable fact that the price-slaughterer has little of it. It he had much he would have neither the time nor the inclination to cut prices.

COUNTRY PUBLISHER CHAMPIONS EATON.

The Kincardine Review has taken a very shortsighted stand in endorsing the giving of the school book contract to the T. Eaton Co. The Review criticises The Printer and Publisher for objecting to the contract being given to the Eaton firm on a basis, which means injury to every retailer in Ontario, but The Printer and Publisher comes back with a poser asking, Col. Hugh Clark, the publisher of the Review, what he would have to say if a Kincardine dry goods or hardware merchant set up a small printing outfit in his cellar and put in a tender for the town printing at a figure far below cost in order that he would secure some advertising as a price cutter.

Kincardine merchants, who extend advertising support to the Review editor, should not be slow to make him realize that his first interest should be to develop his home town, and this cannot be done by encouraging his readers to send to Toronto or Montreal for supplies.

Too many country publishers and merchants have been lax in opposing the tendency to direct business to the large centres. The publisher has as much at stake as the merchant and, if he only realizes it, the farmer and property owner is likewise equally interested with the local merchant in building up the country town.

At present the bookseller is most directly affected by the granting of the school book contract to the Eaton firm, but, as has been pointed out, all branches of trade are likely to suffer as a result of cheap school books being used as a bait to secure orders for hardware, dry goods, groceries, etc.

BAD EGGS ON THE MARKET.

Owing to the larger percentage of losses through bad eggs, buying prices in the country are lower. The percentage of bad eggs is about a dozen to the case, which means over half a cent a dozen.

Here is a carelessness on the part of farmers and some country storekeepers which should be checked. The loss is a big item, and the farmers have no right to obtain money for useless eggs. Through the excellent cold storage facilities, with which dealers, at great expense, have provided themselves, the farmers are getting much higher prices for their eggs, because the consumers are getting a better quality and consequently are using more.

In spite of all this great effort and expense on the part of dealers, from whom the farmer derives the greatest benefit, he still goes on in his careless, and very often, dishonest, habit of putting stale and even bad eggs on the market.

In all fairness and for his own interests, each merchant should candle all the eggs when he takes them from the farmer. If all the merchants would do this, farmers would soon learn to be careful and the quality of the eggs would improve.

When people pay a high price for eggs they have a right to expect good eggs, and any person who sells bad eggs, intentionally or through carelessness, should be dealt with with less leniency than they are at the present time.

ENJOY YOUR BUSINESS.

Merchants who feel no pleasure in their business should learn what they would rather do and go about it. Too much is heard from the man who thinks the occupation he pursues is the last one on earth. His every action becomes distasteful to those who enter his store.

Goods seldom sell themselves. There must be a salesman behind the counter and in order to become one, a merchant must enjoy his business and enjoy talking about the goods he has for sale. They have to be properly presented and the personality of the salesman counts for much.

Too frequently merchants complain. Everything seems to go wrong with them and their tempers and attitudes are reflected in their faces when purchasers come into their places of business.

To succeed in your business you must enjoy it. You must realize that your business is the source of all your pleasure and you will soon make a pleasure out of your business.

OTTAWA.

June 23.—One thousand and seventeen boxes of cheese were boarded on the Ottawa Cheese Board, on June 18. Bidding was active and nearly all the board sold at 11⅝c per pound for white cheese and 11¾c per pound for colored. The boarding showed an increase of 530 boxes over the nearest corresponding date of last year, and totalled in value nearly $10,000 at the current market price. The total weight was 81,360 pounds or over forty tons.

Potatoes have advanced again to the old price of $1.25 per bag. During the past three weeks this article of necessity was selling at $1.10 per bag, but scarcity in the surrounding country is responsible for the advance.

Thirteen Ottawa retail grocers went to Brockville by touring car on Wednesday morning of last week to attend the Retail Merchants Convention. They arrived at noon and after a short business session in the afternoon, the delegates were taken for a drive around the town. After a cruise in Mrs. (Senator) Fulford's private yacht the Ottawa grocers left for home and despite bad roads, the trip was made in good time and with few delays, the party arriving home in time to attend the fruit sale. Those who availed themselves of the trip were Wm. York, H. C. Ellis, F. W. Forde, A. G. Johnson, C. J. Provost, J. Bambrick, H. S. Dorion, R. B. Younghusband, J. Mundy, Alex. Phillips, P. Lamoreaux, T. W. Collins and Geo. Atkinson.

The following travelers called on the trade this past week: Chas. E. Buckles, of the Park Blackwell Co., Toronto; J. H. Tabor, of Moirs Ltd., Halifax; M. D. Beard, of J. S. Fry & Sons; and H. H. Livingstone, the Litster Pure Food Co., Toronto.

KINGSTON.

June 23.—The main topic just now is the grocers' picnic, on July 14th. Even the delivery horses seem to know for speeding is quite common on our streets. Perhaps the drivers are to b'ame.

A delegation composed of president E. T. Stacey, W. Mitchell, D. J. Laidlaw, C. Lockett and J. Gilbert left here Wednesday of last week to attend the annual convention of the Ontario Retail Merchants at Brockville. Kingston was successful in securing the convention after a hard fight against Peterboro, the lift-lock city.

W. F. Nickle, M.P.P., for Kingston, was opposed by the Toronto portion of the committee at the Brockville convention as a Dairy Commissioner. The two Kingston men spoke of his good qualities and ability to deal fairly with their business but to no effect. They seemed to feel that he couldn't tell whey butter from pasteurized creamery. It turns out, however, that he was once a milkman.

A petition is being circulated asking the merchants to close Saturday night at 10 o'clock. Many feel that 9 would be a more sensible hour.

TORONTO.

June 23.—The Retail Grocers' Association have decided to hold their annual picnic this year at Queen Victoria Park, Niagara Falls. The date as was previously announced is July 14th and the Niagara Navigation Co. has charge of the transportation arrangements. The grocers are having games for which prizes will be given and they expect that the excursion this year will surpass anything in the past. Committees have been appointed and the arrangements are all under way. The destination was only decided after various sites across the lake were viewed by a special committee from the association with D. Bell as chairman.

The Retail Grocers' Association are considering some live questions at their regular meetings. The last meeting was held on Monday night, June 21st, with President Thos. Clark presiding. David Bell pointed out that the grocers were being handicapped in the sale of strawberries by getting so many boxes only about three-quarters filled. "You will find the boxes on the top of the crate," he said, "well filled but when you look beneath they are short. We cannot very well give boxes only three-quarters full to our customers and we are the ones who suffer. It is the duty of the growers to look after this and the matter is an important one." Mr. Bell moved that a committee be appointed to approach the growers through the proper channel with a view to having them attend to the matter immediately. This started a discussion during which D. W. Clark suggested that the government be approached with the request it fix a standard weight for boxes and baskets of fruit. D. McLean pointed out that good measure is invariably secured in berries imported from the United States and he thought Canadian growers should do the same. A. White suggested that the Fruit Growers' Association be written explaining that all shippers of "fraudulent" boxes would be exposed. Mr. Bell's motion finally passed. A. White, chairman of the committee appointed at the last meeting to interview the Wholesale Fruit, Produce and Provision Association, reported a courteous reception and stated that the association was willing to concede to the request of the retailers not to sell fruit, etc., to consumers. He brought back greetings to the grocers and also explained the desire of the wholesalers to meet the retailers at any time when any question necessitating a conference arises. Mr. White's report was received with applause and the committee was thanked for its services.

Two of the city's "younger" grocers, R. Davies, Homewood Ave., and J. S. Bond, Gerrard St., have left for a two months' trip through Western Canada. The former has been in business 32 years and the latter 18 years but that does not prevent them from feeling young just now.

Fire, caused by the dropping of a match on a tablecloth, damaged the property of H. Walker, grocer, 168 Brunswick avenue this week to the extent of $50.

AURORA.

June 23.—The Aurora merchants are keeping abreast of the times in giving their employes a summer outing, all having agreed to close on Wednesday afternoons during the months of July and August.

"Ray" Bond, of John Bond & Co., left last week to sepnd a month with his uncle, F. J. Watson, of the Eby-Blain Co., at Mr. Watson's summer home, near Picton.

A number of Toronto grocers are patronizing our Thursday morning markets. Being within easy access of the city, they find they can run out in the morning and be at home at noon with a supply of butter and eggs for their Friday orders. Market prices last week were: Eggs 16c to 17c; butter, 15c to 17c.

"Alf" Snowdon, formerly salesman with Towns & Co., for the past twenty years, has severed his connection with that firm to become host of the Queen's Hotel.

The Aurora friends of W. H. Seyler, of The Grocer, regret to learn of his illness, and all express their wishes for his speedy recovery. Some of the ozone of the Heights of York, they feel sure, would speedily restore him to his former health.

"Jim" McCloskey, who for several years was one of Towns & Co.'s hustlers, is "making good" in Winnipeg, having secured the position as stockkeeper and buyer in one of the largest confectioneries in the western capital.

LINDSAY.

June 23.—Some people, in fact a large number, seem to have the opinion that the grocers are in business for their health—that they make money easy and can afford to be "cheated." If people who are so prone to forget to pay their accounts, would pause to think of the hard work, mentally and physically, they have to struggle with they would soon change their views. Is it any wonder that the grocers of Lindsay as well as other towns, are organizing to do away with the credit system? Just the other day a Lindsay grocer had a delinquent customer up before the "cadi." He was given a large amount of goods on "tick" until he should be able to secure work and was able to pay his debt. The young man secured steady employment, but took it for granted that the grocer could do without his money. The bill was paid. If the grocers of Lindsay combined together as the shoemen did last week what would happen. The shoemen sent out the announcement that in future—after July 1—they would not allow any person to take home shoes to try on. They were not to be taken from the store at all. The shoemen found that they were losing money by this practice. Again, what would happen if the grocers would do likewise? It is for the benefit of the hard-working and much-worried grocer that the cash system is gradually being enforced in Lindsay.

Lindsay grocers sympathize with Jas. Killen, of the firm of Spratt & Killen, in the death of his wife.

Crops in this vicinity are coming along fine. The news is good news to the merchants, and particularly to the grocers. He likes to hear that crops will be good, because he recognizes that his bread and butter, to a certain extent, depends upon the condition of the crops. It means increased business.

The fruit season has been an excellent one as far as the grocers of Lindsay are concerned and prospects still look good. A great demand has been made on pineapples and oranges. The strawberry has also been sought after. These are luxuries at the present time, but the "homemade" crop will soon be on the market.

A. L. Campbell has a soap window this week, which although dressed hurriedly has no doubt been the means of selling an increased number of bars. That a good window display pays is the general opinion of the merchants of Lindsay.

Some clerks in this town are in favor of the more daylight movement. They want more show for the man behind the counter. The dry goods clerks have been successful in getting their employers to agree to an early closing by-law, with the result that the dry goods and the boot and shoes stores will close every night except Saturday night, during the months of July and August at five o'clock. But the grocer clerks are not in on this. If all the grocery stores would close at five o'clock during the same months, the proprietors would be conferring a blessing on the poor clerks, and no person would suffer.

BARRIE.

June 23.—Mayor Vair, grocer, has just returned from Quebec being down to represent the town on the Electrical Convention held there.

Butter was still on the decline on Saturday's market. It dropped another cent and buyers in quantities paid as low as fourteen cents a pound. Eggs continue firm, the ruling price being sixteen to seventeen cents.

Last week saw many changes of the summer tourists here and already the business men are smiling. Big Bay Point will this year open on the large scale of years ago and the two large hotels are both advertising largely and should do a good business. It means something for our grocers as these hotels buy all their goods locally.

Frank Sloan of John Sloan & Co., Toronto, was a visitor in town on Monday.

George Carley, of Gillard & Co., Hamilton was home last week.

H. Knight got a rude jolt this week in being informed that the store he was after for his restaurant business had been leased to a Toronto jewellery firm for five years. Mr. Knight was in the store till two weeks ago in the grocery business and only sold the grocery stock to secure the store for his restaurant.

There is some talk of one of our young grocery travelers buying a certain grocery business in town, the proprietor of which wants to go to the Northwest on account of his health.

GUELPH.

June 23.—The clerks' association have by no means allowed the grass to grow under their feet as regarding the half-holiday. In 119 stores are displayed cards informing Guelphites that "This store will be closed during July and August on Thursday afternoons." Deeming this insufficient, an ingenious sign was gotten out, which was drawn around the streets on Saturday, the footnote being: "Do your shopping early." No doubt there is an amount of significance attached to this sentence.

Robert Millar sustained an injury to his arm, while playing his pet game on Friday night.

Lovers of fruit are now able to choose from quite a large assortment these days, although the price keeps high. Canadian strawberries have arrived, and are in good demand at 18c per box.

The outside demand for potatoes has gone down and this has let the air out of the inflated prices. The result was that the figures sank as low as 45c a bag in some instances, with 70c as the highest figure paid.

CHATHAM.

June 23.—The strawberry season is now in full swing. Home grown berries began to make their appearance for the first time in considerable quantities in the grocery stores early last week, while there were large offerings on the Wednesday market. Some of the early berries were still a trifle green, but the majority were well ripened, large, solid and of an excellent flavor. Indications point to a large crop. The opening price was 15c a box, but it is anticipated in many quarters that the price will drop to 5c a box before the season is over. Last year probably the lowest price reached was 12½c. The low price will doubtless mean very extensive preserving, and grocers will accordingly benefit through the increased sale of sugar and jars.

Following the lead set by Chatham, Wallaceburg merchants have formed a Retail Merchants' Association, and are inaugurating a collection system modeled upon the same lines as in this city. The scheme was agreed upon at a meeting last week, and E. Askunas was named as official collector. Wallaceburg, owing to the fact that its two largest industries are idle for several months of the year, is a town where long credits prevail, and the merchants estimated the other day that they had on their books approximately $30,000. With debtors frequently out of work, and liable to come and go, the need of the system is obvious.

Geo. Bradley, of St. Catharines, the junior partner of the firm of Bradley & Son, was in town last week paying his regular visit to the local branch. The store is doing a good business under the management of P. B. McQueen. Mr. Bradley states that he has through the columns of The Canadian Grocer been following with interest the development of the local collection system. He still thinks, however, that the Bradley scheme of conducting a strictly cash system is the most effective "collection system" that can be devised. "It saves money, work and worry," remarks Mr. Bradley, "and is good for the merchant—and better still for the customer."

Darwin Pelett, who has for some years past conducted a small grocery on Queen street, south of the G. T. R., has made an asignment for the benefit of creditors. Claude R. Simpson, of Sarnia, is assignee. The creditors' meeting was held here, Tuesday; distribution of assets to take place on or after July 25.

"I find it pays," remarked a grocer the other day, "to keep my stock well to the front. A clean counter looks very nice, but I find that when I make an attractive display of saleable articles, with price tags and suggestive show cards attached, that I make more sales. And I change these displays often, so that every time the average customer drops in there'll be something new to tempt him. Of course this all means work but it keeps the stock moving, and the dust doesn't accumulate."

The practice of giving Christmas presents to customers was trenchantly handled by Wm. Anderson, at the last meeting of the R. M. A. He thought that, like ticket selling and programme advertising, it should be placed under the ban of the association. He pointed out that the wholesale grocers had cut out the present giving habit, and it was up to retailers to follow suit. Personally, he had eliminated everything of the kind from his business, even to the annual calendar. Peter Cunningham added that he had been fighting the practice for years, but it was old and deep rooted. President Westman said he had found the annual calendar—something costing about 5 cents—a good means to doing away with more expensive presents; while F. Jacques declared that valuable customers did not get the calendars as a rule, while children did.

The matter will be further discussed next month.

Wm. Potter, W. E. Parrott, J. E. Gray and W. M. Grant were named to look after the initial arrangements for the merchants' picnic next August. On Mr. Anderson's suggestion cards embodying the Merchant's Decalogue—the prohibitions against programme advertising, buying of tickets and giving of subscriptions during business hours, and other incidentals, including the fact of the merchants' membership in the collection department—were ordered printed, and will be distributed among members. Henceforth when the ticket solicitor, now a rara avis, appears, all the merchant will have to do will be to wave his hand dramatically in the direction of the placard.

The old objection to auctioneers selling new goods on the market was discussed, individual merchants favoring prohibition; but those present who were aldermen pointed out that the price of market spaces to auctioneers had been raised to $50., in addition to which they had to pay licenses. The general opinion was that prohibition was out of the question.

The picnic season is practically here, and canned meats, cooked ham, fancy biscuits, and other "ready to eat" cammoditics are in order.

Orendorf Bros., Ridgetown, are having their grocery front repainted and otherwise improved.

Canning companies throughout the west are preparing for the handling of a record strawberry crop.

The Wallaceburg grocery partnership of Forbes & Simons formed some months ago has been dissolved, Peter Forbes having bought out the interests of Walter Simons, who will resume his old position with the Wallaceburg Sugar Company.

T. J. Salmoni, general merchant, Kingsville, is having the store adjoining his grocery repainted, preparatory to the removal of his dry goods stock from the Wigle Block.

Mr. Logan, who is to manage the H. J. Heinz Co.'s Canadian branch at Leamington, arrived last Tuesday. He comes from Burlington, though originally from Pittsburg.

BRANTFORD.

June 23.—Wheat still remains at $1,35 per bushel and only an occasional load or so is brought into the city. The wheat that is growing in this district looks very fine.

Strawberries are plentiful and the price dropped to 10c on Tuesday. A very noticeable fact was that a large number of the berries that were offered for sale were in old boxes, many of which should have been destroyed long ago. It would be a good thing if all the grocers would purchase only berries that are in clean boxes and full quarts, and also to request the Board of Health to assist in the work.

Saturday's market was large and green vegetables were very plentiful. Eggs were scarce and the price advanced to 25c per dozen. Butter, which has been such a drug on the market for the past two weeks, is not as plentiful, although there is no change in the price. It is still retailing at 20c per lb. The demand for good fresh stock continues quite satisfactory, while a large quantity as been sold to pack.

GALT.

June 23.—Deans & Walker, who for a number of years have conducted a grocery business in Galt at the stand on Main street known as the Red Front have announced that they will give up business about August 1st. The announcement came as a surprise, especially to the business section. The firm since its inception in Galt had built up a large business, and the proprietors had become influential in the business and social life of the community. Their retirement will be a loss to Galt's business community. Mr. Deans, it is understood, will accept a position in Toronto and Mr. Walker will return to Paris in which place he was in business before coming to Galt. The store has been leased by a local gentleman who intends using it as a theatorium.

Growers of strawberries in Waterloo County state that the prospects for a record crop were never better, so that Galtonians may again see the price as low as six boxes for 25 cents.

The Town Council refused to take any action on a petition from a number of ratepayers requesting that grocers and hotelkeepers be prohibited from buying on the market before ten o'clock. The town fathers expressed themselves as firm believers in the old adage that the early bird should get the worm.

LONDON.

June 23.—Trade both wholesale and retail showed some improvement the past week over the week preceding. Brokers report raw sugars firmer with no change in refined. The market for fine teas shows an upward tendency, with mediums and low-priced unchanged. Coffees are steady. Canned goods are getting pretty well cleaned up except strawberries and tomatoes, of which there is said to be big stock still on hand. California fruits, such as prunes, raisins and peaches, continue to advance and very little is now left at points of production. Advices from California predict bumper crops except apricots, as to which the outlook at present is not very promising. The supply of Alaska red salmon is expected to be short this year, the pack being estimated much below that of last year. No prices are as yet quoted for new British Columbia or any other pack.

Potatoes were a glut in the market on Saturday. The tubers were brought in by the wagonload, and they were hard to sell. The demand was not nearly equal to the supply. At noon there were still numbers of loads unsold, and the buyers had disappeared. Some of the loads brought only 70 cents per bag. Single bags were in a few instances sold for 75 cents. "Potatoes will be worth some money before the new ones come in," said a farmer. "The new crop is going to be late. There will not be many old potatoes about when the new ones do reach the consumer."

The wedding on Tuesday last, in St. James Anglican Church, of C. Garfield McCormick, of A. McCormick & Sons, grocer, to Miss Lewella Mason, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Mason, of this city, was quite a fashionable event.

Strawberries are beginning to come in freely and by the end of the week price will probably get away down.

The baseball match at Springbank Park, on Wednesday afternoon between the butchers and the grocers was won by the latter by the score of 9 to 5 runs.

M. J. Laby, grocer, was quietly married last week to Miss Jenkins, of the Ingersoll Packing Co.'s office here.

Last week local wholesalers quoted a reduced price list on canned goods and promise to make a further reduction if the crops and pack warrant it. No. 1 group tomatoes are quoted at 85c and No. 2 at 82½c; corn, 77½c and 75c; peas, 80c and 82½c; strawberries and raspberries at $1.35 per dozen as compared with $1.90, last year's opening quotation.

INGERSOLL.

June 23.—The fruit outlook in this section is regarded as the most promising in years. The weather has been all that could be desired for the maturing of the strawberries and they are now beginning to ripen splendidly. As yet, however, only a small quantity have found their way onto the market, but possibly by the latter part of the week they will be plentiful. It is not long since the price of strawberries used to drop as low as five cents a box and many a housewife is anxiously waiting for a return to that figure. Some merchants scout the idea of the fruit dropping to this figure this year, but none too strong arguments are advanced why the price should remain high. Supply and demand must be recognized as the governing factors of the market, and from present indications the supply will exceed that of recent years. Then again, while strawberries are a favorite fruit, they are regarded by many as dear, at almost any price, owing to the shrinkage that follows cooking. This being true, if the price is kept up many will doubtless give the preference to other fruit which their judgment tells them is more in keeping with economic methods. Canadian berries, and especially from the Leamington district, are now being sold here. The quality is good and the demand has been keen. Absolutely first quality berries are still bringing 15c a box, although others of good quality are selling at two for a quarter and in some instances ten cents a box.

One of the first important matters to be dealt with by the retail merchants since reorganization is the town by-law regulating the fees of pedlers and hawkers and transient salesmen who dispose of their wares on the market square. At the meeting of the council on Monday night a deputation from the Retail Merchants' Association was present and requested that the by-law regulating these fees be amended. The deputation which was composed of John J. McLeod, grocer, R. N. Thurtell, druggist, T. N. Dunn, Theo. Wilson, hardware merchants, and W. I. Hogarth, grocer, urged the council to give their request careful consideration. The deputation emphasized their grievance by pointing out that they were subject to comparatively heavy taxation; that they had heavy every day expenses, while the pedlers and hawkers did not pay licenses in proportion. As a consequence they felt they were being done an injustice and contended that the fees should be increased. They requested that the fee for selling on the market, which is invariably the method of the slick gentry known in the vernacular as "flim-flammers" should be increased from $2 to $15 a day. That the fee for peddling on foot be increased to $50 a year and for peddling with horse and vehicle, $100. The deputation received the assurance of the Mayor and Reeve that the matter was one that would receive early consideration.

In passing the grocery store of W. I. Hogarth during recent days not a few persons looked at the door and inwardly remarked what a pity that the fine glass in the door was broken. Even one business man upon close examination did not "tumble" to the joke until the countenances of others began to brighten. The deception was caused by a rather ingenious manner of cutting a package put out by a breakfast food company. The box was so cut as to create the impression that it was protruding through a hole in the window. A portion of the box was pasted onto each side of the window, the joint being so well made as to create the impression that it was the whole box that was protruding. From the portion of the box on the outside of the window were drawn very distinct chalk lines which created the impression that the glass had been shattered. The plan was a good advertisement for all parties concerned.

BRACEBRIDGE.

June 23.—The Bracebridge Board of Trade some years ago was a very active and useful organization for the upbuilding of the town. Then nearly all important questions came before that body of practical business men who thoroughly thrashed out questions in such a way that the ratepayer could elect or reject as desired. At that time the Board of Trade influenced the council to protect the merchant against the peddling nuisance, secured the early closing movement, favored and was successful in bringing in several manufacturing industries. Now that influence has become dormant. What is the reason? Our town needs more electrical power involving a large amount of public money. We need more manufacturers. We need a complete sewer system and none can handle these questions like the merchants who compose the Board of Trade.

W. J. Hanna, of Port Carling, was a visitor to town on Saturday. Mr. Hanna reports trade good and says tourists are arriving up the lakes in large numbers.

The first Canadian strawberries reached town on Saturday in large quantities and the quality being good they sold quickly for prices asked.

Notes from the Maritime Provinces and Quebec

Large Cargo of Sugar and Molasses Arrives at Halifax — Fruit Industry in Nova Scotia Reaches Large Proportions— Trade Conditions Reviving.

HALIFAX.

June 22. — Jobbers report business brisk in mostly all lines of groceries. The markets are well stocked and good orders are coming in. Collections are reported to be fully up to the average. Canned goods are in good demand and sales are quite heavy. The jobbers have ample stocks on hand to tide them over the season. During the winter months the trade in canned goods was not quite as good as usual, but of late there has been a marked improvement. Prices in most lines are fairly steady.

There has been a decline of one cent per pound in the price of cheese, but other lines are steady. Rolled oats can be bought cheaper in Halifax than at the mills. This may seem strange, but it is nevertheless true. To-day rolled oats are selling here for $5.75, while at the mills they are quoted at $6.00. Provisions continue firm in prices, and in consequence of the high price of pork, sales are not large. The price of pork ranges from $23.00 to $25.00, and beef about $17.00. Hams are in good demand at 15 to 16 cents, and bacon (rolls) at 13½ cents.

Sugars are quoted as follows:—Extra standard granulated, $4.40; No. 1 yellow, $4.20, and Austrian at $4.30. Molasses is selling at 35 cents for fancy Barbadoes in puncheons, 37 cents in tierces, and 38 cents in barrels. The trade in molasses at present is brisk.

With by far the largest cargo of sugar and molasses ever brought to Halifax, between her hatches, the big British freighter, Crown of Galicia arived here this week from Demerara and discharged her cargo at the Woodside sugar refinery, at Dartmouth. In all she had over 6,500 tons of sugar aboard as well as a considerable quantity of molasses. The steamer's cargo was made up as follows: Sugar, 43,915 bags, 220 barrels and 15 hogsheads; molasses, 2,324 puncheons, and 369 barrels.

Early this week a party of Halifax business men, mostly wholesale grocers, left for the Alaska-Yukon Exposition. The party included James Billman, formerly of the grocery firm of Billman and Chisholm, J. Frank Crome, grocer, Evan Thompson and Mr. Malcolm; A. C. Pyke, another wholesale grocer also left for Seattle, on his way to attend the Wholesale Grocers' convention which is being held in Victoria. Mr. Pyke is secretary of the Halifax Wholesale Grocers' Guild and with Mr. Crome and Mr. Murray, of New Glasgow are the delegates from Nova Scotia to the Victoria convention.

Jobbers in fruit and vegetables report trade brisk. Since the warm weather has set in there is a considerable improvement in trade, especially in enlarged sales of the principal fruits.

The price of oranges has been advanced slightly and are now quoted as follows:—Jamaica's repacked, $6.00; California navels, $3.25 to $3.50, and Valencia's from $4.75 to $6.50. Tomatoes have dropped from $4.00 to $3.00, and potatoes are up ten cents, being now quoted at $1.75 per bag. Turnips are $1.25 per bag, parsnips, $2.00, and beets $1.75. Bermuda onions are selling for $1.50 per box. Egyptians at 3½ cents per pound and American cabbage at $2.00 per crate.

Representative Halifax business men know more and better appreciate at its true worth, the almost inestimable value of the fruit region of Nova Scotia, because of the excursion on the Merchants' Limited through the Annapolis Valley, this week. The excursion was inauguarated by the Board of Trade. On the trip they saw within the country traversed a section eighty miles long by seven miles wide, which no like area in Canada can equal in volume of apple production and which with the exception of some limited localities in British Columbia, is not excelled in scientific farming. This is the opinion of A. McNeill, the Dominion Government authority on fruit culture.

NEWCASTLE, N.B.

June 22.—Andrew Dunn, for the last 32 years general dealer in Harcourt, N.B., died recently, aged 81 years and 9 months. He was the last of the nine children of Robert Dunn, a native of Dumfries, Scotland. He was born near Harcourt, and when young removed to Chipman where he and his brothers engaged in the lumber business. In 1876 he returned to Harcourt and set up a general store. He was noted for his honesty in trade and consistency in religion, for his attitude towards temperance reform. His daughter, Miss Jessie, succeeds him in his business. Mr. Dunn's example of business integrity has done much to raise the standard of mercantile ethics in eastern New Brunswick.

The wedding of Mayor Miller, of Miller Bros., grocers, to Miss Jennie M. Bell, of Newcastle was solemnized recently.

NELSON C. GRAY DEAD.

Nelson C. Gray died in Montreal on Sunday, at the age of 51 years. Mr. Gray was widely known in grocery circles in Montreal as a manufacturer of grocers' sundries. For many years he was associated with his father in the lumber business, but in 1905 he entered the grocery field and conducted a small manufacturing business until ill-health compelled him to give it up.

British Columbia Rates on Canned Products Lessened—Strawberry Crop Better Than at First Expected — Overstock of Australian Onions—Change in Jobbers' Terms in Regina.

VANCOUVER.

June 22.—The scarcity of potatoes and the high prices that have obtained for some time past has resulted in the importation of several carloads from Ontario. Most of them have been brought in from Prince Edward Island, and are to be found not only in Vancouver but also in the interior. Hunter, MacMicking & Co., had a carload arrive which sold for $55 a ton wholesale. New potatoes now are two cents dearer than the old, and it will not be long now before they will have the market.

Reports from the districts on Vancouver Island are that the crop of strawberries will be somewhat better than anticipated. Since warm weather set in the berries have come along fine, but now rain is needed to prevent them being shrivelled up by the sun. Had the crop been a large one, it would not have been sufficient to have supplied the demand that has come from the territory east of the Rocky Mountains. There is hardly more than enough available to supply the demand in the large coast cities, and the surplus will be limited. Large orders came through from the prairie, but with few berries these could not be filled in entirety. The quality this year is said to be a little better than in former seasons.

As a result of the objections raised by the canners of the Okanagan to the high rates on canned products and fruit, which were such that eastern manufacturers had an advantage in this market, a reduction has been made by the C.P.R. This tariff is not yet to hand, but the new rate that will take effect will be of great assistance to the new industry in this Province. The rate that has been obtained from Penticton was 71c, while from Summerland, Peachland and Kelowna it was 69c. The rate from Montreal and Toronto was $1.05. The new schedule will be 64c from Penticton and Summerland, and 63c from Peachland and Kelowna. These rates will be on carload lots, and in cases where two points combine to ship a car, local rates will obtain between the two points of shipment.

The Wood Lake Canning Company of Oyama, B.C., an Okanagan point, has begun the construction of its building, and expects to have the plant in operation about August 1st. The officers of the company are: President, John K. Ollis; vice-president, A. C. Jones; managing director, E. Trask; secretary-treasurer, S. Street, and Messrs. Towgood and Allison, directors.

J. A. Ruddick, Dominion dairy and cold storage commissioner, who has been in the province, has gone south to Oregen and California to study the methods employed there for cooling and shipping fruit. While in the interior of the province, Mr. Ruddick interviewed fruit-growers regarding the enforcement of the Fruit Marks Act, pointing out how the observance of these regulations are necessary to the estabishment of a high standard and incidental to securing fair prices. It has been contended that this Act does not apply to imported fruit, but the minister of justice has ruled that it does. Of course, United States packers cannot be made in their own country to grade and mark their fruit according to the requirements of the Act, but the department can insist on it being so marked and graded before it is distributed in this country. This will put the responsibility on the importer, and inspectors will see that the law is enforced. Mr. Ruddick also stated that his department was doing considerable quiet work in British Columbia to encourage the introduction of the best herds for dairying purposes, and individual milk tests were being made of the product at Ottawa. Moreover, the laws respecting the branding of dairy products are being enforced. He said it was an offence to label as "creamery butter" an article that did not originate in a creamery, and likewise to offer substitutes for the real article.

James Beaumont, of Ipswich, England, is so much impressed with the possibilities of fruit growing in this province that he has taken options on forty acres of fruit land at Arrow Lake and ten acres on Kootenay Lake. He has one son a ranch owner in that district and two more who are about to engage in the industry. He reports that the English apple tree does exceptionally well there, and he brought out from England 700 yearling trees of different varieties, namely, Cox's orange pippin, Gravenstein, and Warren's King of the Pippins.

Agnew & Company, grocers, Rossland B.C., have an orange tree in their store which is attracting much attention. It is about two feet in height and grew from a seed planted by Herbert Agnew about two years ago. Mr. Agnew's next experiment will be with bananas.

James Roy, secretary of the Vancouver Retail Grocers' Association, who attended the convention at Portland, as the representative from British Columbia, repots that nothing could exceed the hospitality tendered to him by the members of the National Grocers' Association. The Mayor of Portland was unable to attend the banquet given to the delegates by the Portland Commercial Club and Mr. Roy was asked to fill the gap with a speech. When he rose, the orchestra played, "God Save the King," with every man standing, and when the strains closed, the hall re-echoed with the shout: "What's the matter with Vancouver?"

"Vancouver's all right!" "It took me by surprise," Mr. Roy told The Grocer, "but it made me feel at home." He came on to Vancouver because the Ohio State delegation of 108 went through on its special train, not stopping at Seattle to attend a banquet given by the local association there. The visitors were met here by Luther McTaggart, president of the Association in Vancouver, and he and Mr. Roy showed them the sights and beauties of the city. Twenty-six delegates from New York and Boston, another party arrived two days later. "My estimation of grocers as a whole has risen one hundred per cent," Mr. Roy said. "I have heard many speeches at banquets, but none were better than what I heard at Portland, and also at the convention. It shows that to be a successful man of business these days one must be intelligent and possess a fair education." Taking opportunity of the fact that representatives were present at the convention from all the Pacific Coast states, a Pacific Coast Association was formed. Mr. Roy, who was present, asked if British Columbia might join, and when it was put to the meeting, there was just one loud cheer of approval. He spoke for Vancouver, saying that it would undoubtedly be a member.

SASKATOON.

June 22.—The Board of Trade convention which has come to a close was attended by many of the merchants in the city.

C. J. Greene has gone on a three weeks' business trip to Woodstock, N.B.

Currie Bros. have opened a branch store on 20th Street West, where a big stock of groceries and dry goods are kept on hand.

Alex Lloy has moved his grocery store from Avenue A to 20th Street, which he considers a better business location. A basement was dug and a cement foundation put in previous to moving the building.

J. F. Cairns has arranged to let his staff have a weekly half holiday during the summer months. The store will not be closed, but the clerks will get away as arranged amonst themselves. A petition to the city council by the retail clerks of the city for a weekly half-day off has not yet been successful.

Roy Taylor of Winnipeg has purchased the business of James Hourie, Prince Albert, and will open an up-to-date bakery and confectionery store. The premises have been renovated and a fresh stock of groceries put in.

CALGARY.

June 22.—As might be easily guessed, the most discussed subject in the West to-day is "crops." Since the warm weather began vegetation has simply rushed out of the ground. Rain has been fairly abundant generally, although in this particular district a little would be very welcome at the present time. As, at this time of the year, we have nearly twenty hours of sunlight out of the twenty-four, whence comes the name "Sunny Alberta," it will be understood what progress crops of all kinds make during the month of June.

Business in all lines is active. Building is brisk, all labor being fully employed at remunerative wages. The retailers, particularly, are pleased with the prospects for continued prosperity. The market is now well supplied with early vegetables locally grown. Old potatoes are becoming scarce and the dealers hesitate to bring in further supplies from the east, as the weather is too warm to insure their arriving in good condition. In the meantime supplies on hand, and such as can be procured within easy shipping distance, will practically all be required, so that new stock will come on a bare market, and will, in consequence, bring good prices.

There is an overstock of Australian onions in this market. The jobbers bought too heavily and are now sacrificing the stock in anticipation of new crop Washingtons, which will be available early in July. The price of these will be low; they will likely retail about 3c per lb. Hay is higher than ever before, native selling at $20 per ton. A gentleman from Walla Walla, Washington, recently purchased some two sections of land about twenty miles east of Calgary. He has arranged to have the land fenced, and he says he will simply let the grass grow, cut it and sell it for hay. He expects that three crops will pay for his land, including the cost of fencing, cutting, curing and marketing the hay. People living in this province scarcely realize how rapidly the land is being brought under cultivation, and as winter feeding of stock is coming to be more the order of things hay will be required in greater quantities, and will consequently, bring profitable prices to the grower. It is hoped, however, that the price will be considerable lower when the new crop is available.

The business men of Calgary have devised a new method for becoming more familiar with our neighboring towns. Last week a special excursion train was run to Macleod, a growing town on the south line. Stops are made at all the small towns along the route and greetings and good wishes exchanged. Yesterday a similar excursion was run to Red Deer on the north line. This is a splendid idea, as these places draw practically all their supplies from Calgary, and these visits serve to create the most friendly feeling between them.

REGINA.

June 22.—The clerks are very much disappointed owing to their being unable to obtain the consent of the McCarthy Supply Co. to the Wednesday half-holiday this year. This will not be granted by the local merchants, as unless all agreed to give this, none of them would, and we understand with the exception of the firm mentioned, the others in the western part of the city agreed to give this the same as last year. Mr. McCarthy, whose store is nearer the east end than any of the others and so comes in more direct competition with the stores of "foreigners," declined to give it this year, on account of previous trouble he has had with these foreigners keeping their stores open when all the others are closed. This naturally took away some of his business. Mr. McCarthy had a letter in one of the local papers this week explaining his stand.

Real summer weather has been prevailing here for the past couple of weeks and as a result all kinds of green fruits and vegetables are in demand and moving freely. The fruit jobbers report that they are finding business exceptionally good. Butter and eggs are coming in plentifully and jobbers are paying 18c, Regina, for eggs, and from 13c to 16c for butter, according to quality. Several shipments of print butter your correspondent has seen recently arrived in very poor condition, owing to their having been shipped in ordinary box cars, and the hot weather has caused them to get very soft and run together. A great many of the country merchants do not seem to realize what might be made out of their produce if it was looked after properly. In conversation with the manager of one of the Winnipeg produce houses, he said the poorest butter he received came from this country. He claimed there was not 15 per cent of the shipments which would grade No. 1 quality. With a little care on the merchants' part in separating the butter according to quality and seeing that it is put into nothing but clean packages which will not taint the butter, this reputation might be remedied to quite an extent.

The local grocery jobbers report an important change in terms, which, they have made in accordance with an agreement entered into by the members of the Winnipeg Wholesale Grocers' Guild. According to this, practically everything in staple groceries are now net thirty days. We understand that this arrangement has been agreed to by all the wholesale grocers in the West. One of the reasons advanced for putting it into effect was that last year most of the houses had a large increase in their turnover, but their profits were very disappointing. It is rapidly working out now that the jobber has to pay practically cash for everything he buys and the general principle adopted by the jobbers is to encourage their customers to only buy sufficient stock to carry them from month to month. Jobbing houses are now situated conveniently to most points in the West and the old habit of an ordinary country merchant buying a car of groceries, which will last him from five to six months, is rapidly dying out and the merchants are realizing the advantage to them of buying smaller and keeping their stocks fresher. Another general movement adopted by the Guild is a charge for packing. Heretofore, some of the jobbers have been charging for this and others have not, but now all have agreed on a uniform charge for repacked goods in a sack of less than 50 pounds, 8 cents; from 50 to 100 pounds, 10 cents. This being just the cost of the sacks. All repacked cases are to be charged for at 15 cents each.

On interviewing the different jobbing houses doing business from Regina, your correspondent finds they all report a very satisfactory business and are looking forward to a busy season once the crop is assured.

Among the outside merchants noticed in the city this week were: J. Balfour, of Balfour Bros., Lumsden; Mr. Becker, of Sedley; F. M. Morris, of Belle Plaine, and Mr. Suehring, of Suehring & Foote, Craik. Among the grocery visitors in the city this week were: K. Sinclair, representing the Gold Standard Manufacturing Co., Winnipeg; Mr. Mason and Mr. Marshall, of Mason & Hickey, Winnipeg; Mr. Roberts, of the W. M. Lowney Co.; Mr. Owen, of the Quaker Canning Co., and Howard Ranking, of the Codville Co.

WINNIPEG.

B. F. Newer & Son have sold their grocery business to Lindsay & Majorison of this city. Mr. Newer came to this city from Dakota one year ago.

The store of E. Wiggle in the north end of the city has been closed, and it is stated that the proprietor suddenly left the city.

MANITOBA MARKETS

(Corrected by Telegraph).

Winnipeg, June 24.

This week the trade has taken on a decided summer aspect. Camp lovers and resort fiends are leaving the city by dozens and a few retailers are noticing the change. The weather for a number of days has been very hot and this condition has created an increased demand for fresh fruits and vegetables and lime juice drinks. The wholesalers claim that their trade is on a par with that of any previous year, yet they are not as busy as they were a few weeks ago. It is expected that the wholesale output will see a large increase after the local exhibition.

Hood River strawberries are plentiful on the market at 25 cents per box retail. This price is too high to induce heavy selling for preserving, but it is rumored that the price will be down next week. The market on canned goods is still weak and that on cereals remains firm.

EGGS—There is a remarkable demand for eggs this season. Manitoba poultry houses can scarcely supply the market. The price is as low as it will be this summer. To-day they are jobbing at 20 cents per dozen.

BUTTER—Creamery is declining somewhat. The retailers are paying from 21 to 22 cents per pound to-day. The dairy butter is jobbing more freely at about 17 cents per pound for No. 1. The poorer quality can be had as low as 14 cents per pound.

Merits of the Cash System Carefully Explained

Port Carling General Merchants Educate Their Customers by Inoffensive and Reasonably Written Circulars—Give Special Inducements to Those Who Pay Cash — Collect Debts of Over Three Months Standing With Interest.

Many merchants throughout the Dominion are anxious to institute the cash system in connection with their businesses, but are afraid to do so for fear of offending some of their good customers. W. Hanna & Co., of Port Carling, Muskoka, Ont., have worked out a plan of their own which has proved satisfactory since it was established a little more than a year ago.

They pursued the reasonable course of pointing out by circular to their customers the contrast between the cash and credit system; why it was more desirable to do a cash business and to what confusion credit leads. They worked on the supposition that their patrons were reasonable, and they reasoned with them. They concluded their educative letter by offering inducements to those who paid cash and thereby give the cash buyer the advantage over the credit buyer.

The circular, which is self-explanatory, is as follows:

"CASH vs. CREDIT.—For the past twenty-five wears we have had these two on trial and we wish to tell you of our verdict.

"In the first place what is cash and what is credit business? You come into our store and ask for a dollar's worth of sugar. We hand it to you and you give us a dollar in legal tender. You have exchanged your money for sugar, and we have exchanged our sugar for money. You have got what you wanted. and we have got what we wanted, both are satisfied, and the transaction is closed for all time. That is a cash transaction. Another customer comes in. asks us to charge it to him. We believe his credit is good and hand him over our goods and a bill showing the amount we have charged him in our books. He gives us in exchange—nothing. We have no acknowledgement of the debt from him or any written promise to pay. Our bookkeeper then puts the entry through the various processes of bookkeeping, and at the end of the month renders him a statement of the amount, along with perhaps other items. He may not be in a position to pay it then, and at the end of the next month we send him another statement, and for three, six or nine months as the case may be, we have to include the amount in our monthly balance and send him a statement each month. Then perhaps he pays it and we have to put another entry through our books and credit his account with the payment to balance it. Or perhaps he turns out to be a 'dead beat' and never pays it. That is a credit transaction. You can easily see which of the two ways of doing business we would prefer.

Change of Conditions.

"Of course credit has a certain place in business and during the past we have found to a certain extent that, here in Muskoka, it has been a necessity and it has been our lot to 'carry over' many a man until he was able to 'square up.' This condition has gradually been changing the last few years and people are now better able to pay cash than they used to be, and as a general rule settlements are more prompt and shorter terms of credit are asked for. On the other hand we have found that credit has often been abused. Men run accounts that they are not able to pay and some without the intention of paying. In this way we have lost hundreds of dollars and have dozens of accounts on our books that we would be glad to sell for 25 cents on the dollar. Our experience in the past has been that when goods are charged they are paid for, if at all, in anywhere from a few days to six or eight years. It is safe to say that no man would ask us for goods on those terms, and that if he did we would not give them to him. But the fact remains that in nearly every case the term of credit exceeds what it was expected or promised to be.

The Only Safe Way.

"Our conclusions then may be summed up in a few words. First, that it costs a great deal more in time, trouble, worry and money to look after our credit than our cash business. Second, that there are many long delays in payment and many losses from non-payment in the credit business, none of which occur in the cash trade. And finally that from our standpoint selling for cash is the only safe way to do business. In fact, we believe that, supposing we were doing a business one-third credit and two-thirds cash, it would pay us better to do a quarter less total business if it were all cash. So much for our side of the question.

"But also from the purchaser's standpoint we believe that cash pays best. The merchant can give you better value for cash; you have no debts to worry about, you are not bothered with 'dunners,' and you are not likely to buy what you don't want.

"Now we believe the time has come for us if not to cut out altogether the credit business, to at least curtail it very much and put it on an entirely different basis to the cash trade. So we beg to make an

"As an inducement for you to pay cash and to give the cash buyer the advantage that is due him over the credit buyer, on and after April 1st, 1908, we will offer you a discount of 2 per cent. on all cash purchases in our store at any time. Or when your cash purchases amount to $25 we will give you one dollar's worth of goods free. To keep track of your cash purchases we will give you a printed cash register receipt with each purchase, and when these amount to $25 and are returned to us, we will give you $1 in goods.

"Now about credit. We consider that no man has a right to ask credit who cannot give good security, if required, for all he owes and that three months is quite long enough for any account to run without settlement. When we buy goods from our wholesaler, for a large proportion of them we have to pay spot cash in a few days from date of invoice. On some lines we get a small discount for net cash payment or are allowed a little longer time in which to pay without any discount. Then if we cannot pay when due we have to give our notes with interest. Now we propose making this same arrangement with our customers. We will give you the discounts for cash that we have already mentioned. If a man's credit is good and he can put up ample security for what he asks from us, we will give him credit for a limited amount and for a period not to exceed three months. If the account is not paid by the end of three months then he must give us his note, with interest, for the amount. Any further credit will then have to be arranged personally and will depend entirely on circumstances. Don't you think this is reasonable? We are going to make this a rule of our business and we respectfully request those who have accounts standing with us, to sign and return the notes we will send them.

Offence to no One.

"Before we close let us say we are sending this letter to all our customers as far as possible, and we hope no one will take offence, but will apply to themselves only that part that concerns them.

"In conclusion we wish to take this opportunity to thank all our friends and customers for their generous support in the past; to assure them that it is, and will always be, our desire to supply them with only the best quality of goods at the lowest possible price, and to remind them that they can help us materially in doing this by endeavouring always to pay cash."

Low Prices for This Year's Canned Strawberries

Wholesalers and Packers Tell Why Prices Have Been High During Past Two Years—Poor Crop in 1907—Part Played by Fads of the Public—Some Strawberries Have Been Carried Over.

Upon the months of June and July depend to a large extent the canned fruit and vegetable packs in Ontario and just now canners, wholesalers and retailers are interested in the crops.

It is undoubtedly a fact that the strawberry crop will be a heavy one. The weather has been favorable, the vines are in a healthy condition and the quality of the fruit will be good.

This would indicate that there ought naturally to be a large pack of strawberries this year, but according to a representative of one firm this will not be the case.

"We still have a large number of last year's pack on hand and do not expect that it will be necessary to preserve more than just what our orders call for," he said to The Grocer. "The pack last year was more than necessary for our requirements and we do not desire to carry much of an over-stock into next year."

The Grocer's informant was of the opinion that strawberries would therefore be cheap this year, both raw and canned. Since the crop was good and since there would be a less quantity canned than usual there would be more sold from grower to wholesaler and hence low prices would prevail.

Some wholesalers in Canada claim that the sales of canned strawberries and raspberries have fallen off considerably during the past couple of years, and complain that packers have been responsible for this condition by keeping up prices.

A careful consideration of this, however, brings to the limelight some interesting facts which indicate that crop conditions, consumers' fads and quality in tins had much to do with the comparatively high prices.

One wholesaler on being interviewed stated that while raspberries were dearer during the past two seasons and that this curtailed sales to some extent, he believed that the crops were responsible. In 1907 the raspberry and strawberry crops were not successful. The consequence was berries were dear and prices went up in the neighborhood of $1.90.

He knew for a fact that some packers could not obtain the berries they required from the growers and that they had bought on the Toronto fruit market from wholesalers paying 15c a box. He did not believe they could have packed and sold them at much less than they did and at the same time make any profit. Last year prices went down and this year he believed they would be down as low as $1.40. Therefore while prices have been high, he considered the packers were at least partially justified by circumstances in maintaining them high.

A Peculiar Fad.

A Toronto commission merchant in close touch with the situation stated that the crops in 1907 were not productive of any too good results and packers couldn't get the berries. For what they did get they paid a high price. Last year growers had not forgotten all about their losses in selling the berries of the previous year to canners before they were on the vine and they put their prices up. He further stated that it was a peculiar fact that consumers shifted from year to year from one fruit to another. A particular preserve became a fad and everybody wanted it and he thought that the small sales may have had some connection with this.

Cost of Manufacture.

The Grocer interviewed a representative of one of the largest canning concerns in Canada on the question and he practically covered the same ideas as have been referred to. Two years ago strawberries were scarce and the packers couldn't get them. They were forced to pay 10, 12 and 15c per box and this together with the cost of the sugar had much to do with the prices. It became impossible for them to place a strawberry on the market which would retail at 15 cents. He also said that much better tins are now being used than a few years ago. This also had something to do with prices.

The supply was, however, the chief item in fixing the prices and he claimed that this year strawberries would sell at a low figure. In fact he mentioned that his company had quoted $1.40 net at the factory.

Poor crops and better cans were given as the cause for the high prices of strawberries and raspberries during the last two years by another wholesaler. Some years ago he said that the cans used were so poor that the berries did not retain their color and flavor. Now much better cans were used.

Then "the quantity always governs the price" and this aided in keeping up the prices. This year, however, he was certain that 15 cent strawberries would be realized in view of the heavy crops. The fad element, he believed, had also a great deal to do with sales. Some years people want prunes and they must have them, no matter what the price. Probably they turn to apricots next, and the same might be said of canned fruits.

From the above it will therefore be observed that cheap strawberries will be the rule this year and that the high prices of the past two years have been due more or less to crop conditions.

THAT SCHOOL BOOK CONTRACT.

The Retail Grocers' Association of London has passed a resolution condemning the awarding of the contract for printing the Ontario school books to the T. Eaton Company as being unfair to the retail dealers throughout the province. There is just cause for complaint in this matter, but, so far as the contract is concerned, the time for complaint is gone. The only question remaining is, "What is the government doing to prevent the Eaton company making use of the schoolbooks for advertising purposes?" As to this reasonable assurance is certainly called for, and ought not to be withheld.—Brantford Expositor.

HINTS TO BUYERS.

Information supplied by sellers but for which the editors of The Grocer do not necessarily hold themselves responsible.

The F. F. Dalley Company, Ltd., Buffalo, N.Y., will move into their new factory on July 1st. It is one of the most modern equipped and up-to-date factories in the United States. The company has been obliged to enlarge their premises three times during the past three years, on account of the increase in their business. The present site was purchased at a cost of $50,000 and they have spared no money in making extensive improvements, so that they now feel that they have a factory that will accommodate them for all time.

Snowdon & Ebbitt, agents in Ontario and Quebec for Rowats pickles and olives, report excellent sales of the new 12 oz. bottle of pickles Rowats are now offering the trade. This bottle, which retails at 10c, is packed in casks or cases, and contains mixed pickles, chow-chow, gherkins, onions or pickled walnuts, as the buyer may wish.

W. Young, commission merchant, is introducing on the Ontario market canned codfish put up by the Newfoundland Fresh Fish Packing Co., of Fortune, Nfld. He is making his headquarters in Toronto.

The Allredie Pure Food Company, which formerly did business in Bridgewater, N.S., is now being reorganized, and will in future manufacture Allready pudding and other specialties in Montreal. The factory is now being moved to the larger centre. The greater portion of the stock in the new company has been subscribed already.

Laporte, Martin & Co., Montreal, once more call attention to the fine list of agencies which the firm has for Canada. The goods which they are handling on account of principals in other countries, represent the highest value for the money, and the large sale mostly all these specialties enjoy is the best testimony of the satisfaction they always give. The advertisers are in a position to give quotations and all information to interested parties.

Chewing Gum and its Origin—Sap Taken from Central America Tree Much Like Maple Syrup—Species of Rubber—Process of Manufacture—History of Chicle.

(By C. R. Somerville.)

CHEWING GUM. — The gum called chicle, (pronounced chic-lee) is gathered from the chicle trees, which grow in the tropical parts of Mexico and Central America. They are found mostly in the foot hills of the large mountains in Southern Mexico in from the Gulf Coast, but not on the Pacific Coast. They extend inland to Central Mexico and across British Honduras and Guatamala.

The tree in appearance is like a Canadian elm and, like other forest trees, the limbs are high up. The wood is hard and is used for railway ties and furniture purposes. When made into railway ties holes have to be bored for the spike as the wood is so hard it is impossible to drive a spike into it.

The principal use of the tree, however, is for the production of chicle gum, which is the basis of the principal chewing gums on the Canadian and U. S. markets. For this purpose the trees are tapped during the wet season or immedately thereafter. The tapping is very severe. Commencing at the bottom a cut is made similar to the old spile cut used in tapping maple trees. In this is inserted a piece of palm leaf, which carries the sap into a receptacle. Then from this opening at the bottom, the tree is cut in herring-bone style up twenty, thirty or forty feet, according to the height of the tree. The cut reaching over half way round the tree; and in less than twenty-four hours the sap is all extracted. One tapping so exhausts a tree that it takes from seven to eight years to recover, and sometimes it kills it altogether, especially when the person tapping does not understand his business.

Preparing Sap for Market.

The sap as it comes from the tree is perfectly white and of the consistency of milk. This is boiled in large iron kettles and when the moisture is evaporated to a sufficient degree the sap is poured into moulds to harden, when it is ready for packing in sacks. The "chicle-arros," or experts in tapping chicle trees, with their helpers do the work up to this point, and they keep moving their camp and kettles as the trees are exhausted. The work of getting the chicle out to shipping points is a serious consideration. As a rule the country is rough, and, owing to the trees not standing retapping for seven or eight years, it does not pay to make any road, thus the work of gathering is all the time being pushed farther back from shipping points.

The carrying to railway points or river points is done on mules and it is marvelous how these small animals get up and down hills and mountains and over a trail that is almost impossible for a man to get through. The packing of a load on a mule for a trip of this kind is a fine art. (A mule load is about 200 pounds.) It has to be secured fore and aft and around so that it cannot move. During the wet season the poor mule is sliding down hill on his haunches or else climbing by winding paths back and forth, which require a patience for which the Mexican mule is proverbial. Sometimes he comes to grief and goes down all in a heap. The load then has to be removed and the mule repacked amid the choice Spanish language of the Mozos in charge. This kind of freightage makes the cost very high, and is always increasing the farther back they go. A great deal of Mexican chicle is carried over a hundred miles on mule-back. At the railway points or water points the goods are received by purchasing agents or dealers and it is weighed, repacked and shipped to destination in Canada or United States.

The various gum manufacturers on receiving the crude material have their own special process of curing and cleaning, extracting the bark and other foreign substances and preparing for the cooking kettles, all of which are of course, secrets of the trade. In general, however, the sacks of chicle, when received at the factory contain from fifteen to twenty lumps of about five pounds each. This chicle, which is really a species of rubber, greatly resembles a bladder of putty, which has become hardened. The lumps are broken, crushed and pulverized; then sorted over and cleaned. Various processes of cleaning have been tried but the old slow method of hand picking has so far proved best. Passing now ready for making into gum. A quantity of chicle is weighed and placed in a revolving copper mixing kettle in which steam is admitted. The heat of the kettle and the moisture of the steam soon soften the chicle to a brown doughy mass, when powdered sugar is added which is ground into the gum by the mixing arc, which constantly turns over every bit of the dough. A proportionate quantity of flavoring extract is then thrown in and within a few minutes the gum is ready for the pressing machine, two huge steel rollers pressing it out to the thickness required. Another press marks off the gum into the sizes in which it is placed for sale. The final stage is the wrapping, first in tissue and then in the outer paper covering, before being placed in the boxes ready for shipment.

Much Money Spent for Gum.

Probably some $500,000 is spent for gum in Canada every year, and to make the amount required it is estimated something like 25,000 pounds of chicle is imported annually. This chicle is worth about 35c a pound. According to the blue book of British Honduras, last year over one and a half million pounds was exported from that colony and two million pounds will be a fair estimate for this year. This includes considerable Mexican chicle brought over the border, inland, and shipped from a British Honduras port. It is difficult to get shipment figures from Mexican ports, but the estimate is about five million pounds.

Like many other articles the use of chicle for the making of gum was discovered somewhat accidentally. A quantity of this chicle found its way to New York twenty-five years ago, to be examined and experimented with. It lay on the docks for a year, for it was considered a poor rubber. Some boys playing around found it made good chewing gum. The fact was mentioned to Adams, the big gum man. He tested it; found it worked well; and then he began his campaign of advertising, which soon placed chicle in the forefront of gums. Up to that time chewing gum had been made from tamarac and pine gum.

For the information on the manufacture of gum contained in the above article The Grocer is indebted to J. B. Bradshaw, Toronto.

QUEBEC MARKETS

Montreal, June 24, 1909.

Considerable interest is displayed this week in the rumors which have been going the rounds for several days past regarding the new canned goods prices. Actual quotations are expected any time now, but considerable speculation indulged in by the interested parties made the subject one of importance. Lower figures are assured, but what level prices will seek remains to be seen. The lines which the trade will appreciate very much at the cheaper prices are chiefly tomatoes, corn and strawberries. The latter will likely be quoted at a price enabling the retailer to offer them at 15c a tin once more. Canned fish are selling satisfactorily.

Sugar is unchanged since last week. Prices on California dried fruits have been quoted to brokers. Apricots have opened considerably higher, and are quite firm, but prunes and raisins are lower. Cleaned currants, scarce on spot, are firm, values being a little higher. Jobbers report a fair movement in molasses. New arrivals of Japan teas, few and far between, are quickly snapped up. Sales of cheap gunpowders and black are being made to many parties desiring Japans, which are not obtainable. This business is being done by the wholesalers. Beans and peas continue firm. Evaporated apples are steady.

Grocers are backward in giving orders for anything except for immediate requirement, owing largely to the fact that they wish to order canned goods at the same time as other lines, and these are too uncertain as to price to risk just now.

SUGAR—No changes worthy of note have occurred in the sugar market since last week. Prices remain unchanged with business fairly satisfactory.

TEA—Owing to the scarcity of Japans, wholesalers are filling numerous orders for cheap gunpowders and blacks, which, of late, have been in especial demand. The jobbers anticipate doing considerable business in these two lines until the arrival of the first new crop Japan teas in quantity. Meantime, reports from Japan indicate firm prices with a tendency toward an advance. Anything arriving is quickly taken up with little discussion over the price. Quotations on China teas from Shanghai and Foochow are expected shortly now. In Indians no samples of new teas, to speak of, have come forward yet.

DRIED FRUITS—Further interesting advices from California hold the attention of the brokers this week. Reliable reports would indicate the fact that apricots will be quite firm this year, owing to the limited yield there will be. Opening at a figure 2c above last year's first price the market for apricots advanced almost immediately, and is now quite strong. With not more than half of last year's small crop anticipated this season it would not be surprising to see continued strong feeling displayed by packers on the coast. Prunes have opened ⅛c to ¼c lower than last year. Raisins opened about ½c lower. The fact that freight rates on goods from the coast to the east have been advanced 10 p.c. since last year will result in importers having another factor to consider when making prices this season. The fact that only 5,000 tons of currants are now available for consumption, in Greece, outside of what is held under the Retention System, has firmed up the market a little. Cleaned currants are scarce locally, and a little firmer, 6¼c to 6½c being prevailing prices. Reports indicate a crop which will not be the best possible.

CANNED GOODS

MONTREAL—Anticipation of new prices attaches considerable interest to the situation in canned goods this week. Actual figures are expected some day early next week, from the wholesale houses to the retailers. For the time being some minor cuts are being made by holders of stock, but on the whole a firmness is noticeable in the market, pending advice re new quotations. It is an assured fact that lower figures will rule in nearly every instance. Tomatoes, corn, peas, strawberries, raspberries, will all be lower—just how low the figures will show when they are given out. With the exception of tomatoes and strawberries and raspberries, as stated herein some time ago, holdings are not large as a rule. Some wholesalers are completely out of stock, that is, they will barely have enough to carry them over to the new pack, while certain other houses have considerable holdings of some vegetables, notably tomatoes.

It is expected that the prices asked for strawberries and raspberries this year will be such as to enable the retailer to sell them over his counter at 15c a tin, as in the old days. This will be welcome news, and may result in a revival of the magnificent business which used to be done in these fruits. The general feeling in the trade in the past couple of years has been that prices asked for most staple lines of canned foods were too high. The possibility of reductions to a more reasonable level will be likely to awaken keen appreciation of the efforts of the packers. Meantime, the uncertainty regarding prices is affecting not only this market, but the general grocery situation as well. Canned goods help to make the desirable weight in making up an order, and retailers are not anxious to order anything but what is required immediately when they are in doubt about prices.

TORONTO — The general opinion among the brokers and wholesalers is that canned goods this year will be cheap.

Strawberries hold the centre of the stage just now and in some cases prices have been quoted which indicate that 15 cent strawberries will be sold this year by the retail trade. This is made possible by the splendid crop prospects. Some canners as well carried over stocks from last year.

Some prices have also been quoted on corn, tomatoes and peas which show decreases from last year. Whether these will be maintained or not is as yet only conjectural, but there is little doubt expressed that low prices will prevail.

Peas and raspberries have been pretty well sold out and not much has been left in first hands. It is a little early yet to express any opinion as to these crops. Corn, as a matter of fact, has been delayed in growth on account of the backward spring weather.

Just now business in canned goods is splendid and almost every order contains a list.

ONTARIO MARKETS

POINTERS—
Sugar—Steady.
Apricots—Prices to be higher.
Indian Teas—First sale held.
Beans—Diminished sales.

Toronto, June 24, 1909.

Outside of the canned goods conditions there are no features in connection with the markets. Prices are all likely to be out soon and in fact some have already been quoted which indicate that they will be low.

Brokers, in reporting on future California dried fruits, state that apricots will be higher and they believe prunes will also, while pears and raisins will be lower. Advices from the currant district in Greece tell of a three-day torrential rain. The weather has however recovered its equilibrium and fine weather is needed to prevent diseased plants. The opinion is advanced that the currant crop this year will be less by 10 to 15% than last year.

The first sale of Indian tea was held recently on the primary market with a good demand for finer qualities.

SUGAR—Local demand for sugar is disappointing. However, since the strawberry season will open up within a week or more sugar should be the leading article in the retail stores. The market is firm with no visible tendency. During the week New York refiners dropped prices and in 24 hours 500,000 bbls. was disposed of. They then came back to the old figures. The cause was probably due to so much refined on hand.

SYRUP AND MOLASSES—There is no feature of any interest in this market.

TEA—The latest cable advices state that prices on Orange Pekoes are firm with an advance expected. The first sale of Indian teas according to Thompson's circular was held on Wednesday, June 9th, when good qualities realized extreme rates. Medium grades were in steady demand but commons neglected. Samples of Indians are expected in Toronto in the course of a week or ten days.

COFFEE—The coffee market is not so brisk as it was. Arnold, Dorr & Co., New York, in their despatch on the situation on June 19th, state that it has eased off in the absence of continued support by the bull interests, some 30 points on the spot position and five to ten points on the balance. Receipts at the primary ports are beginning to show a decided increase but stocks are so small that business of any magnitude has been impossible. There is practically no possibility for a duty, the despatch says.

DRIED FRUITS—Trade in these lines is quiet. Retailers very wisely are all trying to work off what stocks they have on hand, before the green fruit comes in, and in consequence of this, the demand is very light. The stocks, however, are pretty well sold out and on the whole there is nothing to complain about.

NUTS—To write about nuts with the temperature and humidity such as we experienced this week, and at this season of the year, is like getting ready for something and you don't know what. The Best Tea Blend

The Glasgow Grocers' Association is one of the largest and most influential grocers' associations in Great Britain, where the grocers' associations are a power in the trade.

The London, (Eng.) correspondent of The Tea and Coffee Trade Journal (The Blue Book of the Trade) said in the May number:

> "In a lecture delivered for the Grocers' Association at Glasgow, recently on "Tea" the lecturer, whose name I have forgotten at the moment, gave it as his verdict that of all sorts of blends and mixtures a blend of good Ceylon and Indian tea without any China included made the finest beverage. China tea had less tannin but also less theine than Indian tea and the best tea was that which contained the minimum of tannin and the maximum of theine. He therefore held that by infusing Indian tea a very few moments all the theine was retained, and very little of the tannin along with it."

Every grocer in Canada knows that Red Rose Tea is a blend of high quality Indian and Ceylon teas, and every grocer who makes Red Rose his leading package tea, and pushes it, knows by his increased trade and the increasing number of customers who are pleased with their tea, that Red Rose Tea makes "the finest beverage."

The remarkable success of Red Rose Tea is ample proof of the superiority of a blend of Indian with Ceylon teas.

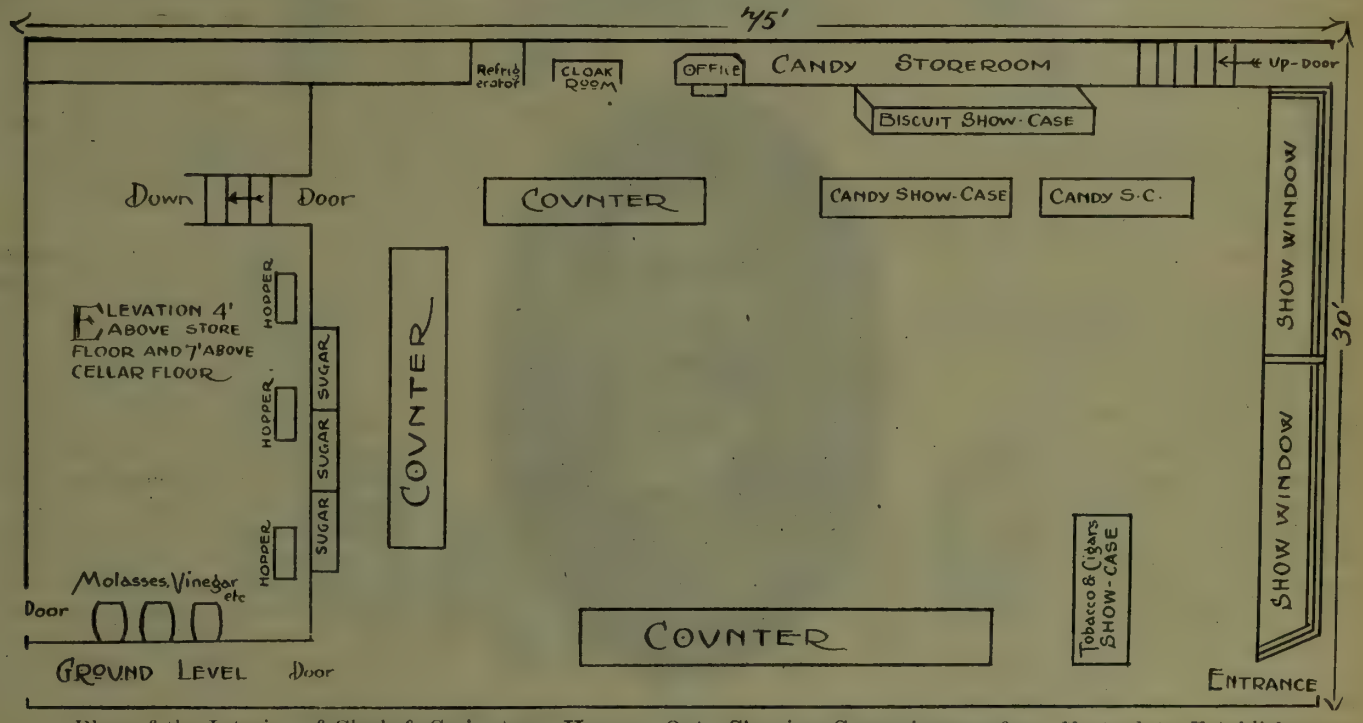
Elevated Storeroom Banishes Heavy Lifting

Modern Convenience Originated By An Essex County Grocer—Hoppers For Sugar Another Feature—Short Stairway To Cellar—Confectionery, Tobacco and Cigars Carried.

Some new ideas in store architecture have been hit upon by a retail grocery firm in Harrow, Essex County, Ontario, which are worthy of attention. The store is that of Clark & Co., and their plans were adopted only after careful consideration of the requirements and convenience of a modern grocery. The interior has been arranged with the idea of presenting their goods in the best possible manner but the feature of it is the convenienves provided.

Heavy lifting is practically unknown in the Clark store as will be observed from the plan illustrated on this page. The floor of the storehouse to the rear has been built four feet higher than the floor of the store proper. Four feet is just high enough to permit goods to be rolled off a wagon backed up to the rear. Sugar, salt, vinegar, coal oil, molasses, etc., are all brought in this way and easily placed in their special places.



Hopper for Sugars.

Mr. Clark has laid his plans so well that not even sugar has to be handled. The illustration shows three hoppers in the storeroom, which are connected by pipes leading down into three bins in the store. As sugar is sold more comes down through the pipes and replenishes the bins.

This arrangement is considered by the proprietor as one of the most convenient in his store.

Molasses, vinegar and coal oil are handled with equal facility. The barrels are rolled in from the wagon and put in their respective places on the 4-foot elevation above the ground passage leading from the store to the door at the rear. They are arranged so that the taps can be easily turned by a person standing in the passage without mounting the elevation.

The cellar floor, being under the elevated storeroom, is only 3 feet below the store floor. The door leads down from the store so that only a drop of three feet has to be made. As the cellar is also used as a storeroom little energy is wasted in coming up such a short flight of stairs.

Plan of the Interior of Clark & Co.'s store, Harrow, Ont., Showing Conveniences of an Up-to-date Establishment.

Interior Equipment.

The Clark store is a model so far as equipment is concerned as storeroom conveiences.

Silent salesmen are used for tobacco and cigars and confectionery, in both of which a considerable business is done. A candy-storeroom is located beneath the stairway leading to the second storey. A partition the entire length of the building separates the stairway from the store. In this will be noticed the office in an archway with a desk in the centre. Further down is a cloak and wash room and next to it the refrigerator. The biscuit case is made of bevelled plate glass and displays the goods to the best advantage.

The show window extends along the entire front with the exception of the entrance door. Prisms are used to diffuse the light through the interior. The store front itself is of cement block and presents an attrative appearance.

The building is a three storey one, 75 feet by 30 feet in dimensions.

APPRECIATES THE PAMPHLET.

The Grocer is in receipt of the following letter from a wholesale firm referring to the pamphlets recently sent out to Canadian wholesalers regarding the Secret Commissions Act :

Editor Canadian Grocer,—We beg to acknowledge your letter of June 10th, subject : "The Secret Commissions Act," and have received under separate cover a number of copies of the pamphlet referred to, all of which we appreciate very much. We have given copies to all our travelers, and are distributing the extra copies among the trade. We feel that the trade, travelers, wholesalers, and retailers, should all be indebted to you for giving publicity to this new Criminal Act. While we think it is a matter that the Government should attend to, (as we do not think it right for a Government to pass criminal laws and then not let anybody know what those laws are) you are to be commended for taking this matter up so that merchants and salesmen generally will be familiar with the new regulation.

CIDER THAT WAS PURE.

Some time ago a despatch from Ottawa was received by The Grocer dealing in a general way with the report issued by the Government analyst on the cider industry. This pointed out that generally speaking the industry was not in a healthy condition so far as quality was concerned. The Annapolis Valley Cider Co., of Bridgetown, N.S., writes requesting The Grocer to quote from the government report on their special brand believing that what was published had been an injustice to them. The analyst's report shows that their cider was the pure product and this the Grocer is pleased to state.

Retail Merchants Adopt Many New Resolutions

Annual Convention of Ontario Board at Brockville—Secret Commissions' Act Endorsed—Government's Action Re School Book Contract Not Relished—Co-operative Stores and Peddling Acts Discussed—Next Convention at Kingston.

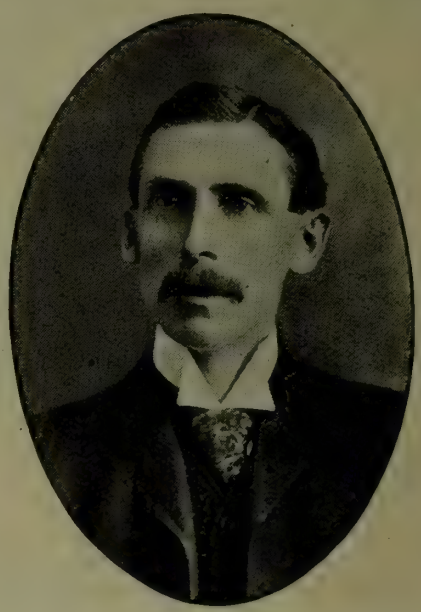
Brockville June 21—The Ontario Provincial Board of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada held its tenth Annual convention here last Wednesday and Thursday. President B. W. Ziemann, of Preston, occupied the chair. On motion of A. Anderson, Toronto, the rules of the constitution were suspended and J. A. Beaudry and J. G. Watson, Montreal, were admitted to act as ex-officio members on the several committees. The Secretary then read communications from a number of delegates regretting their inability to be present.

The Kingston delegates at once made a bid to have the convention held in the Limestone City next year. As the delegates had not all arrived the motion was withdrawn and the matter referred to a later date of the session. After the different committees were appointed and the usual greetings extended the meeting adjourned to meet at 8 o'clock in the evening.

At 8 o'clock, the president took the chair and invited Mayor Kyle to the platform. His Worship addressed the convention as follows:—

Mr. President and Gentlemen:

The citizens of Brockville have been looking forward to this meeting with interest for some months and as their representative, I appear on their behalf and in their name to bid you welcome. This meeting of the representatives of the retail trade brings together a number of men who are in close touch with the growing population of Canada, and produces an exchange of thought and knowledge on many questions, and is calculated to promote harmony and co-operation. It is only by the development of this spirit that Canada can be made great, prosperous and happy, and the difficult problems of the future rightly solved. We feel that the holding of this meeting here, confers an honor on Brockville. This we fully appreciate and in return extend our good wishes and hospitality. We trust that this association may increase in usefulness and in its influence for good.



Chas. Geen, of Belleville, made a suitable reply.

P. McLaren, President of the Board of Trade, in part said that he considered it an honor to address the delegates from the different parts of the province who were there to consider with each other trade problems for the betterment of the trade and the public in general. He hoped that their deliberations would create greater enthusiasm among the merchants all over the province.

"No doubt before you leave," he said "We shall get some good from you, and you may also take something away from here which will be of value to you. In meeting together with the aims and objects you have in view, must help to encourage one another, and you will go back to your homes better and stronger men to fill the various positions you occupy in life. I extend to you again a hearty welcome."

Mr. Steacy, Kingston, responded and referred to the strength merchants have by united effort, for good.

The President in an address referred to the important work of the association.

W. H. KYLE, MAYOR OF BROCKVILLE.

Who Welcomed the Visitors to the Retail Merchants' Convention.

Those who study trade conditions must see from day to day the absolute necessity of being united, in order to retain in tact the commercial system which alone can give the needed service to the entire community.

He regretted the fact that too many retail men do not look beyond their own self-interests and therefore do not understand the dangers which are threatening business.

"If all understood it as some of us do, we could not get a hall large enough to hold our convention."

Mr. Watson, of Montreal, President of the Dominion Board of the Association, spoke encouragingly of the work, and referred to some of the results which had been accomplished. He stated that in Montreal the retail merchants through the Association—the grocers' section alone—saved over $25,000.00 and in the City of Quebec about $15,000.00 in rebates after they had been overcharged.

Besides this, they had also caused the peddling license to be raised to $200.00 in Montreal city and to $100.00 in the country.

Endorses Secret Commissions' Act.

J. A. Beaudry, Montreal, the Dominion treasurer, gave his endorsation of the recently passed Secret Commissions' Act which was made public among the trade for the first time by The Canadian Grocer and which makes it a criminal offence for any employee, traveler or agent to give a secret rebate or bribe to obtain the business of any purchaser.

He had confidence in the working together of all classes of retail merchants under one association and in which each section of the trade hold their own meetings and yet have united support.

The reports of the committees resulted in the adoption of the following resolution:

That the month of June is the most suitable to hold the convention, and that no change be made.

That it is unfair to the retailer to be charged cartage at both ends of shipments of goods, and a committee be appointed to look into the matter.

That the constitution and by-laws be amended so as to give power to any branch to arrange the membership fees according to their needs.

That the action of the Government in awarding the contract for publishing the school books to the T. Eaton Co., which in our opinion was secured for advertising purposes, is in our opinion to be deplored, therefore we as fair dealing merchants strongly condemn such action and recommend that a strong committee be appointed to interview the Government on the matter.

That whenever a commission of enquiry to report on any question, is appointed, the government should make the selections from practical men rather than political favorites.

That the Criminal Act should be so amended, that when a prosecution takes place under the name of a trade mark, the said infringement shall be punishable the same as though it was recorded by the firm.

That inasmuch as the Dominion Government have deemed it wise to create a department of labor and have appointed a minister of labor, we therefore urge very vigorously upon the government the necessity of appointing a Board of Commerce similar to that of the Board of Railway Commissioners.

That we protest against the manner in which the Embalmers Bill was thrown out by the Ontario Government, and that it should be brought to their notice again with a strong request to have it passed.

That we place ourselves on record as being strongly opposed to any combination of merchants who unite together in such a manner as to take away from one another the right of individual action.

That the time has come when Ontario should be divided into various districts, and capable men be placed in each district to look after our organization work.

That inasmuch as the trade in smaller cities and towns is suffering through the encroachments of department stores and that the wholesale trade as well is injured, we therefore authorize our executive officials to take such action with the wholesale men and manufacturers to control the said evil as may be deemed proper.

SENATOR DAN DERBYSHIRE,

A Loyal Brockville Business Man Who Was Present at the Convention.

That inasmuch as we have repeatedly called the attention of the Ontario Government to the present unsatisfactory condition of the Peddlers and Transient Traders' Act, and they have made no effort to improve the same, that we make a vigorous protest against the present Act, and press for a change.

That we again urge upon the Dominion Government the necessity of amending the criminal code so as to give us the same rights and privileges now enjoyed by the working men.

That this association strongly supports the idea of all retail merchants being united in one association in order to be better prepared to defend the entire retail trade against unhealthy encroachments, and while we have no objections for any trade lines to have separate organization, we certainly think they are not, on that account, justified to withhold their support from the general association.

That in order to create greater interest in the work, we strongly recommend that all branches should send delegates to the annual convention and provide funds for their expenses.

That the convention places itself on record as being strongly in favor of the Act which has been recently passed by the Dominion Government, which makes the acceptance of a bribe or secret rebate a criminal offence and that a copy of this resolution favoring the Act be forwarded to the Premier, Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Secretary's Report.

Secretary E. M. Trowern's report dealt with the importance of the work, and also with what had been accomplished. Among other things the defeat of the co-operative Bill stood out as a victory gained of immeasureable value to the trade. Had this not been accomplished it is altogether likely that promoters would be in almost every town disturbing the trade, causing discontent through false representations and organizing co-operative stores.

While its defeat was accomplished he thought it might be stated that there was too much in the scheme for promoters to drop it at the first defeat, and that it required the constant vigilance of the retail merchants to guard against such deceptive methods to interfere with legitimate trade.

This year, after failing in Ottawa last year, the same men had tried to rush practically the same bill through the Ontario Legislature during the last three days of its session. This came to the ears of the secretary on a Friday and before the bill came up for its third reading the following Tuesday, every member in the house was flooded with telegrams from members in answer to the notice sent out from the secretary's office. The bill was so completely changed said the report, that practically nothing was left to mean anything.

"It should be remembered," went on the report, "by every retailer that the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada is looking after his interests and no one, no business man, should expect this without contributing his small share to keep up this work."

The treasurer's report showed that owing through an insufficient staff of organizers and collectors, or for want of a better system of collecting, the funds on hand were not sufficient to meet all the expenses which were necessary in connection with the work. To overcome this, and put the association on a good financial footing a finance committee was appointed to devise ways and means for this year's work. A practical plan is expected to be soon laid before the members and retailers in general which will appeal to them all as fair and to which every retailer will respond.

A friendly but determined fight between the Kingston and Peterborough delegates for next year's convention resulted in favor of Kingston.

The election of officers then took place which resulted as follows:—

President, B. W. Ziemann, tailor, re-elected, Preston; 1st Vice C. W. Kelly, musical instruments, Guelph; 2nd Vice-President, A. M. Patterson, dry goods merchant, Brockville; Treasurer, M. Moyer, Toronto; Secretary, E. M. Trowern, Toronto; Auditor, R. W. Dockery, milk dealer, Toronto.

Delegates to the Dominion Board, B. W. Ziemann, A. L. Geen, A. M. Patterson, M. Moyer and E. M. Trowern.

A Pleasant Outing.

The delegates were much pleased with the manner in which the members of the Brockville branch entertained the visiting delegates. A trip in carriages to the principal buildings of the town was provided and then the never-to-be-forgotten voyage on the magnificent little "Magedoma," through the world-famed Thousand Islands. This yacht is owned by Mrs. (Senator) Fulford, and she kindly placed it at the disposal of the convention.

Re-elected President of the Association.

The Kingston delegates assured the members that they will do their best to equal, if not outdo, the Brockville merchants next year, and they ask the retail merchants all over the province to begin to prepare now, and make Kingston the largest convention of merchants ever held in the province.

GENERAL DELIVERY.

The grocers of Kincardine, Ont., are making arrangements for a general grocery delivery system. Deliveries will be made at stated hours, similar to what is being done in St. Mary's, Ont.

Produce and Provision Situation of the World

Hog Situation Still Acute and Prices are Firmer — A Poor Time for Farmers to Kill Their Own Hogs—Hot Weather Deteriorates Eggs Not in Cold Storage.

Although the price of dressed hogs is still quoted, there should be no dressed hogs offered by the farmers. To keep the reputation of our cured meats, hogs must be handled scientifically. During this hot weather farmers have no means of cooling, and the animal heat remains in the meat, and at once has an injurious effect. For this reason all hogs should be sold alive and killed at the properly equipped packing houses where they are thoroughly cooled before they are put through the curing process. It is the advent of the cooling and freezing facilities with which the packing houses are equipped, which makes it possible to handle hogs during the heat of the summer months. For the splendid facilities provided by the dealers, for taking care of all kinds of farm products, they deserve great credit, which is insufficiently appreciated by the farmers who derive the most benefit through them.

Both butter and eggs are at once placed in the different departments of the cold storage room where they are kept at the proper temperatures in perfect safety. All the eggs before they go into cold storage are carefully candled, and only those which are perfect are allowed to go in. Of the balance some go for cooking purposes and altogether too large a percentage has to go to the "dumps." Here is a matter that should be looked after. Farmers have no more right to sell rotten eggs than any one has a right to adulterate goods and it might be a good idea to have such action come under the Adulteration Act and punished accordingly.

MONTREAL.

PROVISIONS—Pure lard is in very good demand, but is quite scarce, and prices are noticeably firm. Owing to the scarcity of hogs all the manufactured products of this animal are scarce and high. Owing to the approach of the summer season demand for all kinds of smoked meats is most satisfactory.

BUTTER—Receipts of late have been very heavy, no less than 2,100 packages being received on one market last week, Cowansville. All this butter is being absorbed, most of it going into cold storage for present prices are too high for export trade. The fact that all butter has been taken up has resulted in the market ruling firm right along. It will be seen that quotations are higher this week.

PROVISIONS—Last week it was mentioned that the slight drop in hogs two weeks ago had recovered, but this week, the price soared again higher than the highest point yet reached. Hogs are now selling f.o.b. at country points at $7.90 per hundred live weight. While dressed hogs are quoted at $11 to $11.25, very few farmers will get this on account of the condition they are in when they arrive.

SIBERIA BUTTER CROWDING ON ENGLISH MARKET.

From time to time, The Grocer has pointed out the necessity of keeping a sharp eye on Siberia, because it has been shown that she is more than likely to prove the most formidable competitor which Canada will have in the European markets. Recent cables from London state that the Siberian new make arriving there, is excellent in quality. This is due to the introduction of Western machinery and methods.

Those who have visited the dairying districts of Siberia, state that there is a spirit of enterprise noticeable which does not characterize other parts of the Russian Empire. Siberia's vast steppes inspire in people that same indefinable something, which savours of largeness and progress, as do the rolling prairies of our own West.

Possibilities of the West.

The Department of Trade and Commerce has an article in a recent issue of the Weekly Report dealing with the Siberian butter idustry and the possibilities of the country lying around Edmonton for the same purpose. The article is comparative, and the result of this comparison is favorable to Canada, it is stated on account of an advantage of latitude.

This, however, is an unsafe assumption. Two countries may be in the same latitude and their climates as different as though hundreds of miles separated these lines. Countries are the victims of environment not of latitudes.

Supplying Great Britain.

"The Russian peasant, from Siberia, is beginning to supply the market of Great Britain with dairy produce. His advent upon the market has been comparatively recent, yet the statistics showing his progress will be material for the consideration of those interested in the Canadian west. The information is taken from a lengthy report by H. Cooke, special commissioner for the British Board of Trade in 1905, supplemented by later figures.

"The butter-making industry of Western Siberia is one of the first direct results of the construction of the railway, and from the point of view of the general well being of the peasant population, the most promising outcome of the changed conditions now prevailing. It is at present the main resource of the inhabitants of the entire region.

"The progress made has indeed been wonderful. Previous to 1893 no butter was produced in Siberia for export abroad. The first to engage in butter-making under modern methods was an English woman, married to a Russian, whose dairy farm at Chernaia, Reitchka, in the district of Tiumen, was in 1885, the only one in Siberia, and is still a well known model of its kind. The initial difficulties encountered, she told me, were extremely depressing. No experienced hands were to be found, the peasants did not understand that cows had to be properly fed or attended to, the distances were enormous and communications were non-existent or primitive, while the people in general, with the exception of the few who could afford to order supplies by the then communications from Moscow, had but faint ideas as to the difference between cheese and butter, and how they were to be eaten. The first separator—the first in Siberia—was purchased in 1887 from Sweden. Common peasant cows, small and yielding little milk, were utilized at first, and the breed gradually improved by the introduction of Simmental cattle. The farm now has 180 head of its own rearing.

"In 1893, Mr. Wolkoff, a Russian, opened near Kourgan the first dairy producing butter for export beyond the Urals. Some 400 pouds (14,400 pounds) were exported in 1894.

"Fifteen years have passed since the establishment of the first dairy in Siberia, and butter-making has become the staple industry of the country as regards national trade and home resource. Indeed the peasants believe that were it not for the dairy they would have perished in the recent hard times. In 1903 over 2,000 dairies were scattered through Western Siberia, exporting 2,185,000 pouds, or 78,994,720 pounds.

Why Not In Canada?

Turning, therefore, to Canada the inference must be apparent. If such developments have been achieved in Siberia, much more then should the resources of the Canadian Northwest, as yet scarcely realized, be productive of surpassing results. That both districts are in the same latitude does not in itself ensure identical climatic conditions. Latitude, as was shown before a private committee of the House last year, does not govern climate. Evidence was laid before the members of this committee, inquiring into the agricultural possibilities of the north, indicating conclusively that vegetables have been grown within fourteen miles of the Arctic circle, that wheat has been harvested just short of latitude 62, averaging 64 pounds to the bushel, and at Fort Vermilion was a flour mill, electrically equipped turning out 35 barrels per day. Numerous other statements were presented to corroborat that there was a vast area extending north suitable for cultivation. The winters may be colder, but the summers, shorter though they may be, from June 1 to August 20, have the same temperature as Ottawa. And as has been pithily remarked 'Things don't grow in winter.' The mere fact that in the northern part of Siberia are towns of 1,000 and more, indicate that some industry must be carried on to support them. As regards dairying there is no question that in the north are grasses of the greatest possible value for cattle grazing, far surpassing those of the Northwest.

"The first dairy for the manufacture of butter for export abroad was opened in 1893. By 1902 the number of Siberian dairies amounted to over 2,000. They are termed in Russian "zavodi," or "works." They have, indeed, little in common with the ordinary conception of the word dairy, or of its accompaniments and surroundings, as understood in western Europe. Hurried up and hastily equipped in the first flush of the movement, both suitable and unsuitable tenements were adapted to the purpose, with a total lack of technical knowledge and experience on the part of the villagers, and it is only lately that the stress of competition, backed by the endeavors of the authorities and the special instructors, has begun to work some improvement in the general conditions of production. The dairies in general are either the property of individual owners or of two or three combined, who buy milk from the peasants around, or else they belong either to artels or to entire village societies, both of which supply the milk from their own cows. The artelni dairy is defined as 'one created by several peasants who distribute the proceeds in proportion to the amount of milk provided.'

Co-operation Will Follow.

A movement, encouraged by the authorities, has gradually established co-operative dairies, for villages or entire hamlets throughout. In the Kourgan region almost the entire production of butter is now in the hands of co-operative dairies. It would seem more than probable that the whole Siberian butter industry will eventually assume this village co-operative form of production.

Competition To Be Overcome.

It will be observed from this report, that these people have injected into this industry those essentials which mean a far reaching success, and Canada will have to awaken to the dangers of Siberian competition. While the advantages of a stable government and the security to trade which this insures are favorable to Canada, it must not be forgotten that the cost of labor in Siberia is infinitely less than in Canada. This is a great advantage for Siberia which Canada will be obliged to overcome.

EARLIER INFORMATION.

Trade and Commerce Department Making New Arrangements For Publication of Reports.

A statement has been issued by the Deppartment of Trade and Commerce to the effect that statistics, weekly reports, etc., will be issued earlier for the benefit of business men. The statement is as follows:

The Department of Trade and Commerce believes that the value of trade statistics lies mainly in the rapidity with which they are made available to the general public. For several years past every effort has been made to reduce the time required for publishing the reports issued by this department. So far as the Weekly Report is concerned, this report now is laid regularly on the desk of every business man who desires it from Victoria to Halifax within 12 to 14 days of the date the Trade Commissioner's report is received at the Department. No further improvement over this can reasonably be expected.

With respect to the Annual Report, every possible improvement has been adopted with the same end in view, but while the time has been considerably reduced it is still several months after the close of the fiscal year before the annual is finally published. The Department therefore has decided upon a very radical move. Commencing with the Annual Report for the fiscal year ended March 31st, 1909, the report will be issued in seven parts.

In this way the more important features of the trade statistics of Canada will not have to be held back until the completion of other statistics, which, while important for the purpose of record, are not of very general importance to the practical business man. In this way the Department hopes to present the principal details of the trade of Canada in three months' shorter time.

The new system has other advantages. It enhances the value of the statistics thereby increasing the usefulness of the Department. In publishing the report in several parts the Department will be able to forward a correspondent only that part in which he is especially interested instead of sending a book weighing more than 3 pounds, containing a mass of other statistics in which he has perhaps absolutely no interest. Again, the cost of production will be materially decreased as very small editions of the less important parts need be published to meet the demand.

ANNUAL OUTING OF SNACK CLUB

Great preparations for the event to take place at Erin on July 30th and 31st.

With all the pleasure that accompanies the anticipation of the best holidays of the year, the drummers are looking forward to the great and only Drummers' Snack Club concert and field day of 1909. These events are scheduled to take place this year at Erin, Ont., on July 30th and 31st and elaborate are these preparations under way.

"We expect to have anywhere from 2,000 to 5,000 people there," remarked R. M. Asher the president, "and the event will be the best on record."

The concert will come off on Friday night and while this is a treat seldom equalled in any theatre even in the larger cities, the real fun begins on Saturday morning. There will be the annual ball game between the Hamilton and Toronto drummers for the P. W. Ellis cup. Then there will be the indoor-outdoor games and in the afternoon the exciting horse races. The snack will be held at Stanley Park.

Erin has been selected only after a good deal of consideration and it is represented as one of western Ontario's best beauty spots. Mr. Asher, who, by the way, is the youngest president the club has ever had, has everything in working order and committees have all been appointed. Robt. Algie is the general secretary. M. R. Hill, of Hamilton, the vice-president, J. Wildfong, the Toronto secretary and Geo. Smye, the Hamilton secretary.

For 18 years the outing has been held and strange to say there has never been a rainy day. The Club, of course, hope for and expect similar ideal weather conditions as in days gone by.

The Quality of Christie's Biscuits and what it means to you—

IN buying goods there are three cardinal points that you consider carefully. They are:

1. How quickly can I turn these goods over and get my money out of them?

2. Are they the best that I can buy?

3. Do I get a fair margin of profit?

The merit of the goods very properly takes precedence over the matter of price, although, of course, the latter is important.

However, quality has more to do with profits than some merchants think.

Fundimentally, quality determines the success of any article, just as the success of every merchant depends upon the quality of the goods he handles.

Christie's Biscuits measure up to the very highest quality standard. There is no acceptable substitute for them on the market. Therefore, Christie's Biscuits are as staple as sugar and salt in the grocery stores that cater to particular trade.

The thousands of merchants, from ocean to ocean, who push Christie's in preference to all other brands of biscuits have come to realize, through experience, just what Christie Quality means to them.

These merchants have proved that Christie's give them a larger turn-over, and greater aggregate profit in their biscuit departments; also that they build up the paying trade and hold it.

They have proved, too, that Christie's Biscuits sell more than biscuits.

Flour, Cereals and Confectionery Department

No Material Changes in Prices Since Last Week—Wheat and Oat Markets Carefully Watched by Millers — Cereal Goods Should be Kept Free From Vermin.

This is the time of the year when a good many articles kept in a grocery require special care and attention. Among those are flour and cereals of all kinds. Nothing is more disgusting than to find vermin in these goods when they are opened to be used and nothing is surer to drive a customer to another store. Even if the packages are sealed and free from insects they become stale during the hot weather. Very often customers break away from using certain cereals and imagine that they get tired of them when, the fact is, that the goods are stale, and not palatable.

It never pays to sell stale goods and in order to avoid loss, the best thing to do is to clean out everything you have on hand and then buy from week to week what you require. To buy perishable goods right is very often the secret of success.

Sometimes you find grocers who have nothing attractive about them, but they do a good business and the secret is, they know how to buy. Every grocer should understand how to make himself agreeable to his customers. But it does not matter how amiable he can be, if he does not know how to buy and how to keep his stock to enable him to give the best goods to his customers he will not succeed.

Take a look at your cereals. See what you have in stock and in what condition they are, and if they are not in a perfect condition feed them to the delivery horse and start afresh.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR—Advanced figures which some parties were asking last week were found to be so high that buyers would not come into the market, so this week old prices prevail, but business has not improved materially. Of export trade there is practically nil. Millers believe that present prices will hold, without doubt, as stocks of flour are not large and the world's supply of wheat is not great. Even after the new wheat is milled there will be the usual demand of certain proportion for flour milled from the old wheat, so firmness is very likely to characterize the market for some time.

FLOUR—The general opinion of the best authorities on the grain situation is that the highest prices have been reached. Wheat is firm at $1.40 and oats 62c. per bushel. Millers buy cautiously and only what they must have to keep their customers supplied. All are watching the new crop, and even the change of the wind seems to cause the market to flutter. The prospects are all that could be wished for, and on account of the high prices new wheat will be rushed out as soon as possible. Some predict that new wheat will be on the market this year during the last days of July. Oats seem to be cornered but to hold too long is dangerous, so that quantities may soon be put on the market which may have the effect of lowering the prices. Winnipeg is to-day 3 cents up, but it may be down to-morrow. On the whole there is no change since last week.

Good-will From Quality in Goods and in Service

St. John, N.B. Tea Merchant Believes These To Be Necessary Qualifications In Building Up The Good-Will Of a Business —What Efficient Service Means.

Toronto, June 22.—"I'm glad to see The Canadian Grocer paying so much attention to 'quality' in business," was a statement made by T. H. Estabrooks, St. John, N.B., while here on a business trip last week.

"What I mean," he continued, "is quality in service as well as in goods."

Mr. Estabrooks is an ardent admirer of the business man who interests himself in building up the good will of his business. He believes it to be the only proper method for him to pursue and maintains that the lack of quality in store, goods and service has been the stumbling block over which many a retail merchant has fallen.

"If a man attempts to sell at low prices he must buy inferior goods and the only means he has to make a living is to sell his goods at a low price.

"You cannot do a better thing," he said speaking to The Canadian Grocer, "than educate business men on quality."

He pointed out that many of the grocers now-a-days were mechanics and farmers who have not a great deal of experience in business methods. They were always eager to learn something that would tend to strengthen their methods and quality was one of the lessons that should at all times be impressed upon them. If a grocer sells butter he should sell the best and if he employs clerks he should employ the best.

This, explained Mr. Estabrooks, is what builds up a good-will in a business.

Value of a Good-Will.

"I was recently asked what I considered the good-will of a certain business to be worth. I knew how the business had been conducted and I said it wasn't worth a cent."

The intending purchaser was somewhat surprised but he took the advice for which he was not sorry. It was a business that had been carried on along cheap lines and a successor could not sell at a fair profit and hold the custom. Enough attention had not been paid to quality. This had been the mistake of this merchant. While he may have done a fair business in one sense by reason of offering cheap goods, the good-will was worth little when the sale of his business was proposed.

Quality in goods, service and store equipment are essentials to success and for the reason that they build up the good-will of a business by commanding attention and respect from all purchasers.

A FRANCO-CANADIAN TREATY.

President of Chambre de Commerce Francaise Explains France's Position.

Montreal, June 23.—"Sentiment in France is quite in favor of the commercial treaty with Canada," said M. Chevalier, president of the Chambre de Commerce Francaise, who has just returned from a trip to Paris, and other French centres.

"What appears to be retarding definite action," he continued, "is the uncertainty which prevails in France as to the stand Canada would take were the former country to go ahead and finally approve of the treaty. If France accepted the treaty and Canada did not immediately ratify it the pride of the nation would suffer. and many who are now lukewarm in their support of the measure would quickly do all in their power to bring it to a head were they given definite assurance that acceptance of the treaty would be mutual.

"As a matter of fact should not Canada make the advances? Consider our amount of importations from France every year—ten millions of dollars worth of goods. Then compare what France imports from us—merchandise to the value of but two millions of dollars.

"But I hardly think this is the light in which the people of France are looking at the matter. The treaty would be of mutual benefit and I am sure that definite action will be taken when the Chamber of Deputies meets again, after the holidays in October, and when our Canadian Parliament also gets down to business again.

"Hon. Mr. Fielding is at present in France, and any little matters about which doubt exists can be profitably discussed so as to allow each Government to know just how it stands with the other when the time comes for action."

Flour Cleanliness

I. The Dirt in the Crease is Removed.

DID YOU ever, Mr. Junior Partner, closely examine a grain of wheat, the plump, hard Manitoba berry? Surely you have noticed how the skin of the wheat grain seems to fold over on itself with a pronounced crease right in the middle of the berry.

¶ Now, it's our sore spot, that innocent looking "fold in." It's the source of much worry and expense to the makers of FIVE ROSES flour. You see, all kinds of dirt and dust consider it a happy hunting ground and acquire the unholy faculty of getting deeply embedded in that self-same pesky crease, stubbornly refusing to be ousted by all ordinary means.

¶ To beat out "Mr. Crease" we have installed at the Keewatin mills exclusive processes, complicated machinery. It means extensive cleaning, expensive cleaning. It also means the absolute removal of the most infinitesimal suspicion of dirt concealed in the aforesaid crease as well as that attached to any other part of the wheat berry.

¶ Some makers, either because they can't, or because they do not want to, are not so particular. They naturally sell their flour much cheaper—but it is not FIVE ROSES, not by any means.

¶ Authorities who ought to know say that the freedom of a flour from "crease dirt" increases with its purity and whiteness.

¶ Don't you think it would be a good plan to tell your customers why FIVE ROSES is a clean, wholesome flour? A flour made from the cream of Manitoba wheat minus any kind of dirt or smut usually traceable in ordinary flour? It's because they don't know the vital difference that some people buy "bargain counter" flour. Since you know—why not tell them?

Up-to-Date Business Grocers in Brockville

Various Methods Used Which Have Brought Good Results—Attention Paid to Quality Goods and Courteous Service—The Canadaian Grocer Read With Interest.

(Staff Correspondence.)

Brockville, June 22.—To say anything about Brockville and not begin with Senator "Dan." Derbyshire would be commencing in the wrong way. For many years, as is well known all over the Dominion, he has always been a leading figure at dairy conventions. His friendly address at the Retail Merchants Convention, his kindly welcome, and his trip with the "boys" on the beautiful "Magedoma," was highly appreciated. Even with the interests he has in Ottawa, which entitles him to his honorary title he still thinks Brockville is the best town in the world.

The H. T. Murray Co. are among the leading grocers in the town. Mr. Murray, Sr., is a public spirited man and takes an active interest in all efforts to elevate the standard of retailing. Four years ago the business assumed its present name. The firm is doing a large farmers' trade, and at the same time gets a liberal share of the town and tourist trade.

A. E. Shaver is another of Brockville's up-to-date grocers. He reads The Canadian Grocer, and is constantly after new ideas. He served his apprenticeship in Brockville and then he did voluntarily, what a man has to do in Germany before he is allowed to go into business. He went "auf die Wanderschaft" for several years in the United States. He is therefore well prepared to give excellent service to his customers.

Allan Cameron has put in 27 years behind the counter and therefore is authority on everything that belongs to the trade. If a man can serve the public for that length of time and can hold his share of the trade, he is doing more than the ordinary man, and dererves credit.

C. J. Delany, manager of Mrs. McHenry's store, has also a strong hold on the trade. He sells good goods and strong goods which are all guaranteed to give satisfaction. By keeping the right kind of goods and through his genial habits, he draws a large trade from the "Thousand Island" tourist. His smile is always ready to great the customer and the stranger.

Allan Soper keeps a nice store, handles mostly imported goods, and caters to the high class trade.

Thomas Nappy is one of the most contented and happy grocers in Brockville. His place of business is some distance away from the centre of the town, in a good locality, where he almost monoplizes the entire trade. Everything is in "apple-pie" order, spotlessly clean and in the right place. While he attends closely to his business he is by no means a slave to it. He pays a great deal of attention to the comforts of his home. Like all up-to-the-minute grocers, he regularly reads The Canadian Grocer, for which, as he says he longs every week, and would not think for a moment to be without it.

J. Culbert is the veteran merchant in the town, but begins to feel after a continuous business life of 43 years, that he is not quite as active as he was when he defeated "Dan" Derbyshire in the race for the House of Commons. He was also mayor of the town for three years.

GUM MERGER IN SIGHT.

A movement is on foot tending to the merger of some United States and Canadian gum manufacturers. The new concern, providing the merger goes through, will be known as the Sen-Sen Chiclet Co., with a capital of $6,700,000. The companies said to be interested are:—T. B. Dunn & Co. Rochester, N.Y.; Fleer & Co., Philadelphia; Somerville & Co., London, Canada; Curtis & Sons Co., Portland, Maine, and the S. Grove Co., Salem, Maine.

As regards the management of the new concern, it is understood that Thomas B. Dunn will probably become its president. and that Frank H. Fleer, of Philadelphia will be selected as chairman of the Board of Directors.

The Canadian Chicle Co., Toronto, was communicated with in connection with this proposition, but Mr. Fleer was out of the city. It was learned, however, that up to Wednesday the merger had not been completed.

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS. — Dealers continue to feature California deciduous fruits this week. Peaches are easier, but the other lines are selling at last week's prices. Higher prices are anticipated by some holders of lemons. New strawberries are beginning to become plentiful. Quebec's are now arriving, the first lot reaching the city Tuesday. Local grown berries will be coming in more frequently, and in larger supply, every day now, provided the weather continues favorable. California cherries are 25c lower. Late Valencia oranges are scarcer, and higher in price. Florida pineapples have advanced, too. Bananas are selling freely at prices which run about the same.

VEGETABLES.—A flutter of excitement was caused in local vegetable circles at the beginning of the week when it was learned that a vessel bringing 4,500 bags of potatoes from New Brunswick had run aground below Quebec, and was likely to be a total loss. Many dealers had lots of potatoes on board, and anticipated being able to fill orders with such stock. Some vegetable firms have contracts with steamers and institutions, and they anticipated filling requirements from potatoes which should have arrived by the boat in question as per schedule. Every week, up to a certain time, the weekly shipments to Montreal of N.B. potatoes by this boat are an important factor in the market. Locally, this source of supply is reckoned with. As a result of this week's disappointment a noticeable firmness prevailed in the potato market. Local green stuff is expected shortly now, southern cabbage, beans, peas and cucumbers, being nearly done. Horse radish is higher, as is also Montreal asparagus. Recent warm weather was welcomed by the trade, who hope it will continue.

FISH.—A further decline in Gaspe salmon will be noticed this week. These fish are arriving freely, the season being now on in earnest. Mackerel and haddock are also in good supply, but prices of both remain as last week. Large lots of whitefish and pike are being received and sales are satisfactory, considering the warm weather. Receipts of lake trout have not been up to the average of late, but more are now being shipped by fishermen. Good inquiry for brook trout is experienced. Trade in this line has been very good since the season opened, as the fish is very popular with the people. A falling off in the supply may be looked for at any time now. Steak cod, dore and sea bass have all advanced. Warmer weather has caused a falling off in the demand for smoked fish. Boiled lobsters are dearer. The live lobsters are not so plentiful, and higher quotations are expected. Salt sardines are now being quoted, $1 the pail, 20 lbs.

GREEN FRUIT.—Quite a change has taken place in the fruit market this week. The warehouses look somewhat forsaken and the hustle is all at the fruit market. Besides the change of the location, a lot of the imported "American" goods are now crowded out by our own production. Canadian strawberries are "King" in the market just now, and all the forces are directed to give them their best attention. The crop promises to be a good one, and with favorable weather the demand will be abundantly supplied, at prices within reach of all.

A few baskets of early cherries, rather blushingly attracted the attention of buyers, but while they looked lovingly, they were turned the cold shoulder when 60c a small basket was asked for them.

California navel oranges are out of season, but their place is promptly taken by the California late Valencias. This orange is going to be the great favorite during the summer months, and is more extensively cultivated from year to year. The possibility of having oranges all the year round is now assured.

ADVERTISING GROCERIES.

Demand Created if Proper System is Used.

There is one town in Kansas where a combination is said to exist among the grocers not to advertise in the local papers, or in any other way. All the biggest groceries in town are in this combine. They say that people have to buy their groceries anyway, so what's the use of advertising?

That sort of scheme may appeal to those grocers as a very clever move. They evidently are laboring under the impression that they are putting in their pocket all the money that they might otherwise spend in newspapers, thousands of dollars.

It's a great mistake. Advertising of the right kind not only gets business—it makes business.

When grocers enter into a combine not to advertise, they are pursuing a mistaken policy. The result of their silence is merely to limit the purchases of the housekeeper to her absolute needs, and the housekeeper sees to it that her needs follow a certain definite groove. Good advertising creates a demand for new goods. Good advertising places on display before the mental vision of the purchaser the groceries which are offered for sale, and suggests things for the customer to order which would never be thought of were it not for the advertising.

In writing an advertisement, the grocer should have that object in view; to place in review before the customer a suggestive list of interesting things for the culinary department. Such advertising is a source of revenue, not a loss.—Merchants' Journal.

I want to get into touch with some manufacturer or wholesaler with a proposition big enough to warrant the employment of a man to push the sales end of the game.

To such a connection I can bring an equipment of experience and energy backed up by past success. Trained in some of the best of the big organizations in the States—up from a stenographer. Railway, newspaper, road and office experience.

For a perfectly satisfactory reason I am severing my present connection as Sales and Advertising manager with a leading Canadian manufacturer, and want to tie up with a concern where resourcefulness, directed enthusiasm and the ability to show results will be appreciated and remunerated.

Have proven ability as a sales promoter and can handle advertising to trade and public if desired. Capable and diplomatic correspondent.

I am thoroughly equipped to lift the burden of this work from an executive who is anxious to devote more time to other phases of his business, but is laden down with the important detail of the sales department.

Write me fully, with the assurance that confidence will be rigidly guarded.

COMMON SENSE SAYS Use 'em

A man wants credit. If you think he is good give him a $10 Allison Coupon Book. Have him sign the receipt or note form in the front of the book, which you tear out and keep. Charge him with $10—no trouble. When he buys a dime's worth, tear off a ten cent coupon, and so on until the book is used up. Then he pays the $10 and gets another book. No pass books, no charging, no lost time, no errors, no disputes.

ALWAYS RIGHT. SUN PASTE Stove Polish is just right every time you sell it and the boxes are always filled full. You have no complaints coming after you pass it over your counter. Why not make friends for yourself as well as for us by selling the stove polish which always pleases the housekeeper? That's SUN PASTE. Just push it and see them come back for more.

MORSE BROS., Props. - Canton, Mass., U.S.A.

What "The Lancet" says:

"Cobra" Boot Polish has just been analysed by Dr. Ed. Nihaul, Professor of Industrial Chemistry at the University of Liege, and he has recognised that the Polish does not contain lamp-black or any acid substance. This is important so far as the preservation of the leather is concerned, but from the health point of view the Polish does not close up the pores of the leather, so that the feet keep fresh and cool.

—September 6th, 1905.

SHOE POLISH

from the health point of view

"COBRA" Polish instantly commends itself to those who appreciate the difference between health preserving, hygienic shoe dressing which keeps footwear in good condition, and the destructive compounds made of acids, oils, treacle and soot known as "Blacking."

If you are coming to the National Exhibition at the expense of Busy Man's Magazine—and we hope you are—you must hurry in your application and begin your campaign at once.

July 15th is the last date on which you can mail subscriptions, and the time will go very quickly. A great many who started last month have about completed their work, having secured enough new subscriptions to entitle them to the trip. They are coming from Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. Some of the candidates have proven to be very clever canvassers, securing as high at 100 subscriptions. Why should you not win this trip? Probably you are just as clever as they. After deciding to win, the whole point of success depends upon the amount of energy and determination you possess. If you are in the habit of balking at the first discouragement, do not begin, but if you are a regular reader of Busy Man's we believe it has inspired you to carry out your undertaking vigorously.

There are a few weeks left. Send for order book and sample and get to work at once. We will help you in every way possible.

Which Polish Sells the Best?

Ask your wholesaler what shoe polish is most universally called for by retailers and he will tel you every time

2 IN 1

Ask him why and he will inform you that the people like it because it is brilliant, lasting, easy to apply, does not soil the clothes or the hands, and preserves the leather.

WARNING!

Crescent BM&Co. TRADE MARK. Brand

SODA CRYSTALS (WASHING SODA)

Foreign Soda Crystals—and some of English manufacture—are being extensively offered for sale in this country which are grossly adulterated with Glauber-Salts (Sulphate of Soda), a cheap product which is not only entirely useless for washing purposes, but is even likely to injure the fabrics with which it comes in contact. The Adulterated Soda-Crystals, although nominally lower in price than BRUNNER MOND'S PURE SODA CRYSTALS, are in reality much dearer owing to the large quantity of useless and injurious matter which they contain.
